PREFACE.

BIBLICAL Study was greatly stimulated among English-speaking people by the appearance of the Revised Version. Much attention has of late years been directed to the examination of the original Text of the Bible, and to the investigation of the literary character of the various books. Explorations and discoveries in the East are constantly furnishing new matter for Biblical illustration.

The present Volume is intended to supply such information on the Structure and Text of the Bible, and the way in which its composite material was gathered together, as may enable the English reader to understand questions now largely discussed. The papers which deal with these matters are supplemented by an account, written by the Bishop of Durham, of the Sacred Books of Præ-Christian religions, and by a history of the English Bible.

A large space has been devoted to a description of the contents of the several books of both Testaments and of the Apocrypha. In the New Testament special attention is bestowed on the Arguments of the separate Epistles and on, a subject now much discussed, the relations of the Gospels to one another.

The external history of Israel has been drawn into a continuous narrative, and the religious history of the nation is sketched in the development of the Messianic hope. To the history of the Apostolic Age is appended an account of the condition of the Jews Greeks and Romans at that time.

Biblical Chronology has been presented in the traditional form, which appears in the margins of our Bibles, but throughout the History of the Kingdoms, where the Inscriptions furnish trustworthy grounds for modification, such changes as appear warranted have been introduced into the Tables in a separate column.

The Antiquities of the Bible, and the Geology, Climate, Geography, and Natural History of the Holy Land, are treated of in separate articles.

Much care has been bestowed on the Index of Proper Names, in which all the changes made in the Revised Version are recorded. The volume is made complete by a Glossary of Bible Words, an Index of Subjects, and a Concordance of considerable fulness.

An entirely new set of maps has been provided, and in that which illustrates the Travels of St Paul account has been taken of the latest investigations concerning the roads in Asia Minor.

tion and teaching of the Church. The two groups therefore belong to different dispensations, the one leading up to, the other issuing forth from, the central fact of the world's history, "the Word became flesh." In the Incarnation the relation of the two "Testaments" to one another is made clear. A real continuity runs through them. The obvious elements of contrast do not arise from lack of harmony. The Old and New Testaments are not contradictory, they are complementary the one to the other. Augustine's saying, though liable to easy perversion, is in the profoundest sense true: "Novum Testamentum in Vetere latet; Vetus Testamentum in Novo patet."

The contrast between the two Testaments is as conspicuous in a consideration of their range and language as of the distinctive characteristics of their primary religious conceptions. The books of the Old Testament are drawn from a national literature extending over many centuries: they are to a great extent the work of compilation, their present literary condition shows the traces of frequent revision; they are written in the rigid and stately Hebrew idiom, familiar only to a small branch of the Semitic races. The books of the New Testament are drawn from the Christian writings of the single generation of the Apostles: they were written in a flexible Greek dialect intelligible to the whole civilised world. With this contrast in externals we find a corresponding contrast in the general religious attitude. In the Old Testament, God stands in relation to the Universe mainly as the Creator and Sovereign: man is estranged from his Maker by wilful self-assertion: the people of Israel are in particular, although not exclusively, the chosen object of divine mercy. In the New Testament is proclaimed the appearance of "God with us," the reunion of God and Man, and the declaration of the way of salvation to all. God in the Old Testament is predominantly the King, in the New Testament the Father: the Old Testament reveals the need of redemption and contains the covenant of law, the New Testament unfolds the mystery of divine love and makes known the covenant of grace. The Old Testament sets forth the preparatory discipline of the chosen Nation; the New Testament the final revelation in the Divine Person.

An inquiry into the meaning of the word Testament shows that "The Old and New Covenant" would be the more accurate rendering of the Greek words, and that the rendering "Testament" has been due to an error which took root very early in the phraseology of the Church.

The Greek word "diathéké" means in Classical Greek an "arrangement" or "disposition"; hence it very naturally came to be applied to a man's last disposition of his property, a testament or will. In the Septuagint Version "diathéké" was adopted to represent the important and frequent Hebrew word "berith" or "covenant." It is often assumed that the more obvious Greek rendering, "synthéké," conveying the idea of "reciprocity," would have offended the Jewish sense of reverence by assigning too much prominence to the human element in the relation between the chosen people and their God, and that, "diathéké" being preferred, man's assent in the sacred Covenant was practically merged in the prominence given to the divine purpose. In the N. T., "diathéké" is to be found with the meaning "covenant" as the only natural one in every passage, unless, as some think, 11eb. ix. 16, 17 be an exception. Even in Luke xxii. 20 the true significance of the Lord's words is greatly obscured, if the expression fails to suggest the contrast of the Patriarchal and Mosaic covenants (Gen. xvii. 4; Ex. ii. 24, xxiv. 7) with the "new covenant," which the prophet had predicted (Jer. xxxi. 31).

The Jewish Scriptures, which contained the record of the sacred covenant, were frequently called "the book of the covenant" (Ex. xxiv. 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 2, 21; 1 Macc. i. 57; Ecclus. xxiv. 23). St Paul referring to the contents of the Jewish Scriptures speaks of "the reading of the old covenant" (2 Cor. iii. 14). For the sake of brevity it was natural on the part of the Christian Church to speak of the sacred writings of the old and new dispensation as "the old and new covenant." In the beginning of the third century we find in Origen's writings the mention of "the divine Scriptures, the so-called Old and New Covenants" (De Princip. iv. 1).

In the Western Church, Jerome in his Vulgate gave to "berith" the renderings of "foedus" or "pactum" indifferently (cf. Jer. xxxi. 31, "foedus novum, non secundum pactum quod pepigi cum patribus vestris"). Unfortunately, in his version of the New Testament, as also of the Psalms, Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus, where Jerome merely revised the rendering of the Old Latin Version, he permitted the erroneous rendering "testamentum" to remain. The mistake, arising from a confusion of the technical with the Septuagint usage of "diathéké," was never remedied. The words "Vetus" and "Novum Testamentum" being therefore apparently confirmed by the authority of the Latin Version in such passages as 2 Cor. iii. 6, 14, passed into general acceptance with the Western Church.

Another Latin rendering which found favour in this sense is "instrumentum," meaning an authoritative or official document. Tertullian (+220) testifies to its use in Africa, adv. Marc. iv. 1, "alterius instrumenti vel quod magis usui est dicere testamenti."

2. GROUPS OF BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

In our Bibles the arrangement of the books of the Old Testament favours a division into four groups.

i. The Pentateuch, giving the Hebrew cosmogony, the origin of the people of Israel and the foundation of the Israelite constitution.

ii. Historical Books, consisting of
(a) Jos., Jud., Ruth; containing the account of the occupation of Palestine and the history of Israel previous to the Monarchy.

(b) 1 & 2 Sam., 1 & 2 Kings; containing the account of the foundation of the Monarchy, the History of the Northern and Southern Kingdoms to the time of their overthrow; to which is added 1 & 2 Chronicles, covering the same period.

(c) Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther; the first two describing the return from the Captivity under Zerubbabel, Ezra and Nehemiah; to which is added the story of queen Esther, an episode from the records of the Captivity.

iii. Poetical Books. The arrangement of these books follows the chronological order of their reputed authors. Thus the Psalter of David stands between the book of the patriarch Job and the writings of Solomon. The term "poetical" belongs strictly only to Job, Psalms and the Song of Songs. The books "Proverbs" and "Ecclesiastes" cannot strictly be called "Poetical." They belong to the "Sapiential" or "Didactic" class of writing.

iv. Prophetical Books. These are divided into the four Major and the twelve Minor Prophets. (a) The Major Prophets are the four largest books of prophecy arranged in the chronological order of the names which they bear. Strictly speaking, the book Daniel is Apocalypse rather than Prophecy. (b) The order of the twelve Minor Prophets is approximately chronological. The book Jonah differs by its narrative character from the writings with which it is classed.

The arrangement of the books in the MSS. of the Greek and Latin Bibles varies very much. The Apocryphal books are most commonly introduced as follows: Tobit and Judith after Esther, Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus after Song of Songs, Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremy after Lamentations, and 1, 2 Maccabees after Malachi.

The books of our Old Testament are 39 in number. But this figure is considerably in excess of the number of independent writings included in the collection. The subdivision of Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, as well as of the Pentateuch, is artificial. More accurately we should speak of 31 books, or, if Joshua be really inseparable in structure from the Pentateuch, and Chronicles from Ezra-Nehemiah, of 29 books of the O. T.

In the Hebrew Bible the books are divided into the three groups, Law, Prophets, and Writings or Hagiographa. The arrangement of the books within the separate groups has differed from time to time. Modern editions give the traditional (Massoretic) order adopted by the great Jewish Biblical scholars of the Middle Ages, which is reproduced in the following scheme:

(A) The Law or Torah, the five books of the Pentateuch, each receiving its name from its opening word or words.

(B) The Prophets or Nebim.

1. The former Prophets (Nebim rishônim), i.e. the historical writings, Joshua, Judges, 1, 2 Samuel, 1, 2 Kings.

2. The latter Prophets (Nebim akharônim), i.e. the prophetic writings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, 12 Minor Prophets.

(C) The Writings or Hagiographa (Kethubim).

1. Psalms, Proverbs, Job, poetical books, sometimes called "The Former Writings" (Kethubim rishônim).

2. Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, called the Five Megilloth or Rolls.

3. Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, 1, 2 Chronicles,—a miscellaneous subdivision, sometimes called "The Latter Writings" (Kethubim akharônim).

An arrangement of greater antiquity preserved in the Talmud (Baba Bathra, f. 14, c. 2) contains some important variations. (A) Torah: (B) Nebim; Jos., Jud., Sam., Kings, Jerem., Ezekiel, Isaiah, Min. Proph.: (C) Kethubim; Ruth, Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Eccles., Song of Songs, Lament., Dan., Esth., Ezr. (Ezr.-Neh.), Chron.

The following points should be noticed in the Hebrew grouping.

(i) The triple division of the Hebrew Scriptures is due not to arbitrary arrangement, nor, as the Rabbins affirmed, to any descending scale of Divine Inspiration, but to the gradual formation of the Canon. It presents also in a striking way the general outline of the Revelation: the Law gives the fundamental idea of the Theocracy; the Prophets declare its progress (a) in the light of history, (b) in connexion with the divine counsels: the Writings preserve the thought of the theocratic people in its speculative and introspective aspects.

(ii) The books of Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah were not divided by the Jews until the 16th century A.D. The 12 Minor Prophets were treated as one book. The two subdivisions of the Prophets therefore contain four books each. The terms "Former" and "Latter" refer to their position in the list, and have no reference to date of composition.

(iii) In the Talmudic list the position of Isaiah is peculiar. It was fancifully explained by the Jewish commentators as due to an arrangement by subject-matter. In recent times it has been by some scholars regarded as a proof of the late Exilic date of 2 Isai. (xl. to end), the arrangement being chronological. The order may perhaps have been merely determined by the comparative length of the books. The Massoretic order is that of the chronological sequence of the names.

(iv) The Hagiographa in the Talmudic list are arranged so as to give the place of honour to David (his ancestry, Ruth; his writings, the Psalms) and to group the rest in the chronological order of Job, Solomon, Jeremiah, Daniel, Esther and Ezra; Chronicles being placed last. The Massoretic order differs from the Talmudic chiefly by its grouping together the Five Rolls or Megilloth, the books read upon certain sacred days; the Song of Songs at the Feast of the Passover, Ruth at the Feast of Pentecost, Lamentations on the anniversary of the destruction of the Temple (9th of Ab), Ecclesiastes at the Feast of Tabernacles, Esther at the Feast of Purim.

(v) In both lists Chronicles appears as the last book of the Hebrew Canon.

(vi) The number of the books is 24.

The Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures seems from the first to have been arranged according to subject-matter. The departure from Palestinian custom in this respect was probably due rather to the gradual formation of the Version than to the independent attitude of Alexandrian Judaism. The extant MSS. shew a great variety in the arrangement of the books in the LXX. But the following are the most frequent variations from the Hebrew order: (i) Ruth is joined to Judges, Lamentations to Jeremiah, (ii) Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, follow after Kings, (iii) Job precedes Psalms and Proverbs, (iv) the Minor Prophets precede the Major; Daniel follows Ezekiel, (v) the order of the Minor Prophets runs, Hosea, Amos, Micah, Joel, Obadiah, Jonah, Nahum &c. (vi) Apocryphal books are inserted, Tobit and Judith being generally placed next to Esther, Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus after the Song of Songs, Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremy after Lamentations, Susanna, the Song of the Three Children, Bel and the Dragon after Daniel, while 1, 2 Maccabees close the list.

Josephus writing for Greek readers shews by his mention of 22 sacred books that he was referring to the Alexandrian Version, and reckoned Ruth as part of Judges and Lamentations as part of Jeremiah (Contr. Ap. i. 8).

Jerome claims to give the Jewish order of the books as follows: (a) Pentateuch; (b) Prophets: 1, Jos.; 2, Jud. and Ruth; 3, Sam.; 4, Kings; 5, Isai.; 6, Jeremi. and Lam.; 7, Ezek.; 8-12, Min. Proph.; (c) Hagiographa: 1, Job; 2, Pss.; 3, Prov.; 4, Eccles.; 5, Cant.; 6, Dan.; 7, Chron.; 8, Esdr. (i.e. Ezr.-Neh.); 9, Esth. But the position of Ruth and Lam., of Job, Dan., Chron., seems to reflect the influence of the LXX.

Classified more strictly according to subject-matter, the books may be grouped as follows:

A. Historical: (1) Pentateuch and Joshua, the origin of the people, the foundation of the Israelite constitution, and the settlement in Palestine.

(2) Jud., Sam., Kings, the history of the people to the downfall of the monarchy.

(3) Ezra-Nehemiah, personal memoirs of the Captivity and the Return.

(4) Ruth, Esth., Chron., special incidents in, and aspects of, history.

B. Prophetic: Isai., Jer., Ezek., Min. Proph. (except Jonah).

C. Poetical: (1) Psalms and Lam., lyrical. (2) Canticles, idyllic.

D. Didactic: (1) Job, dramatic. (2) Jonah, allegorical.

E. Sapiential: (1) Proverbs, gnomic. (2) Ecclesiastes, speculative.

F. Apocalyptic: Daniel, and part of Ezek. (xl.-xlviii.) and Zechariah (ii.-vi. 8).

3. GROUPS OF BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

In our Bibles the Books of the New Testament fall into five groups: (1) the Gospels, the Records of the Life of Christ: (2) the Acts of the Apostles, the Records of the Foundation of the Church: (3) the Epistles of St Paul (a) to Churches, (b) to individuals, to which is appended the Ep. to the Hebrews: (4) the so-called Catholic (or general) Epistles of St James, St Peter, St John and St Jude: (5) the Apocalypse. This arrangement is derived from the Latin Vulgate. The contents of the New Testament naturally divide themselves into (a) the history, and (b) the teaching, thoughts and aspirations based upon the history. The record of the facts of the Divine Life and the expansion of that Life into the life of the world precedes in order the Apostolic teaching: doctrine and organization follow as the results of the Historic Facts. The writings themselves are of a very varied character. The differences arising from the different points of view taken by the writers, and from their different personal and religious characteristics, offer distinctive features in the books without diminishing their substantial agreement.

The three Synoptic Gospels which, as their name implies, take the same general view of their subject and follow roughly the same lines of treatment, are placed first. They were written in all probability before the destruction of Jerusalem for different readers, St Matthew for Jewish, St Mark for Roman, St Luke for Greek, Christian converts. They present for the most part the same general outline of teaching, and are occupied chiefly with the external history and more especially with the Galilean Ministry of our Lord.

St John's Gospel, written after the fall of Jerusalem, giving special prominence to the Ministry in Judea and the spiritual character of the teaching, stands after the Synoptists. The sublimer flights of the Fourth Gospel presuppose the existence of a simpler representation of the divine teaching and an acquaintance with a fuller picture of the Life.

The Acts being the history of the Church's Foundation succeeds the memoirs of the Founder. The first 12 chapters are chiefly occupied with the Ministry of St Peter, the concluding 16 with that of St Paul. The two sections together describe (1) the Revelation through the Apostles to the Jewish people, (2) the building up of the Jewish Christian Church, (3) the gradual Revelation of the Gospel to the Gentile world.

Of the Epistles, the Pauline are placed first, perhaps as containing the books of the most considerable size. By a happy coincidence the Epistles, whose authority was soonest recognised and among which some are of genuineness that has never, even in recent times, been disputed (Rom., 1 and 2 Cor., Gal.), rank next in order to the History, which had closed with a description of St Paul's imprisonment at Rome. The Epistles to Churches stand first, arranged roughly in the order of their size; the Epistles to individuals follow; and the Epistle to the Hebrews is placed last, a position due to the uncertainty as to its authorship and to the absence of any opening salutation.

The so-called Catholic Epistles of the Apostles St James, St Peter, St John and St Jude form a smaller group. The term Catholic (i.e. general, not addressed to single Churches or individuals) is strictly applicable to James and 1 Peter, only doubtfully so to 2 Peter, 1 John, Jude, and not at all to 2 and 3 John.

The distinct character of the Apocalypse and the tenor of its final words render it the natural conclusion of the whole collection.

A comparison of the extant MSS. of the New Testament leads us to infer an early division into four books, (1) the Gospels, (2) the Acts and Catholic Epistles, (3) the Pauline Epistles, (4) the Apocalypse.

Sometimes the Pauline Epp. precede the Acts and Catholic Epp., so as to place first the books which had earliest obtained canonical authority.

(a) The Gospels are found arranged in great variety of order. In the early Western Church, the order most commonly received was that of Matthew, John, Luke, Mark; the Gospels of the Apostles preceding those of the disciples.

(b) The Epistle to the Hebrews is invariably classed among the Pauline Epistles in the extant MSS. In the Greek MSS. of the 4th cent. it stands before 1 Tim., but in the very ancient exemplar from which the Codex Vaticanus was copied it must have stood after the Epistle to the Galatians.

(c) In the West, the Epp. of St Peter were commonly placed at the head of the Catholic Epp.

By grouping the books chronologically, according as their composition is to be assigned to a date previous to or later than the destruction of Jerusalem, we gain a clearer view of the collection as a whole, and of the correlation of the various documents. The importance of this is obvious, since the interpretation of the writings is determined by the historical position of the writers.

The grouping will then be as follows:

A. Books written before the destruction of Jerusalem.

(1) Historical. Three Synoptic Gospels and Acts of the Apostles.

(2) Catholic Epp. James, 1, 2 Peter, Jude.

(3) Pauline Epp. (a) The first Message; 1, 2 Thessalonians. (b) The Gentile controversy; 1, 2 Cor., Gal., Rom. (c) Epp. of the Imprisonment; Phil., Col., Eph., Philom. (d) Pastoral Epp.

B. Books written at or about the period of the destruction of Jerusalem: (a) Epistle to the Hebrews. (b) The Apocalypse.

C. Books written after the destruction of Jerusalem: (a) The Gospel according to St John. (b) The Epistles of St John.

II. LIMITS AND GROWTH OF THE BIBLE.

BY THE REV. PROFESSOR RYLE, B.D.

1. THE HISTORY OF THE CANON OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The word Canon is used to denote the authoritative collection of the Sacred Books of the Christian Faith. These books belong to two different groups, entitled the Old and New Testaments. The word "Canon," which is used of the whole collection of the Christian Scriptures, is also applied to its two divisions separately.

The word is of Greek origin; its first meaning seems to have been "a measuring line" or "a carpenter's rule." Its root-idea is "straightness," and this is preserved in its secondary and metaphorical meaning, "standard" or "rule" (cf. Gal. vi. 16). Its use in a passive sense to denote "that which is measured," though not common, is well attested in secular literature.

By Christian writers the word was at first especially applied to "Christian doctrine," which they termed "the Canon of the Church," "the Canon of the Truth," &c. Such a "standard" might be embodied in a creed, or defined by the discipline, worship, &c. of the Church.

As applied to Holy Scripture, the adjective "canonical" is found as early as the time of Origen. Books were called "canonical" probably not because their contents agreed with the doctrinal rule of the Christian Faith, but because their sanctity and authority had been defined, measured, or "canonized" by the Church.

The substantive "Canon" does not seem to have been applied to Scripture until the 4th century. The selection of the word must certainly have been influenced by the parallelism of the classical use of "kanon" in the sense of a list or library of select standard literature. It was at first apparently used of the list of books which "measured" the contents of Scripture. It was then naturally transferred from the list to the writings included within the list or satisfying the sacred standard; and thus designated the collection sanctioned by the Church. Thirdly, the word came to be popularly applied to Scripture as "the rule of Faith." The "canonical writings which enshrined the word of truth became the standard of life and doctrine." It is under the second of these meanings that we speak of a "History of the Canon."

The History of the Canon of the Old Testament.—The history of the process by which the books of the Old Testament were collected and recognised as of sacred authority is hidden in great obscurity. The early Jewish tradition adopted by the Fathers of the Christian Church, which assigned the task of its completion to the miraculous agency of Ezra, is first found in 2 Esdras (ch. xiv.), an Apocalyptic Jewish writing devoid of historical authority. A later phase of it, which associated with Ezra "the Men of the Great Synagogue," has survived in a modified form down to the present day. But neither the original legend nor its later development rests on evidence of any authoritative value. The substratum of fact which underlies them both is the final assertion of the authority of the Law effected by Ezra and his companions. The complete restoration of the Mosaic worship, with which he and his contemporaries were traditionally credited, seemed to later Jewish writers to include numerous other services rendered to their religion of which no record has elsewhere been preserved. The work of collecting and arranging the national Scriptures was confidently reckoned among the triumphs of the same generation. But the historical character of the Rabbinic tradition of "the Great Synagogue" can no longer be defended; and, however important a part in the history of the Canon is represented by the literary activity of Ezra, his influence concerns only a single, though perhaps almost the initial phase. To assign to him or to his generation the final conclusion of the O. T. Canon is to prefer an untrustworthy legend to the assured results of Biblical criticism.

The Old Testament Canon owes its formation neither to one man's influence nor to the activity of a single generation, but to a process of gradual growth, and to the work of several centuries. A useful clue to its history is furnished by the Triple Division of the Hebrew Books (see above, p. 3), which has preserved the three successive stages in the growth of the Jewish Canon, i.e. (i) the Law, (ii) the Law and the Prophets, (iii) the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings.

(i) In the early periods of the history of the Chosen People there is no evidence of any special appeal to the authority possessed by writings. The message which the Israelites acknowledged to be divine was orally delivered through prophet, priest, or king. The medium of revelation was the vision, or the dream, or the Urim and Thummim.

The way was however being prepared for the later usage. There is abundant evidence to shew that writings of religious and political importance were committed for preservation to the care of the priests (cf. Ex. xl. 22; Deut. xvii. 18, xxxi. 24-26; Jos. xxiv. 26; 1 Sam. x. 25; 2 Kings xxii. 8). The most sacred of these, the Ten Commandments, inscribed on two Tables of Stone, were deposited within the ark; and it is instructive to observe that "the ark of the testimony" derived its name from this nucleus of the earliest law, which it was constructed to receive. (Ex. xxv. 22.)

preservation as much to oral tradition as to written records. Readers were necessarily few; and so far as the contents of the national traditions were popularly known, their dissemination was in all probability chiefly due to the oral teaching of the priests and prophets. But it need not be disputed that both the priestly families which transmitted the rules of worship and the codes of civil law from the days of Moses, and the schools of the prophets which preserved the chronicles of the nation and the fragments of the prophetic oracles, handed on their tradition as well by written documents as by feats of memory.

We do not, however, find any clear proof in the early history of the people of Israel of one preeminently sacred and authoritative code of legislation; nor do the extant narratives present the appearance of having been from the first the one especially recognised channel of information. The historical books record practices in sacrifice and worship which differ from the requirements of the Levitical law; the laws themselves shew signs of the influence of different epochs in the history; the references in the Prophets to the events of the Patriarchal period have no appearance of being drawn exclusively from the form of the narrative preserved to us in the book of Genesis. There is no reason to question the view that the nucleus or basis of these written traditions may be referred to the Mosaic or earliest period of the nation's literature. But such a process of literary development as is suggested by the critical analysis of the books necessarily postpones to a late date the canonical recognition of any portion of our present Pentateuch.

The references to "the law," e.g. in Isai. i. 10, ii. 3; Hos. iv. 6, viii. 1; Amos ii. 4; Mic. iv. 2, present only an apparent contradiction. The word rendered "law" without any qualifying mention of "writing" or "book" signifies in the earlier Hebrew literature not a written code, but the oral instruction of priest or prophet. That this oral instruction was committed to writing no one would deny. Such a passage as Hos. viii. 12, "Though I write for him my law in ten thousand precepts," shews plainly that among the prophets written collections of these authoritative utterances were known and repeated (cf. Isai. viii. 16). Such passages again as Jer. xviii. 18; Zeph. iii. 4; Hag. ii. 11 indicate that professionally the priests were required to know the provisions of both moral and ceremonial law, and to declare them to the people (cf. 2 Chron. xix. 5-11). Undoubtedly the chief contents of such laws have been preserved to us in the various materials incorporated within our Pentateuch.

Not until the reign of Josiah do we find positive evidence of the existence of sacred writing which claims the general recognition of the people. The narrative of "the book of the law" discovered in the Temple (2 Kings xxii.; 2 Chron. xxxiv.) contains the first assured proof of the recognised authority of Scripture over the nation. That this "book of the law" was our Pentateuch, is much less probable than has often been assumed. But that it was a book containing material closely corresponding to large portions of Deuteronomy may be admitted upon the following grounds. (a) The reforms carried out by Josiah upon the strength of the discovery of this book agree closely with the characteristic teaching of the Deuteronomic law. (b) The special influence of Deuteronomy is very noteworthy in the writings of Jeremiah, whose prophetic career followed directly upon this incident. (c) The first direct citations from "the law of Moses," which are found in the books of Kings compiled about 50 years after the death of Josiah, are drawn from Deuteronomic writings (cf. 1 Kings ii. 3 with Deut. xxix. 9, Jos. i. 7; 2 Kings xiv. 6 with Deut. xxiv. 16).

We may therefore safely assume that the Deuteronomic "law" or some form of it was treated as a sacred and authoritative Scripture in the last days of the kingdom of Judah and during the Exile. At how much earlier a date before its discovery in the Temple its character and contents were known we have no means of deciding with certainty.

This Deuteronomic law was the first instalment of the Canon of the Torah or Pentateuch. The stages of the process by which the other main component portions of the Pentateuch were first welded together and then acknowledged as "the book of the law" do not fall within the scope of the present inquiry. That the work may have been undertaken at Babylon during the Exile, and have been there finished before Ezra returned to Jerusalem, is a not unreasonable conjecture. The destruction of the Temple and the captivity of the people would have given a new sanctity to the writings and traditions which recorded the "origines" of Israel, the divine selection of the race, the deliverance from Egypt, and the occupation of Palestine. Simultaneously with the return to Palestine and the renewal of the Temple worship, the ancient traditions of law and ceremonial were minutely restored. The people regarded the sacred writings as the possession of the whole nation instead of the peculiar inheritance of a religious order. The institution of the Synagogue, which gave to Judaism a capacity for unlimited expansion, found in the book of the "Torah" the means of perpetuating the mission of Israel among the races of the earth, and of recalling to every devout Jew of the Dispersion the witness of the Temple and its services. In the message of "the book" the people found a compensation for the decay of the prophetic gift.

It can scarcely be only an accidental coincidence that the references to "the law of Moses" become more numerous in the Post-exilic literature (cf. Ezr. iii. 2, vi. 18, vii. 6; Neh. viii. 1, xiii. 1; Dan. ix. 11, 13; Mal. iv. 4; 2 Chron. xxiii. 18, xxv. 4, xxx. 16, xxxv. 12), and that allusions to the name and work of Moses should in proportion be so much more frequent in the books of Chronicles and Nehemiah than in the Pre-exilic writings (e.g. twice in Samuel, seven times in Kings, sixteen times in Chron., seven times in Neh.). In the Canonicity accorded at first only to the Pentateuch we find possibly an explanation for the detailed treatment of early Israelite history by the side of the scanty summary of later events in such Post-exilic passages as Neh. ix.; Ps. cv., cvi.

There is no reason to doubt that "the book of the law of Moses" which Ezra read to the people (Neh. viii. 1, 5, 8) was practically the same as our Pentateuch.

Thus was completed the first Hebrew Canon, or, as we may regard it, the first stage in the history of the Canon of the O.T. The date of this event is roughly determined by the evidence of the Samaritan Pentateuch. The fact that the "Torah" is the only Canon of Scripture recognised by the Samaritans indicates that at the time when the renegade Jewish priest, Manasseh, instituted the rival Mosaic worship on Mt Gerizim, the priests at Jerusalem regarded "the law" alone as the Canon of Scripture.

(ii) The recognition as Scripture of the group of writings included in the Prophets belongs to a period of which we have little information.

The records which gave the history of the people subsequent to the death of Moses would naturally soon form a kind of appendix to the "Torah." But some time would elapse before they were acknowledged to possess a similar sanctity. The wonderful fulfilment of the predictions relating to the Captivity and the Return had profoundly enhanced the popular esteem for the prophets whose living witness had too often been rejected; the decay of the spirit of prophecy added to the veneration in which the few written and orally transmitted utterances were held.

But until it was admitted that the succession of "the prophets" had ceased, their writings, whether prophetic or historical, would not rank with the revelation of the "word of God" spoken by the mouth of the prophet. As it is hardly likely that the writings of Malachi were regarded as worthy to be classed with those of Isaiah and Jeremiah until some considerable interval of time had elapsed after the death of their writer, the completion of this group is probably considerably later than the age of Nehemiah.

(a) A Jewish tradition in an Epistle prefixed to 2 Maccabees describes how "Nehemiah, founding a library, gathered together the books about the kings and prophets, and the [books] of David, and Epistles of the kings respecting sacred gifts" (2 Macc. ii. 13). This passage, though occurring in an trustworthy document and not bearing directly upon the history of the Canon, may very possibly record a true tradition of a movement for the collection and preservation of the historical and prophetic writings.

(b) The "Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach," written about 180 B.C., shews by its allusion to "the twelve prophets" (xliv. 10, 11) that the prophetic group had been for some considerable time acknowledged as sacred Scripture. The fact that Mordecai, Daniel and Ezra are not commemorated among Israel's "famous men" in chaps. xlii.—l. makes it probable that as yet only "the Law and the Prophets" were accepted in the Canon, although the mention of Zerubbabel, Jeshua and Nehemiah shews acquaintance with the general historical outline.

(c) A passage in Daniel (ix. 2), speaking of "the books" and quoting, as from one of them, the writings of Jeremiah, appears to imply the existence of an authoritative collection which included prophetic writings. The application however of this evidence rests upon the controverted point of the date (probably the 2nd cent. b.c.) to which the literary revision of this portion of Daniel should be assigned.

(d) The exclusion of Ruth, Chron., and Ezra-Neh. from the historical books, and of Lamentations and Daniel from the prophetic books of this group affords presumptive evidence that these writings, if they existed at all, were not yet recognised as Scripture at the time when "the Prophets" were finally closed and associated with "the Law."

The date to which we may conjecturally assign the completion of this Second Canon is the commencement of the 3rd cent. b.c., a period which stands midway between the rule of Nehemiah and the composition of Ecclesiasticus. The conquests of Alexander the Great and the influx of Hellenic literature and philosophy may then presumably have given the needful impulse to the expansion of the Jewish Scriptures. The final authoritative recognition of the sacred character of these portions of Hebrew history and prophecy may thus have signalled a protest of Judaism against the encroachment of foreign thought.

(iii) The recognition of the books contained in the miscellaneous group of the Hagiographa belongs to the last stage of the history. To some of these writings modern criticism appears with good reason to assign a late date of composition. Ecclesiastes is asserted to belong to the 3rd century b.c.; the compilation of the Chronicles cannot be placed much earlier: certain Psalms very possibly date from the Maccabean era; and the literary form in which Daniel and Esther come down to us may reflect the influence of the same age. Without insisting upon the finality of such criticisms, we are fairly justified in assuming that the canonicity of this group was not determined until the latter half of the 2nd century b.c. Neither is it hard to suggest a period at which this process was begun. The destruction of "the sacred books" of the Jews in the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes (1 Macc. i. 56, 57) awoke the nation to a sense of their threatened loss. A movement took place not merely to protect the copies of the law and the prophets, but to preserve and set apart the most valued of the other surviving sacred writings. A tradition to this effect which identifies Judas Maccabeus with the undertaking is preserved in the Epistle prefixed to 2 Maccabees, "in like manner also Judas gathered together all those things (i.e. writings) that were lost by reason of the war we had, and they remain with us" (2 Macc. ii. 14).

The work thus begun may have led to the eventual inclusion of the remaining books within the sacred limits. The details of the process are unknown to us, but there can be little doubt that the collection of the Psalms formed the nucleus of this group. The first direct evidence which meets us after the Maccabean revolt contains a clear allusion to the triple division of the sacred books. Three times over in the Prologue to Ecclesiasticus, prefixed in 133 b.c. by the grandson of the author to his Greek translation, we find mention of "the law and the prophets and the other writings." This passage furnishes the earliest evidence that other books could be mentioned in the same class with "the law and the prophets."

The recognition of the books of the Hagiographa was probably completed during the comparatively peaceful and prosperous period before the death of John Hyrcanus (105 b.c.). The religious condition of the nation during the following century, represented by the strife between the Pharisee and Sadducee factions and by the intense conservatism of the teaching of the Scribes, renders it exceedingly unlikely that any subsequent alterations could have been made in the contents of the Canon. Positive testimony is of a much later date.

A passage in Philo's De Vita Contemplativa (the genuineness of which however has recently been questioned) speaks of "laws and oracles, declared by prophets, and hymns, and the other (writings), whereby learning and piety grew up side and are brought to perfection." The allusion to the Jewish Canon is undoubted, and clearly implies acquaintance with the contents, though not necessarily with the limits, of the Hagiographa. There is no evidence in Philo's writings that he was acquainted with Ezekiel, Daniel or the Five Megilloth, but as we shall see in the case of the N.T., too much stress must not be laid upon this negative evidence.

In the New Testament there seems to be an allusion to a Triple Division of the Sacred Books in Luke xxiv. 44, "all the things written in the law of Moses and the prophets and the Psalms concerning me," although the mention of the Psalms is doubtless due to the prominence of its Messianic witness rather than to its position as representing the complete Hagiographa. The references to "Scripture" generally presuppose the completeness of the O.T. collection. Our Lord and His Apostles appeal to the Jewish Scriptures (e.g. Luke iv. 21; John v. 39, 46; Acts i. 20, vii. 42); their claim is to fulfil the message of the acknowledged and perfect Jewish Canon; there is no symptom of its being imperfect, no trace of the thought that the boundaries of its literature might yet be extended under the impulse of the new Revelation.

It is very important to observe that all the direct citations, as well of the N.T. writers as of Philo, are made from the O.T. Canon. The passages where allusion is made to the contents of apocryphal books (e.g. 2 Tim. iii. 8; Jude 9, 14) present a marked contrast to the manner of quotation from authoritative Scripture (no exception is presented by Matt. ii. 23; Joh. vii. 38; Eph. v. 14; Jas. iv. 5: see commentaries).

Direct citation is made in the N. T. from the following books: Pentateuch, Jos., Sam., Kings, Job, Ps., Prov., Is., Jer., Dan., Hos., Joel, Am., Mic., Hab., Hag., Zech., Mal.; and the following are undoubtedly referred to—Jud., Ruth, Chron., Ezek., Jon., Zeph. That there seem to be no references made to Ezra-Neh., Esth., Eccles., Cant., Obad., Nah., is best explained by consideration of the brevity and of the character of writings which did not lend themselves so readily to the purpose of citation by the N.T. authors. Obadiah and Nahum indisputably belonged to the twelve prophets: Ezra-Nehemiah were inseparable from Chron.; Esther, Eccles., and Cant. reflected a tone and spirit with which the general tenor of Apostolic teaching would have had few points of contact.

In the matter of quotation it is more important to observe that the different groups of writing which compose the Hagiographa are all recognised by direct quotations, than that any single work has for some reason or other failed to furnish material illustrative of Apostolic thought. We may conclude that reference to Ps., Prov., Job, Chron., and Dan. implies the authoritative character of all the other writings with which they are traditionally associated in the Hagiographa.

Confirmation of this is supplied by Josephus, who, writing at the close of the 1st century A.D. (Contra Apionem, i. 8), speaks of 22 (not 24) sacred books of the Jews, mentioning five books of Moses, thirteen prophetic "from the time of Moses to that of Artaxerxes" four containing poetry and moral maxims. He is addressing a Greek-speaking Gentile, and, probably following the LXX., classes the books by subject-matter, and attaches Ruth to Judges, Lamentations to Jeremiah. From his mention of the reign of Artaxerxes as the lowest limit of antiquity for the books of Jewish Scripture, we may at least gather that in his opinion the sacred collection had long been established. (Evidence to the same effect is also supplied by 2 Esd. xiv. 44, 46.)

Possibly the destruction of Jerusalem and the threatened annihilation of the Jewish race, coupled with the rivalry of the Alexandrine version, determined the Jewish Rabbis at the so-called Council of Jamnia (c. 100 A.D.) to decree officially the limits of the Hebrew Canon of Scripture. The substance of some such a decree is perhaps to be recognised in the early tradition preserved in Baba Bathra, fol. 14 (see above, p. 3), which was committed to writing soon after 300 A.D. The later Massoretic rearrangement of the order of the books introduced artificial changes, due partly to liturgical reasons and partly to views of the relative importance of different books. The discussions of the Jewish doctors respecting the canonicity of Ezekiel, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Jonah, Proverbs, Esther, did not touch their historical position, but turned generally on the question whether they could be reconciled with the teaching of the "Torah."

These discussions are of little value except to shew the degree of freedom with which the Canonicity of sacred writings could be criticised within the Jewish Church. They afford evidence that the writings of "the son of Sirach" (Ecclesiasticus) were highly thought of; and possibly the omission of "Esther" from the lists of early Christian writers may be explained by local or temporary discredit among the Jewish teachers.

In conclusion, although there are not wanting signs that the books of the Hebrew Canon were from time to time subjected to literary revision, or alteration in order, there seems to be no probability that since 100 B.C. any change was admitted in the range of its contents.

Similarly it seems to be indisputable that before the middle of the 2nd cent. A.D. the Canon of "The Law, the Prophets and the Writings" had received from official authority the seal of finality which popular usage had long assigned to them. Thus ended the protracted process of determining the limits of the Canon of Hebrew Scripture, which had continued from the days of the prophet Jeremiah to the days of Rabbi Akiba (†135 A.D.).

It is interesting to observe that the three stages through which we have traced the gradual growth of the Hebrew Canon are found reflected in the usage, so far as it can be determined, of the Synagogue "lectionary." There is no reason to question the tradition (a) that from the days of Ezra the reading of the Torah formed part of the Synagogue service (Neh. viii. 1—3, 8, 18, xiii. 1; cf. Acts xv. 21; 2 Cor. iii. 15), and (b) that after some considerable interval a "lesson" from the Nebiim was added. The theory however that the prophetic lesson dates from the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the possession of copies of "the law" had been forbidden, rests on no historical foundation. For in the absence of any definite evidence as to the date when the custom began, it is only natural to suppose that it followed immediately upon the recognition of these books as the canonical expansion, in history and precept, of the teaching of the Law. The statements in the N. T. (e.g. Luke iv. 16, 17; Acts xiii. 15, 27) afford conclusive proof that in our Lord's time both Law and Prophets were systematically read in the Synagogues. Evidence however is lacking which would connect with so early a period the details of the Mediaeval Jewish lectionary preserved in modern Synagogue rolls. But the general plan of dividing the Law and the Prophets into lessons (that from the Law being called Parashah, that from the Prophets Haphtarah) belongs to the earliest days of the Synagogue system. On the other hand the books of the Hagiographa were never all of them read in the services of the Synagogue, and it appears to have been only in a post-Talmudic period that the Five Megilloth were appropriated for public reading upon certain sacred days (vid. supra, p. 3).

In general agreement with this may be recorded the testimony of the Targums or Aramaic paraphrases of the Hebrew Scriptures. The Targums on the Law (Onkelos and Jerusalem) and on the Prophets (Jonathan ben Uzziel) are based on an oral tradition of a Synagogue interpretation which preceded by a long interval its eventual transmission by writing. The Targums however on Ps. Prov. Job, on the Five Megilloth, and on Chron., seem from the first to have been committed to writing (for the most part at a late date) and to have been called into existence by the needs of private devotion, not of public worship. No Targum exists of Daniel or Ezra-Nehemiah.

The theory therefore, that the earliest lection-system of the Synagogue, presupposing the Canonicity (first of only one and then) of two groups of the Hebrew Scriptures, preceded the final ratification of the Hagiographa, appears to receive corroboration from the history of the formation of the Targums; and supports, in its turn, the explanation given above of the growth, in three successive stages, of the Hebrew Canon.

The Hebrew Canon of Scripture, having received the sanction of the usage of our Lord and the Apostles, was accepted by the Christian Church. The use of the Alexandrine Version familiarised readers with the books of the "Apocrypha." But although these were constantly cited by the Fathers without distinction from the books of the Jewish Canon, the Church never altogether lost sight of the different footing on which these additional writings stood. Thus Melito, Bp of Sardis (circa 170), after making inquiries in Palestine, gives as the O. T. Scriptures a list differing only from that of the Hebrew Canon by the omission of Esther. Origen (Euseb. H. E. vi. 25), in whose list the Minor Prophets are accidentally omitted, adds "the Epistle" to Jeremiah's writings, but otherwise follows the Hebrew Canon; Athanasius (†373) differs only by adding "Baruch" and "the Epistle" to the writings of Jeremiah, and by reckoning "Esther" with "uncanonical" writings. The list of Amphilochius (circa 380) also excludes the Apocrypha, but only inserts "Esther" after the prophets on the ground that "some" included it in the Canon.

Cyril of Jerusalem (Catech. iv. 35) and Gregory of Nazianzus, although reckoning Baruch as a canonical book, exclude the other "Apocrypha." Rufinus (Comm. in Synub. Apost.) maintains the Hebrew Canon, although he probably included Baruch with Jeremiah. Jerome (†420) regarded the books of the Hebrew Canon as the only inspired Scripture of the O. T. In spite of the laxer views which afterwards prevailed in the Western Church, the opinion of Jerome was upheld by a succession of eminent scholars in the Middle Ages, and largely influenced the chief reformers in their exclusion of the Apocrypha from the list of Canonical Scriptures.

In the Eastern Church the spurious list of the books of Scripture, which excludes all "Apocrypha," attached to the Canons of the Council of Laodicea (circa 360), probably represents the opinion of the Eastern Church at the close of the 4th century.

The book of Esther alone seems to have had its Canonicity at any time seriously disputed in the Christian Church.

The Apocrypha, and other Apocryphal books.—The limits of the Hebrew Canon excluded certain other writings which the Jews of Alexandria regarded with special favour. The N. T. writers, who frequently use the Alexandrine Version, never quote these writings as Scripture, although they may reasonably be supposed to have been acquainted with the contents of some of them.

The practice of the Apostles was not in this respect generally followed by the writers of the early Church. The books contained in the Greek translation, and in the early Latin version derived from it, were popularly regarded as all of equal authority. The books of Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus were commonly treated as the writings of Solomon; Baruch was classed with Jeremiah; Tobit and Judith ranked with Esther: the additions to Daniel and Esther met with common recognition as inseparable from the Palestinian books; 1 and 2 Maccabees embodied the latest chapter of sacred history.

Even writers like Origen, Cyril of Jerusalem, and Athanasius, who expressly declared their preference for the Hebrew Canon, quote the books of the "Apocrypha" as inspired Scripture. The influence of the Greek and Latin versions, in which no difference was discernible between the Hebrew books and the Alexandrian additions, naturally predisposed the Church in favour of their use. The tendency of the age was all in favour of extending, rather than of restricting, the range of Divine Inspiration.

Thus Augustine, who recognised them without hesitation, spoke of them as "books which the Church, but not the Jews, held canonical." The influence of his opinion was very great. And when once ecclesiastical usage had included a Latin version of the disputed books in the Latin Vulgate, even Jerome's hostile attitude was apt to be forgotten. During the Middle Ages it was only recognised by a few, that doubts could be entertained with respect to the canonicity of books contained in the Vulgate. The extant Greek and Latin MSS. of the O. T. shew how generally Baruch, Additions to Dan. and Esth., 1 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, Wisd., Ecclesi., 1 and 2 Macc. were read in the services of the Church.

In the West their Canonicity, having first received conciliar recognition from the 3rd Synod of Carthage, 397, from that time onward was frequently asserted and generally acknowledged.

The Council of Trent, 1546 (Sess. iv. Decr. de Can. Scrip.), decreed the equal inspiration of all books contained in the Vulgate version, and thus recognised as Scripture, Tobit, Judith, Wisd., Eccclus., Baruch, 1 and 2 Maccabees, and the additions to Daniel and Esther.

These writings, with the addition of 1 and 2 Esdras and the Prayer of Manasses, make up the group which in the Reformed Churches is known as the Apocrypha. This name was originally applied to "secret" or "mystical" writings in a religious body, which would be intelligible only to the initiated. By Christian writers it was constantly applied to the pseudepigraphic writings of heretics, and acquired the unfavourable sense of "fictitious," "spurious," "heretical." It obtained also a special ecclesiastical usage for books kept back from public reading in the Churches. The list of Athanasius divides the ecclesiastical writings into three classes—(1) "Canonical," i.e. the inspired books of Scripture; (2) "books read in the Church," i.e. uninspired but valuable for instruction, e.g. Wisdom, Eccclus., Esther, Judith, Tobit, &c.; (3) "Apocrypha" or heretical. Jerome, who used the word Apocrypha for all ecclesiastical writings not included in the Hebrew Canon which he recognised, seems to have been the first to apply the term to the books of our Apocrypha, though he would have included under it many other works. Augustine, who considered the word to mean "doubtful of origin," does not apply it to these books, which he himself deemed Canonical. Rufinus, referring to the "Apocrypha," calls them "ecclesiastical" books.

During the Middle Ages men lost sight of the pseudepigraphic works which had been called "Apocrypha," such as the Book of Enoch, the Apocalypse of Baruch, &c. The Reformers, who adopted Jerome's Canon of the O. T., adopted also his term for the books, which were excluded from their Canon, but which were included in the written and printed Bibles. In spite of adverse criticism, the books of the "Apocrypha" maintained their position in the great translations of the Bible in the 16th century. They were retained as the literary link connecting the two inspired "Testaments" and as useful in the Church "for example of life and instruction of manners" (Art. of Religion, vi.). The term "Deutero-Canonical" is sometimes preferred by the Roman Church. The degree of modified recognition which these books receive from e.g. the Reformed and Eastern Churches distinguishes them from the class of spurious apocryphal works.

The books of the "Apocrypha" represent the chief remains of the Jewish literature belonging to the centuries immediately previous and subsequent to the Christian era. With the exception of 2 Esdras and the Prayer of Manasses, they are preserved to us in the Greek MSS. of the LXX. Some of them, e.g. 1 Macc., Eccclus., Judith, were originally written in Hebrew, but the majority seem to have been written in Greek. For a detailed description of these books see below, p. 86 seqq.

Under the title of O. T. Apocrypha we might also include certain other writings belonging to the same period. The most important are:

(a) "The 3rd Book of Maccabees," which contains a legendary account of miraculous events attending the persecution of the Jews by Ptolemaeus IV., Philopator (circa 210 B.C.). It may have been composed early in the 1st cent. A.D. It is found in the Cod. Alexandrinus, and is often included in editions of the LXX.

(b) "The 4th Book of Maccabees," a declamation combining Jewish thought with the praise of Stoic virtue, based on the martyrdom of Eleazar and his sons, has often been wrongly included among the works of Josephus. It was composed probably in the first half of the 1st cent. A.D. It is particularly noticeable for the strength of its statements respecting the doctrine of the resurrection. It is found both in Cod. Sinaiticus and in Cod. Alexandrinus.

(c) "The Psalms of Solomon," an important pseudepigraphic collection of 18 Psalms, originally composed in Hebrew, but preserved in a Greek version. Their date may possibly be 70–40 B.C. This Psalter is remarkable as being almost the only piece of pre-Christian Pharisaic literature that has come down to us. It contains references to the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey and to Pompey's death: it also gives a striking picture of Jewish life and thought along with a delineation of the Davidic Messiah of peculiar interest. It appears in the list of the contents of the Cod. Alex. as an appendix to the N. T.

(d) "The Book of Enoch," only known to us through an Ethiopic version, is an apocalyptic work, the greater part of which was probably written in Hebrew as early as the 2nd cent. B.C., the remainder perhaps in the reign of Herod the Great. It is of special interest for the light which it throws upon the Jewish teaching of a Messiah. See Jude 14.

(e) "The Apocalypse of Baruch" (preserved in the Syrian MS. of the Peshitto Syriac), purporting to be the utterance of Baruch to his people after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, must have been written very shortly after the destruction of the city by Titus. Its resemblance to 2 Esdras is so close as to suggest that its contents must have been familiar to the writer of the last-named work.

(f) "The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs" is the name of a Jewish writing of a mainly hortatory character. Its date may be the close of the 1st cent. A.D.; but it has come down to us with extensive Christian interpolations belonging to the 2nd or 3rd century.

(g) "The Assumption of Moses." Of this Apocalyptic work a large fragment only—in a Latin translation from the Greek—has been preserved, containing an address of Moses to Joshua. Its date is probably about 45 A.D., and the writer is considered by some to be a zealot on account of the "Anti-Pharisaic" tone. It is to this writing that Jude 9 most probably refers.

(h) "The Book of Jubilees," or "Little Genesis," is a free paraphrase, with fantastic additions, of Genesis and part of Exodus, originally written in Hebrew. It is probably a product of Rabbinic (? Pharisaic) teaching in the earlier half of the 1st century A.D.

(i) "The Sibylline Oracles." The greater portion of this strange collection of fictitious prophecies must have been composed by Christian writers. The earlier portions however are evidently of Jewish origin.

(j) The allusion to "James and Jambres" in 2 Tim. iii. 8 is probably based upon a Jewish apocryphal work dealing with legendary adventures attributed to Moses.

2. THE HISTORY OF THE CANON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

A very different inquiry from that upon which we have just been occupied is presented by the History of the Canon of the New Testament. In the case of the Old Testament we have seen that the difficulties, which beset our knowledge of writings derived from a period extending over more than a thousand years, are complicated by the lack of evidence bearing upon the date of their individual recognition. But in turning to the Canon of the New Testament we have to deal with the literary work of a single generation; we are concerned with writings of whose existence in the Church, after the interval of a century, the evidence is, generally speaking, abundant and convincing.

The idea of a Canon of New Testament Scripture was only gradually developed. The books of the N.T. are chiefly incidental in character. Each was written for some special purpose. The writers shew no sign of following any uniform plan. They have apparently no thought that they are contributing to an authoritative collection of Scriptures. Neither in the form nor in the contents of their writings is there any trace of designed literary cooperation. Any theory of Apostolic collaboration, by which it could be supposed that the N.T. Canon was originally authoritatively issued or its use imposed upon the Church by the Apostolic circle, would be contradictory to the character of the books themselves. It would no less lack the support of any trustworthy testimony from the scanty records of the primitive Church.

During the first decades of the Church's history the need of a collection of Apostolic writings was not felt. (1) The Jewish Canon of Scripture seemed sufficient to supply the religious wants of the Christian community. Our Lord had appealed to it as the foundation of His teaching and as the witness of His mission (e.g. Matt. v. 17; Lk. xxiv. 44; Joh. v. 39). The Apostles quoted it copiously, both in speeches and letters. The language and thought, which first gave expression to the Christian faith, had been steeped in the study of the Hebrew Scriptures.

(2) Again, by the side of oral teaching the value of writings in the Apostolic age would not at first be appreciated. Due weight needs to be given to the important factor of "oral tradition" in the earliest stages of Christian teaching. Its influence can even now be traced without difficulty. Beneath the agreement of the Synoptic Gospels we can discern the outlines of a common Evangelistic "tradition," which was preached in all the Churches. There are not wanting indications that the substance of Apostolic teaching must have followed some similar line of narrative (cf. St Peter, Acts ii. 14, &c., iii. 12, &c., iv. 8, &c., xiii. 16, &c.; and cf. 1 Cor. xi. 23-26, xv. 3-6). Indeed so long as eyewitnesses of the events of our Lord's Life and Death and Resurrection, and the hearers, followers and companions of the Apostles could personally testify to the truth of the Gospel message, so long would the oral witness be preferred to the written record.

(3) Perhaps, also, we ought to take into account the influence on the minds of many Christians of the belief that the Lord would shortly return and set up His kingdom on earth (cf. 2 Thess. ii. 2). In view of this impending consummation, the need of Apostolic writings was scarcely likely to present itself in any considerable degree.

But the lapse of time quickly demonstrated the insufficiency of merely oral teaching. For while Christian communities everywhere multiplied and the Church spread into far distant regions, the members of the Apostolic circle became fewer. The sacred tradition was committed to those who were not gifted with miraculous powers of memory or inspiration. There was every reason to fear that in the process of transmission the substance of the Apostolic message would suffer in accuracy and proportion by the omission or by the exaggeration of its details, or, as was perhaps most to be expected, by the interpolation of unauthorised and even legendary materials.

Before the first generation of Christians had passed away, the importance of securing an authentic record of the Gospel narrative had unquestionably made itself felt. Numerous narratives seem to have been written to meet the demands of the Christian converts (Luke i. 1-4). Those that had been written or that claimed to have been written by the hand, or with the special sanction, of members of the Apostolic circle, would soon acquire preeminent distinction. The veneration for such memoirs would increase, as the survivors of the Apostolic generation became fewer. During the first century it would have been natural—and it would not have been difficult—to procure from the principal survivors some degree of ratification for such narratives (cf. Joh. xxi. 24), and to separate them from less authentic compositions. It is only reasonable to presume that the early Christians would have based upon such well-ascertained foundation their preference for certain forms of the Gospel narrative. Some such recognition, however informal, will best account for the rapid and general acceptance, in the course of the next two or three generations, of our three Synoptist Gospels. The special scope and distinct character of the Fourth Gospel, while separating it in time and purpose from the Synoptist narratives, imply the writer's supposition that the contents of these were already familiar to his readers. For its claim to authoritative knowledge (Joh. xx. 30, 31, xxi. 24, 25) and its evident purpose of counteracting certain erroneous doctrines enhance the significance of the fact that its general plan, being supplementary to—and therefore in some measure dependent on—an acquaintance with the three earlier Gospels, presupposes their recognised position in the Churches.

A corresponding interest was aroused to preserve the writings of the Apostles. Even letters which had their origin in some incident of passing or personal interest obtained a peculiar value, both from the position of the Apostles in the Christian community and from the recognition that to them had been granted the gift of Divine Inspiration. At quite an early period it would appear that unscrupulous men did not hesitate to seek their own advantage from the forgery of an Apostle's name (2 Thess. ii. 2, iii. 17). The Apostles employed letters as a means of instruction to the Churches. And although we have only one example of an Epistle issued by their collective authority (Acts xv. 22), it is evident that in their individual sphere of influence they wrote letters of instruction intended for systematic local circulation (e.g. 1 Thess. v. 27; 1 Cor. i. 2; Col. iv. 16). Undoubtedly many Apostolic letters perished (cf. 1 Cor. v. 9 and Col. iv. 16). But the importance of their contents, and the authority of the writers, led to many of them being carefully preserved. Those addressed to large Churches (e.g. at Philippi or Rome) or groups of Churches (e.g. 1 Cor., Eph., 1 Pet.) enjoyed a better chance of permanent survival than those addressed to individuals, partly on account of the greater notoriety which they quickly obtained, partly on account of the greater number of copies which would be made of public letters as compared with those of merely private interest. Familiarity with their contents was produced by the repeated public reading of these letters in the general assembly and in the religious services of the Christian communities. Copies were transcribed both for public and private use; and in their rapid circulation through the Churches we gain an explanation of the influence which an Apostolic work quickly exerted over the language and thought of almost contemporary writers (cf. the resemblance between Rom. and 1 Pet., Jude and 2 Pet.). The liturgical use of Apostolic writings began at a very early time. In the absence of the Apostles and after their death these letters as well as other venerated writings were read aloud in the place of assembly (cf. Clem. Ep. ad Cor.).

This is probably the explanation of 2 Pet. iii. 16, where the writer of the passage clearly refers to a collection of Pauline Epistles, and expects his readers to be acquainted with them as embodying the teaching of the Apostle. There is no reason to suppose that the Christians of the earliest age had any idea of elevating Apostolic writings to a position of equal authority with the Canon of the Old Testament.

A.D. 70–120. The Apostolic Fathers. The few and fragmentary Christian writings of the period immediately following upon the destruction of Jerusalem have been closely examined for the evidence which they may furnish respecting the existence or the authority of the N.T. writings. Being for the most part letters of simple exhortation, consolation, and warning, addressed in times of trouble to Christian communities, they have none of the precision of doctrinal treatises or of systematic argument. Their testimony to the N.T. Scriptures is all the more forcible from its indirect and incidental nature; for it shews that Apostolic writings were already widely known and closely studied.

(a) The Apostolic Fathers contain only two direct quotations from the writings of the N.T. They are each, however, of especial significance. Clement of Rome writing to the Church of Corinth (Clem. 1 Cor. xlvii.) appeals to St Paul's 1st Ep. to Cor.: Polycarp writing to the Church at Philippi (cap. iii.) quotes St Paul's Epistle to the Philippians. In each case it is obvious that the name of the Epistle is mentioned in connexion with and in honour of the Church which is being addressed. The Christian Bishop appeals to an Epistle of St Paul, in which he takes it for granted that the members of a Church will be especially interested. In each case the Epistle is cited by name because the writer, addressing the same Church as the Apostle, is confident, in appealing to that Epistle, that the readers will be as well acquainted with it as himself.

(b) The extant writings of Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp and Barnabas present numerous coincidences of language with the books of the N.T. Thus, taking the Epistles first, Clement makes use of Rom., 1 Cor., Eph., 1 Tim. (?), Tit. (?), Heb., Jas.; Ignatius of 1 Cor., Eph., Phil. (?), 1 Thes. (?), Philem. (?); Polycarp of Acts, Rom., 1, 2 Cor., Gal., Eph. (?), Phil., 1, 2 Thes. (?), 1, 2 Tim., 1 Pet., 2 Pet. (?), 1 John. With the Gospels the coincidences are less frequent, but undoubted instances of coincidence can be found with the writing of St Matthew, and some probably with St Luke; the 4th Gospel was almost certainly known to Ignatius.

These coincidences not only testify to the existence of the N.T. writings at the beginning of the 2nd cent., but they shew that the leaders of the Christian Church were already accustomed to steep themselves in Apostolic teaching preserved in writings. The frequent recourse to the Apostolic phrases, especially in Polycarp's Epistle, implies the expectation on the part of the writer that he is employing language familiar to his readers, which, if suitable to his purpose, will come with greater force and authority than any words of his own.

1 "The direct mention of the Ep. to the Ephesians" by Ignatius (Ep. ad Ephes. xli.) "is extremely doubtful." (See Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers, Ignatius, Vol. II. Sec. i. p. 23.)

The absence of any direct formula of citation in no way diminishes the value of the evidence of the Apostolic Fathers in the recognition of the N.T. books. For even in quotation from the books of the O.T. these writers customarily omitted it. At a time when the idea of a N.T. Canon had scarcely been formed, we should not naturally expect to find the formula which only occasionally precede quotation from the O.T. applied to Apostolic writings. When therefore in the Ep. of Barnabas (iv. 5) the formula "As it is written" introduces a quotation from St Matthew, it argues the peculiar veneration in which this writing was held.

No unprejudiced reader would be inclined to deny the force of the correspondences of language in the Apostolic Fathers with the books of the N.T., on the ground of small verbal divergences. It is unreasonable to repudiate this branch of evidence on the assumption either that the coincidence of language is fortuitous, or that the coincidence is due to literal correspondence with other Gospels and Epistles than those which have survived.

Altogether although we do not gather that any authoritative collection of N.T. books existed, the use that was so freely made of the Apostles' words shews that their writings were carefully treasured and studied. Especially noteworthy is the passage of Ignatius, in which (Ep. to Phil. viii.) "the Gospel" is mentioned by way of antithesis to "the archives" of the O.T. In another passage the words (Ep. to Phil. v.) "taking refuge in the Gospel as the flesh of Jesus and in the Apostles as the presbytery of the Church. Yea and we love the prophets also, &c." are doubtless best explained on the supposition that men had begun to regard the Gospel narrative and the writings of the Apostles as in some sense inspired repositories of divine teaching.

Although such expressions are sufficiently indefinite to include the substance of the oral teaching of the Church or even of Apocryphal Gospels, it may be claimed that the presumption is strongly in favour of the view that reference is made to those writings, which each generation of the Church has handed down to its successors.

To this or to the beginning of the next period belong the "Shepherd of Hermas," the Remains of Papias, and the "Teaching of the Apostles." "The Shepherd of Hermas," which was perhaps written early in the 2nd cent., contains no direct quotation from O.T. or N.T. The language shews almost certain coincidences with 1 Cor., Eph., Jas., 1 Peter, the influence of the teaching of St James being especially noticeable. The writer seems to have been acquainted with the Synoptic Gospels; and there are some grounds for supposing that he was familiar with St

John's Gospel and the Apocalypse. The testimony of Papias, Bp of Hierapolis, is of exceptional importance, partly because he was in all probability a disciple of the Apostle St John, partly because he is the first who alludes by name to the writers of the Gospels. His chief work, written apparently about 120, was An Exposition of Oracles of the Lord, in 6 books, of which unfortunately only a few fragments have been preserved to us in the pages of Eusebius (Hist. Eccles.). Papias' work was not the formation of a new or improved Gospel, but an exposition of the recognised narratives, with illustrations from ecclesiastical traditions, respecting our Lord's life and teaching, which were not included in the recognised Gospel narratives. In the brief extant fragments he refers by name to the Gospels of St Matthew and St Mark. Eusebius, who was acquainted with his work, records that Papias quoted from 1 John and 1 Pet. and acknowledged the Apocalypse to be "divinely inspired." According to very probable testimony Papias referred also in his book expressly to the Gospel of St John.

The absence of any reference to St Luke and the Epp. of St Paul is strange. It is possible that at that early period in the history of the Christian Church the fusion of the Jewish and Gentile elements of the Church was still imperfect, and that Papias wished to abstain from the use of those Apostolic writings in which the spirit of Judaism was less pronounced. At the same time no great stress need be laid upon the alleged omission. The extant remains of Papias are limited to a few lines, and there is nothing extraordinary in the fact that these fragments contain no allusion to one of the Gospels or even to one group of N.T. writings. The selection of such extracts as have been preserved is due to the special purpose of Eusebius. Any omission is to be tested by Eusebius' plan of only giving extracts from early writers so far as they were illustrative of their use of certain disputed books: and as in his own time the Pauline Epistles were not questioned, it is not to be expected that his extracts would supply any evidence as to their recognition by Papias.

The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles. The Christian element of this strange work is probably to be assigned to this period. It contains no direct citation from a book in the N.T. It draws, however, very largely from St Matthew's Gospel, and clearly alludes to St Luke. Probable coincidences of language occur with 1 Cor., 1 Pet. and Jude, possibly also with Eph., 2 Pet. (?) and Apoc. The reference to "the Gospel" in such expressions as "the Lord commanded in His Gospel" (viii. 2), "according to the teaching of the Gospel" (xi. 3), "as ye have in the Gospel" (xv. 3, 4), when compared with the similar usage of Ignatius, seems to presuppose acquaintance with a Gospel narrative generally recognised in the Church.

(?) 120-170. The Age of the Greek Apologists. The Christian literature of this period is of far more extended range than that of its predecessor. It marks the first real contact of the Christian with the heathen world. Christian writers contend for the existence of the Church, both in the defence of the Church against the abuse of secular power, and in the maintenance of Christian doctrine against the misrepresentations of Jewish foes and the perversions of the Gnostics.

The Epistle to Diognetus—an anonymous work—consists of two fragments, of which the latter portion is sometimes assigned to about 130, while the first part is possibly of yet earlier date. In both portions the influence of Johannine and Pauline teaching is indisputable. Although not containing any direct citations, it presents clear coincidences of language with St Matthew and the Acts, and allusions to the language of Rom., 1, 2 Cor., Gal.; while the similarity of phraseology with Eph., Phil., 1 Tim., Tit., 1 Pet. renders it probable that these Epistles were also known to the writer.

Justin Martyr († circa 148) was a Samaritan Greek by birth and for a considerable time a resident in Rome. In his references to the Gospel narrative he relies upon "the Memoirs of the Apostles." The general scope of these allusions corresponds with the contents of our Synoptic Gospels; and when we find in addition to this a general coincidence of language with the words used in the Synoptist narrative, it is hard to resist the conclusion that the Gospels to which he refers were at any rate in the main our Canonical Gospels. Objections to this view, based upon the inexactness of his quotations, do not affect the accuracy of our main contention. For in most cases the verbal similarity with our Gospels is far more striking than the divergency. Again, the analogous inexactness of his quotations from the O.T. is sufficient to refute these objections; an investigation into them shews that he attached no special importance to literal accuracy in citation. It is a disputed question, whether he was acquainted with the fourth Gospel or not. All that can be said is, (a) that he refers to a doctrine of the Logos, (b) that the absence of any quotation from that Gospel in his writings would be more strange, if his allusions to Epistles which we know he accepted were less faint. The Apocalypse he quotes by name (Dial. § 81); and his acquaintance with St Paul's Epistles is confirmed by clear coincidences of language with Rom., 1, 2 Cor., 1, 2 Thess., Col., Phil., 1 Tim. It is claimed that "the Catholic Epistles and the Epp. to Tit. and Philem. alone of the writings of the N.T. have left no impression on the genuine or doubtful works of Justin Martyr" (Westcott, Canon, p. 172).

The writings of Justin contain the first clear proof of the beginnings of a N.T. Canon. He records the fact that a collection of Apostolic writings was read along with the prophets in the religious services of the Christian Church on Sundays, and formed the subject of comment and practical exhortation. (See Apol. i. 67.)

From the hand of Dionysius, Bp of Corinth

—a younger contemporary of Justin—we have a few important fragments (preserved by Eusebius), which contain allusions to St Matt., 1 Thess., Apoc. His evidence is important as shewing that at Corinth the Ep. of Clement was publicly read in the Churches. Now as that Epistle appeals to St Paul's Ep. to Cor., we may feel practically certain that Pauline Epistles were read in Dionysius' time in the public services. Dionysius' language points also to the recognition of Christian Scriptures. He speaks of them as "the Scriptures of the Lord," and denounces any attempt to adulterate them.

The Fragments of Melito, Bp of Sardis (circa 170), contain clear traces of the influence of St John's teaching and writings, preserve allusions to various N.T. books, and testify to the use of N.T. Scriptures in Christian worship.

The writings of Theophilus, Bp of Antioch (circa 170), shew acquaintance with our four Gospels, and contain clear coincidences of language with most of the Pauline Epp., Heb., 1 Pet., and very possibly with 2 Pet. His testimony is also of importance on account of his declaration that the writers of the N.T. books were divinely inspired.

A few extracts from the Memoirs of Hegesippus (who died about 180) contain allusions to the Gospels of St Matthew and St Luke, and possibly of St John, but their interest for our purpose lies chiefly in the separation which he makes between "the Gospels" and Apocryphal writings.

At this point we may notice the so-called Muratorian Fragment on the Canon published by Muratori at Milan in 1740. This is a Latin MS. of the 7th or 8th cent., apparently the translation of a Greek document, which purported to come from the hand of a contemporary of Pius, Bp of Rome (circa 139—154). It probably represents the opinion of the Roman Church on the subject of the N.T. Scriptures in the latter part of the 2nd century. In its un mutilated condition the Fragment, which opens with the last words of a sentence referring to St Mark's Gospel, almost certainly began with a mention of St Matthew. It speaks of St John's as the fourth Gospel, and remarks upon the unity and inspiration of the Gospel narratives. The Acts are mentioned as the work of St Luke. The Fragment enumerates 13 Epistles of St Paul, those to Churches in the order of 1, 2 Cor., Eph., Phil., Col., Gal., 1, 2 Thess., Rom., and those to individuals in the order of Philem., Tit., 1, 2 Tim. Two Epistles are expressly excluded on the ground of their being forged "in the name of Paul," one to the Laodiceans, the other to the Alexandrines. The Epistle of St Jude and two Epp. of St John (probably 2nd and 3rd) are also acknowledged. The Apocalypses of St John and St Peter are also received, but it is added that "some" objected to the latter being read in the Church. The Shepherd of Hermas is excluded from the Apostolic writings, and certain Apocryphal compositions are denounced. It may be taken for granted that the omission of 1 Pet. and 1 Joh. is due to the mutilated condition of the Fragment, since the genuineness of these Epp. was at this time practically undisputed. It may be questioned whether the omission of Heb. and Jas. is not to be accounted for in the same way. The Apocalypse of Peter is the only book here acknowledged which is not found in our Canon; and the mention of doubts as to its rightful position tacitly recognises the authority of the other writings.

Further important testimony as to the extent of the N.T. Scriptures recognised about this date in the Churches of the E. and W. is supplied by the two early versions, Syriac and Latin, which contained the books most usually read in the Christian services.

The Peshitto or Syriac Version of the N.T. was probably made for the Syrian Church of Edessa and the neighbouring district about the middle of the 2nd cent. In its earliest form it seems to have included all the books of our N.T. Canon with the exception of 2, 3 John, 2 Pet., Jude and the Apocalypse. The interest of this version is increased when we remember that the language represents the vernacular spoken in Palestine at the time of the Apostles.

The Old Latin Version, which represents the testimony of the early African Church (not the Roman, in which Greek was the prevalent language for the first two or three centuries), seems to have existed late in the second century. The only books wanting in it are Heb., Jas., 2 Pet.

The testimony of these two versions deserves especial attention. (a) It represents the official and public approbation of Churches; (b) of the books included in our Canon only one (i.e. 2 Pet.) is not found in either Eastern or Western N.T.; (c) no Apocryphal book is introduced; (d) the translations illustrate the need that was felt of extending to foreign Churches the knowledge of the Greek Apostolic writings recognised as sacred and authoritative.

The evidence to be obtained from this period would be incomplete without some notice of the confirmatory testimony supplied by the chief heretical systems. The heretics, who represent partial views of Christian teaching, constantly sought to recommend their position by appeals to Apostolic writings, which they could safely assume would be received by all. If therefore their range of Scripture is limited, it is commended to us on grounds of special security, and is assured to us by the very conditions of heretical approbation.

The teaching of the Ophites—one of the earliest heretical systems—offers undoubted witness to St John's Gospel; and extracts from their writings shew acquaintance also with St Matt. and St Luke, with Rom., 1, 2 Cor., Gal., Eph. and possibly also to Heb. and Apoc. Those Ebionites, who are represented by the Clementine Homilies, were animated by the utmost hatred of St Paul, but accepted a form of Gospel narrative. Basilides, an Egyptian, writing in Hadrian's reign (117–138), although availing himself of independent sources of tradition, clearly refers (in the extracts preserved by Hippolytus) to St Matt.,

St Luke, St John, Rom., 1, 2 Cor., Eph., Col. and 1 Pet. (?). His reference to St John is especially noteworthy as probably the earliest direct allusion to the 4th Gospel. Valentinus, who flourished in Egypt shortly after Basilides, seems to have accepted the Scriptures of the Christian Church; and Heracleon, his friend and disciple, wrote the earliest known commentary on N.T. writings, which certainly included St Luke and St John. Fragments of Heracleon's Commentary found in the writings of Origen and Clement reveal a belief in the inspiration of the N.T. Scriptures and the early custom of ranking them with the O.T. Ptolemaeus, another follower of Valentinus, appears to have made use of our Four Gospels and of the Pauline Epp., Rom., 1 Cor., Gal., Eph., Col.

The sect of the Marcosians seems to have been familiar with the Four Gospels, and probably also with the Apocalypse.

With Marcion of Sinope, who taught at Rome about 140, is associated the first formation of a Canon of Apostolic writings. In his hostility to Judaism he not only excluded the O.T., but also selected for his purpose only such Apostolic writings as appeared to him free from taint of Judaism. With this idea he accepted as his Gospel a revision or modification of St Luke, and as Epistles the Pauline Epp. Gal., 1, 2 Cor., Rom., 1, 2 Thess., Laodiceans (=Ephes.), Col., Philem., Phil. (the order according to Tertullian). The fact of Marcion having selected a Canon out of the books recognised by the Church is proof that Apostolic writings were at that period widely known, and suggests the probability that in his time a Canon of N.T. Scripture existed in certain Churches.

Tatian, an Assyrian and a disciple of Justin Martyr, is said to have adopted like Marcion a Canon of his own. His extant work "An Address to the Greeks" contains allusions to St Matt., St John, Rom., 1 Cor., Apoc.; and other fragments shew his acceptance of Gal., Eph., Tit. His greatest work was the "Diatessaron," a harmony of the Four Gospels. The attempt to prove that this could not refer to our Four Gospels has recently been exploded by the publication of the Armenian Version of Ephrem Syrus' (+343) Commentary on Tatian's Diatessaron, which includes passages from the Four Gospels and the Acts.

The Montanist movement, which took its rise in Phrygia about the middle of the 2nd cent. and spread very extensively, was based in its simplest form on the recognition of the special operation of the Holy Spirit as the "Paraclete," an undoubted proof of the use and influence of the fourth Gospel. Accused of subverting Christian doctrine, the Montanists defended themselves by the assertion that the New Revelation of the Paraclete was supplementary to, not subversive of, the Apostolic teaching; this defence implied the recognised authority of the Apostolic writings. The Alogi, who may possibly be identified with the extreme opponents of Montanism, rejected St John's Gospel and Apocalypse probably as countenancing too strongly the doctrine of spiritual gifts. The fact that they ascribed the 4th Gospel to Cerinthus is interesting; for in support of their view they could not appeal to any tradition, but rested their opinion upon internal evidence.

Celsus, the chief literary opponent of Christianity in the 2nd cent. (c. 170), appears to have quoted the Four Gospels as authoritative records of the life of Christ and to have made use of Gal., 1 Cor., 2 Thess., 1 Tim.

To sum up the evidence. Within a hundred years from the destruction of Jerusalem the chief Apostolical writings had been collected, read in the Churches, and regarded as inspired. Of the Canonical Books of our N.T. only one, i.e. 2 Peter, has so far failed to receive satisfactory testimony. The position of the Four Gospels, Acts, 13 Epp. of St Paul, 1 Pet., 1 John, and, so far as we can see, Apocalypse, was at the close of this period that of authoritative Scripture. Concerning the other books, Heb., Jas., 2, 3 John, Jude, doubts in some quarters were entertained; and in their case it may be noted (a) that Heb. and Jas. seem to be referred to in the earliest Christian writing (Clem. Rom.); (b) that the local doubts respecting them turned upon the question of their Apostolicity; (c) that 2, 3 John and Jude from their brevity and limited range may well have escaped observation or failed to obtain wide circulation, and are not opportune for purposes of citation. The obscurity in which 2 Pet. remained must apparently have been due either to the peculiar nature of its contents or to some special circumstances, which retarded its early dissemination.

170-303. From the Time of Irenæus to the Persecution of Diocletian. The important writings of this period, which mark the new intellectual ascendancy of the Church, illustrate from different quarters of the Christian world the general, though not absolutely uniform, agreement which prevailed respecting the range of the N.T. Scriptures.

The Churches of Gaul. The Letter of the Churches of Lyons and Vienne (Euseb. H. E. v. 1), written immediately after the persecution of Antoninus Verus (177) to "the brethren in Asia and Phrygia," contains unmistakable allusions to St Luke, St John, Acts, Rom., Cor., Eph., Phil., 1 Tim., 1 Pet., 1 John, Apoc. Pothinus, the Bishop of Lyons, who perished, at the great age of 90, in this persecution, formed a link with the Apostolic age. He is said to have derived his Christian teaching from the disciples of St John.

Irenæus, Bp. of Lyons, born in Asia Minor about 120, as the disciple of Polycarp, the pupil of St John, and as the friend and successor of Pothinus, in a very direct manner inherited the traditions of the Apostolic generation. He seems also to have enjoyed an intimate acquaintance with the customs and condition of the Church in Rome. His testimony therefore demands especial attention, representing as it does tradition from Apostolic times and acquaintance with the usages of three groups of Christian communities, Asiatic, Roman and Gallican. His chief work "Against Heresies," written about 180, may fairly claim to embody the orthodox views of the Church of his day. In his writings allusions are made, it is asserted, to every book of the N.T. except Philem., Jas., 2 Pet., 3 John, Jude, books which from their brevity may either have afforded no material for purposes of reference or have failed to secure as yet any widespread recognition. Fanciful as were his views respecting the symbolism of the number "four," his mention of the "quadruple gospel," which must clearly be identified with the four Canonical Gospels, implies that their especial recognition had long been established (c. Hæc. iii. 11. 8). His quotations from the N.T. are made in the same way as from the O.T. Writing with exceptional knowledge of Christian controversies, his language respecting the authority of Scripture would reflect the deliberate opinion of the Church in his lifetime.

The Church of Alexandria. Titus Flavius Clemens (165-220) succeeded Pantaenus in the presidency of the celebrated school of theological instruction at Alexandria. He appears by his usage to acknowledge the authoritative character of all the books of our N.T. with the exception of Jas., 2 Pet., 3 John. His work entitled "Outlines" is stated by Cassiodorus († 576) to have included notes on the Catholic Epistles 1 Pet., Jas. 1, 2 John. He was of opinion that the Ep. to the Hebrews was to be received as a Greek translation by St Luke of the writing of St Paul. Clement freely alludes in his writings to the works of Clement Romanus, Shepherd of Hermas, Ep. of Barnabas, Apoc. of Peter, &c., but though acquainted with their contents he does not recognise them in the same way as the Apostolic Scriptures. He frequently refers to the Apocalypse of St John, and we possess in Latin his notes on the 2nd Epistle. He nowhere refers to Jas. or 2 Pet.

Origen (180-253), who succeeded Clement in the superintendence of the Catechetical school (203), contributes by his matchless learning, persevering labours and extensive journeys something more than the evidence of a single Alexandrian scholar. He acknowledges the sacred authority of the same books as Clement had received. He is the first to refer by name to Jas., although not as if he held it to be of Canonical authority. He refers to Jude, but implies that its position was disputed². The Ep. to Heb. he pronounces to be "Pauline in thought but not in language and style," and therefore prefers to withhold his opinion on the matter of its authorship: "Who it was who wrote the Epistle God only knows certainly." He quotes the Apocalypse as Apostolical in origin and canonical in authority. He alludes to Clem. Rom., Shepherd of Hermas and Ep. of Barnabas; but although he may have read and recognised them for private use, there is no evidence that he considered them of equal rank with the Scriptures of the N. T.

² We cannot place any confidence in the genuineness of the quotations from 2 Pet. occurring in the Latin Version of his Homilies.

His recognition of the Apostolical Scriptures as standing on a footing of complete equality with the writings of the O. T. is shewn by the phrase "the Scriptures believed by us to be divine both of the Old and of the New Covenant" (De Princip. iv. 1).

Dionysius, one of Origen's successors in the school of Alexandria, and afterwards Bishop of the same place (248), appears in a fragment of his writings (preserved by Eusebius) to have regarded Heb. as a Pauline Epistle; he also quotes Jas. and implies that he acknowledges 2, 3 John. His testimony, however, is chiefly remarkable for the fact, that in his writings we first find expressions of doubt respecting the Apocalypse. Apparently he accepted its Canonicity and acknowledged its inspiration, but on the ground of its style denied it to be the work of St John. His opinion, though unsupported by any external evidence, is of special interest as affording proof, (a) that the limits of the Canon were not yet fixed, and (b) that great freedom of criticism was permitted and exercised at that early time, and that hence the admission of books into the Canon was no mere automatic process of blind veneration for reputedly Apostolic works.

The Churches of North Africa. Tertullian's writings belong to the close of the 2nd and the beginning of the 3rd century. His later works were written after he had embraced Montanism. He appeals, as to inspired Scripture, to the Four Gospels, the Acts, 13 Epp. of St Paul, 1 John, 1 Pet. The Apocalypse he quotes without expressing any doubt as to its Apostolic origin or claim to Canonicity. Jude he once quotes as an Apostolic work. "Hebrews" he considers to be the work of Barnabas, and, although placing it above "the Shepherd of Hermas," does not include it among the N. T. Scriptures. He shews no sign of being acquainted with Jas., 2, 3 John, 2 Pet.

Tertullian's position is reproduced by Cyprian, Bp of Carthage († 256), who makes no use of the disputed Epistles but constantly refers to the Apocalypse.

The Church of Rome. The testimony of this Church is sufficiently represented by the Muratorian Fragment (referred to above, p. 15), and by Hippolytus, Bp of Portus, who in the early part of the 3rd cent. defended the Canonicity of St John's Gospel and the Apocalypse.

The Churches of Asia Minor. It will be remembered that of the disputed books Irenæus, who represents the tradition of Asia Minor, recognised 2 John and Apoc. Gregory of Neo-Cæsarea in Pontus (circ. 230), who seems to have known Jas. and Firmilian of Cæsarea in Cappadocia (circ. 260), who seems to allude to 2 Pet., represent the influence of Origen's teaching. Methodius, Bp of Lycia († 311), an opponent of Origen, acknowledges the Apocalypse, and shews acquaintance with Heb., though not esteeming it of Pauline authorship.

The Syrian Churches. The Christian Church of this region is represented by the Peshitto Version (see above, p. 16), which omits of our Canon 2 Pet., 2, 3 John, Jude and the Apocalypse, but includes all the other writings. Serapion, Bp of Antioch (190), who found a "Gospel of Peter" in use at Rhossus in Cilicia, although not prohibiting its being read, criticised its character by the light of the recognised writings of the Apostles.

Pamphilus, a learned presbyter of Cæsarea, who perished in the persecution of Diocletian (307), is the last name that we need record in this period. There is good evidence to shew that he recognised Heb. as a Pauline Epistle, accepted the Apocalypse, and acknowledged seven Catholic Epistles.

In conclusion it appears that at the beginning of the 4th century all the books of the N. T. were known in the Churches of Alexandria and Cæsarea, but that doubts respecting 2, 3 John, 2 Pet. hindered their complete recognition. In the Churches of Rome and Africa, Jas. and 2 Pet. had not yet been acknowledged, and the Ep. to the Heb. was excluded from the Pauline writings. The Apocalypse was generally received, except in the Syrian Churches and by Dionysius of Alexandria.

Very striking is the unbroken unanimity in the acceptance of the 4 Gospels, Acts, 13 Epp. of St Paul, 1 John, 1 Pet. The doubts regarding the Canonicity of the disputed books are based upon the uncertainty as to their Apostolic origin. Of the shorter of these Epp. it is possible to assume that they escaped observation rather than called for unfavourable criticism.

From the Persecution of Diocletian (303) to the Close of the Canon. It was needful that the tradition thus generally established throughout the Church should receive some final sanction. Hitherto indeed the tendency towards a uniform Canon of Scripture does not appear to have produced any attempt at rigid definition. The persecution of Diocletian gave the required impulse. The decree for the confiscation of the sacred Christian writings, which constituted an ingenious part of the persecutor's policy, defeated its own purpose: it advertised to the whole world the influence of the acknowledged Christian Scriptures, and forced upon the attention of the Church their infinite superiority as compared with all other ecclesiastical writings. The books indicated by the decree must for the purposes of the secular power and of the Church have been in some way identified. For some tried to evade the penalties of law by the concealment of the sacred Scriptures and the production of Apocryphal books before the civil authorities. Many too in the Church who clamoured for severe penalties against those who surrendered the sacred Books, insisted that the limits of the Collection were already practically recognised although not officially ordained. Those who surrendered their Bibles were called "Traditores," and the feeling of animosity against such offenders—which eventually occasioned the important Donatist schism—is hardly intelligible unless the limits of a canon had been generally acknowledged. That such limits were known is implied by Eusebius in his description of the burning of the Christian Scriptures which he himself witnessed. Eusebius, however, who by his learning, travels and wide acquaintance enjoyed peculiar advantages for the task, seems to recognise the need of a still more exact definition, and accordingly records in his History the various opinions respecting the books still under dispute. He classes the writings which were known and used in the Churches as (1) "acknowledged" (Homologoumena), (2) "disputed" (Antilegomena), (3) "heretical," "spurious" (Notha). With this 3rd Class, which included purely Apocryphal and heretical works, we need not here concern ourselves. The 2nd Class he subdivided into (a) "books generally recognised," i.e. Jas., 2 Pet., 2, 3 John, Jud., whose Apostolic authorship in spite of partial or local opposition was slowly finding acceptance, and (b) "the non-genuine books," e.g. Shepherd of Hermas, Acts of Paul, Apoc. of Peter, Ep. of Barnabas, and (with a query) Apoc. of John, whose contents were popularly reckoned inferior in tone and whose Apostolic authorship was very generally disallowed. Eusebius' 1st Class comprised the Four Gospels, the Acts, 14 Epp. of St Paul (including Heb.), 1 Pet., 1 John and (with a query) the Apoc.

His own opinion respecting Heb. and Apoc. was of a somewhat fluctuating character. He seems to have reckoned Heb. among the Pauline Epp. on the supposition that, having been written in Hebrew by St Paul, it was translated into Greek by Clement of Rome. He was not himself convinced of the Apostolic authorship of the Apoc., and was content to let its claim to Apostolicity determine the question whether it should be assigned to the "acknowledged" or to the inferior class of "disputed" writings.

The testimony of Eusebius like that of Origen derives peculiar interest from the fact that he does not merely give his own opinion or the practice of a local Church, but was enabled by his studies, friendships and travels to ascertain the general custom of the Church prevalent not only in different places but in the same place at different periods. Eusebius was famous for his extensive knowledge in his own lifetime; and he it was whom Constantine, after embracing Christianity, commissioned to prepare 50 copies of the text of the Canonical Scriptures. The learning and discretion of Eusebius sufficiently represented the most educated opinion of the Church, even in matters on which he spoke with the greatest hesitation. His doubts upon the Apoc. may have been satisfied by assigning it a place as an Appendix at the close of the Canon. The action of the Emperor at any rate hastened the process of determining the limits of the Canon, and the influence of Eusebius tended to confirm the decision of popular usage.

The list of Athanasius (367) (Ep. Fest. i. 767) which represents the opinion of the Church of Alexandria agrees precisely with the contents of our N. T., and gives no sign of hesitation as to the acceptance of the Apoc. The Shepherd of Hermas and the Teaching of the Apostles are mentioned, but merely as writings useful for purposes of instruction. Other representative lists of the Eastern Church, e.g. of Cyril of Jerusalem (+ 386) and Gregory of Nazianzus (+ 389), agree with the Athanasian Canon except in the exclusion of the Apocalypse. The Council of Laodicea (circ. 360) laid down in its 59th Canon that only Canonical Books should be read in the Church; and the spurious list (added probably to this Canon at the close of the same century), giving as the Canonical writings of the N. T. the same collection of books as Athanasius, represents the ultimate decision of the Eastern Church. For although for some time a smaller Canon of the N. T. was received by the Church in North Syria, as is shewn by the absence of reference to 2 Pet., 2, 3 John, Jud., Apoc. in the writings of e.g. Chrysostom (+ 407) and Theodore of Mopsuestia (+ 429), these books seem to have been added to the Peshitto in the 5th or 6th cent. The Armenian and Ethiopic Versions contain the disputed Epp. And the Quini-Sextine Council (692) ratified the list of the Laodicean Canon.

In the W. the disputed books received conclusive sanction from the authoritative approval of Jerome and Augustine. Jerome has no hesitation in recognising their Canonicity upon "the authority of the ancients," and nowhere speaks of other ecclesiastical writings as Holy Scripture. Augustine supported the same Canon: he entertained doubts as to the Pauline authorship of Heb., but nowhere questions its Canonical authority. The opinion of the two master theologians of the W. received confirmation from the 3rd Council of Carthage, 397, which specifies the Canonical Scriptures of the N. T. to be "four books of the Gospels, one book of the Acts of the Apostles, thirteen Epistles of the Apostle Paul, one Epistle of the same to the Hebrews, two Epistles of the Apostle Peter, three of John, one of James, one of Jude, one book of the Apocalypse of John."

The decision of the Provincial Councils does not mark any new step. It was Jerome's Biblical work which practically put the seal of Canonicity upon the collection of N. T. Scriptures which he had revised for his Vulgate Version. The authoritative recognition of his Canon by Innocent I. (405) and Gelasius (492—496) added only a formal confirmation to the work which time and popular feeling had gradually completed.

Note on Secondary and on Apocryphal Books.—A few words may here be given to the secondary ecclesiastical writings. Of these some were, as we have seen, very generally read in the Churches for purposes of instruction, others only found favour in particular districts. The contrast which they present to the Canonical Writings illustrates with startling vividness the limits of Apostolic inspiration, and justifies the wisdom of the ages, which had determined the bounds of Canonicity.

1. The secondary books comprise the writings which came or professed to come from men of the Apostolic generation.

(a) The Ep. of Clement was written from Rome to the Corinthian Church about A.D. 96 with the purpose of urging the members of that Church to peace and unity. It was for a long time read publicly in the Church of Corinth and elsewhere. It is found (along with another so-called Epistle wrongly bearing Clement's name) in the Codex Alexandrinus placed after the Apocalypse, and follows Jude in the list given by the Apostolic Canons (Can. LXXXV. al. LXXXVI.). It was frequently quoted by the Fathers, but was never classed with Canonical Scripture.

(b) The Epistle of Barnabas. This writing dates probably from the first half of the 2nd cent. The Epistle is characterised by its strong antagonism to Judaism. In consequence probably of its seeming claim to quasi-Apostolic authorship it obtained in the Church of Alexandria favourable recognition. Jerome mentions its being read in the Churches in his day among the Apocryphal writings. In the Codex Sinaiticus it stands after the Apocalypse; and in the list of contents of the Codex Claromontanus it stands before the Apocalypse.

(c) The Shepherd of Hermas, a product of the first half of the 2nd cent., approaches most nearly in tone the writings of the N.T., and the visions, of which it consists, may possibly reflect the influence of the Apoc. The "Hermas" is not to be identified with the name mentioned in Rom. xvi. 14; the writer of the Muratorian Fragment asserts that the "Hermas" who was the author of this Ep. "wrote it very lately in the city of Rome, while the Bishop Pius his brother filled the see of the Roman Church." It represents a "legal" tendency of Christian thought, but is only incorrectly associated with Ebionism. Tertullian expresses himself very strongly in its condemnation, and states that it "was classed by every Council of the Churches among the false and Apocryphal books." It attained however very general popularity, and was commonly read in public. In the Codex Sinaiticus it comes next after the Ep. of Barnabas; in the list of Cod. Claromontanus it follows after the Apocalypse and the Acts of the Apostles. It also found its way into Latin Bibles. Eusebius and Athanasius and Jerome, though excluding it from the Canon, class it among the "disputed" books of secondary authority.

(d) The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, the text of which has only recently been recovered, found special favour at Alexandria. By Athanasius it is classed with the Shepherd of Hermas. So far as its character has at present been determined, it appears to be a Christian adaptation—early in the 2nd century—of possibly a Jewish book of religious instruction.

2. The large literature of purely Apocryphal writings which grew up round the Canonical Books seems to have been for the most part composed for purposes of religious instruction, many of them representing heretical lines of thought and advocating special types of unorthodox Christian doctrine.

(a) The most ancient of these (if indeed it should be counted among them) is probably the so-called Gospel according to the Hebrews, referred to by Clement and Origen, and classed by Eusebius with the Ep. of Barnabas and the Shepherd of Hermas. Jerome rendered it into Greek and Latin. It seems to have preserved an early oral tradition of sayings and deeds of our Lord. Only a few fragments of it remain.

(b) The Gospel, Apocalypse and Preaching of Peter. Important fragments of the Gosp. and Apoc., discovered in Egypt, were published (1892) by the French scholar, Bouriant. Serapion, Bp of Antioch (c. 190), mentions the Gosp. as in use at Rhossus (ap. Eus. H. E. vi. 12). The Apoc. is mentioned in the Muratorian Fragment (see p. 15). For the newly discovered fragments see the small edition by Robinson and James (Camb. Univ. Press, 1892). The Preaching of Peter was used by Aristides in his Apology (c. 130).

(c) The Gospel (inaccurately termed the Protevangelium) of St James, which relates the legendary history of the Virgin Mary up to the visit of the Wise Men, was known to Origen, and was probably written in the 2nd century.

(d) and (e) The Pseudo-Matthew of the 5th cent. and the Gospel of Thomas, a work possibly of the 3rd cent., deal with fabulous incidents attributed to our Lord's birth and infancy.

(f) The Gospel of Nicodemus, of which the earliest part is possibly to be identified with the Acts of Pilate, describes the Passion of Jesus and the Descent into Hades. The date of the second half is probably the 4th cent. The first portion, if the same as the Acts of Pilate alluded to by Justin Martyr, must be very early; but this is much disputed.

(g) The so-called Epistle to the Laodiceans, sometimes found in Latin MSS. of the Pauline Epistles, is merely a cento of extracts from Pauline writings. Its origin is to be explained by the desire to supply an Epistle which would correspond with the one mentioned in Col. iv. 16. It is extant now in Latin, but was probably first current in Greek. It is not to be identified with the Ep. to the Laodiceans in Marcion's Canon, by which he intended our Ep. to Ephes. As it is first mentioned by Theodoret of Mopsuestia († 429) and Jerome († circ. 420), we may conjecture that it was composed in the 4th cent.

(h) The Acts of Paul and Thecla are referred to by Tertullian, and can hardly be later than the latter part of the 2nd cent. They describe how the Virgin Thecla devotedly followed the Apostle St Paul, and heroically endured persecution and was delivered from the wild beasts. The book was clearly written in praise of Virginité, and of the exaggerated form of asceticism practised by the Encratites.

(i) The Epistola Abgari ad Jesum and the Epistola Jesu ad Abgarum belong to the legend which told how Abgar, King of Edessa, wrote to Jesus begging Him to come to Edessa and cure him of a sore disease; how Jesus wrote in reply blessing Abgar for his faith and promising to send to him one of his disciples; and how Thaddeus, one of the seventy, after the Lord's Ascension, healed King Abgar. The legend in one form was well known to Eusebius, and the original composition is probably not later than the middle of the 3rd cent.

Besides these, there are many other less important Apocryphal writings (Gospels, Acts and Apocalypses), which cannot here be enumerated.

APPENDIX ON THE SACRED BOOKS OF PRÆ-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS.

BY THE RIGHT REV. BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., LORD BISHOP OF DURHAM.

The Sacred Books of præ-Christian religions, which form the authoritative records of existing systems, are all Asiatic. At the same time they represent the three great groups of languages,—themselves the spontaneous expression of three fundamental types of character—which had their origin in the Asiatic birth-field of nations, the Turanian, the Aryan, the Shemitic.

The representative Books of the Shemitic language, which form our own Old Testament, have been already considered. It remains to give some account of those which embody the religious thoughts of the highest civilization of the Turanian and Aryan races in Asia, the Chinese on the one hand and the Indian and Iranian on the other¹. Within the last few years these have been made accessible to English students in trustworthy translations, and a large part of them are already included in the series of Sacred Books of the East edited by Professor Max Müller (Oxford, 1879 ff.).

I. Turanian Group. THE SACRED BOOKS OF CHINA.

One of the earliest and most typical forms of Turanian language has been spontaneously stereotyped in Chinese, where every character is a word; and the Sacred Books of Confucianism are the absolute standard of its classical purity. But these Books do not stand alone. The indigenous sacred literature of China consists of two distinct parts, the literature of Confucianism, and the literature of Taoism. The Buddhistic literature is of later and external origin, and does not fall within our notice. See S. Beal, Catena of Buddhist Scriptures from the Chinese: Lectures on Buddhist Literature in China.

i. The Sacred Books of Confucianism.

The Sacred Books of Confucianism consist of two groups, (a) The primary Books (The Five King); and (b) The secondary Books (The Four Shoo).

(a) The Five King² are commonly held to have been compiled and arranged by Confucius (Kung-foo tsze, i.e. the Master Kung, † B.C. 478). Of these the first three, (1) The Shoo³ King, the Book of History (Dr Legge's Chinese Classics iii; S. B. E. iii); (2) The She⁴ King, the Book of Poetry (Dr Legge's Chinese Classics iv; S. B. E. iii); (3) The Yih King, the Book of Changes (Dr Legge, S. B. E. xvi), seem to consist in the main of records earlier than Confucius, who appears to have brought together the documents belonging to one province and to have destroyed the rest. The fourth Book Chun-tseu, Spring and Autumn, is a brief Chronicle of 722–481 B.C. compiled by Confucius (compare Dr Legge's Essay, Hong-Kong, 1872). The fifth Li-ki, Ceremonial Records ('a collection of treatises on the rules of propriety and ceremonial usage': Dr Legge, S. B. E. xxvii, xxviii), is a later compilation, and was not completed till the second cent. B.C.

(b) Besides the five King, the five 'primary classics', there are also four 'secondary classics', the four Shoo, i.e. Books of the four philosophers (Confucius, a scholar of Confucius, a grandson of Confucius, Mencius). These are (1) Lun-Fu, the digested conversations of Confucius (the Confucian

² This title was added to the Books at the time of their final revision under the former Han dynasty. The word King properly means 'the warp threads of a web, and their adjustment,' hence 'what is regular and insures regularity.' Compare Canon.

³ The character Shoo expresses 'a pencil speaking,' hence 'a written character,' and 'a written record.'

⁴ She means 'speech' and then 'poetry.'

Analects: Dr Legge, Chinese Classics i); (2) Tu-hsiao, the Great Learning (Dr Legge, l.c.); (3) Chung-Fung, the doctrine of the mean (Dr Legge, l.c.); (4) The Works of Mencius (Meng-tse + 288 B.C.; Dr Legge, Chinese Classics ii). The treatises (2) and (3) are included in the Li-Ki, Books xxxix, xxviii. To these four may be added Usian King the classic of filial piety (Dr Legge, S. B. E. iii, pp. 465 ff.).

An attempt was made to destroy the Confucian writings, with the exception of the Yih King, c. 213 B.C. under the Tsin dynasty, which built the great wall. The attempt, like that of Diocletian against the Christian Scriptures, failed. The edict requiring their destruction was repealed B.C. 191; the writings were finally collected, revised and arranged under the former Han dynasty (lasting to 24 B.C.); and the text has been preserved to the present time substantially in the form which it then assumed. The Classics were the first books printed from wooden blocks in the tenth (or sixth) century.

The Sacred Books of Confucianism make no claim to contain a revelation. The pre-Confucian writings offer many traces of a primitive faith and worship of the deepest interest, closely connected with the Akkadian belief of central Asia; and there is reason to think that the interpretation of the mysterious Yih King is to be found in Akkadian syllabaries (M. Terrien de la Couperie, quoted in Quart. Rev. July 1882). The later writings are ethical and ceremonial, treating of the organization of social life with unrivalled completeness and power. The permanence of the Chinese Empire is the witness to their practical influence.

The Shoo King, which professes to give historical memorials ranging over 1700 years from 2357 B.C. to 627 B.C., contains many passages of epic dignity (e.g. The songs of the five sons, S. B. E. iii, 79 f.; Self-devotion, id. 151, 153; The great plan, id. 140 f.; The self-containedness of a people, id. 151).

The Li-Ki announces its theme in the opening words 'always and in everything let there be reverence.' On this fundamental principle rules are laid down for the fulfilment of family relations, for the organization of the State, for education, for the formation of character, for sacrifice, for mourning. There is a calendar of the year, in which the duties of the emperor and the people are placed in a fitting relation to the physical condition of the months (Bk iv); and it is characteristic that a musical note is assigned to each season, varied in some way for each of its parts. The Book abounds in noble passages. The student will do well to read 'The death of Confucius' (S. B. E. xxvii, 138); 'Education' (id. 230 ff., 248); 'The harmony of outward and inward' (id. 395 f.); 'Great and small a whole together' (id. 404); 'The three impartialities' (S. B. E. xxviii, 281); 'Dykes' (id. 284); 'The perfect man' (id. 319); 'The scholar' (id. 405); 'The golden mean' (id. 419). Compare with the Li-Ki the Teheou-li (the rites of Teheou) translated by E. Biot, (Paris, 1851).

The She King is disappointing. Probably it suffers in translation from loss of form. One of the four parts into which it is divided contains 'Odes of the Temple and the Altar,' but these deal directly only with the imperial worship of ancestors. In one remarkable Ode 'God' (Shang-ti) is represented as speaking to King Wan (S. B. E. iii, 391 f.).

The two Books of the four Shoo, which are not included in the Li-Ki, the Confucian Analects and the works of Mencius, are both of great importance.

The Analects abound in sayings and traits of 'the Master' which vividly portray his striking personality (e.g. vi, 20; vii, 1, 17, 19, 20, 24; ix, 5; xi, 11; xiv, 2, 13, 37).

The writings of Mencius, more than anything else, secured the final supremacy of Confucianism. Though they were not formally included in the Classics till the eleventh century, they had enjoyed in substance a wide currency from the time of the philosopher. Their present form is due to a revision in the second cent. B.C. Their main interest is concentrated in the last two of the seven books into which they are divided. In these we have the most complete exposition of Mencius' teaching on human nature, which Dr Legge justly compares with that of Bp Butler. Man according to Mencius is made for virtue; but as he treats this ideal of humanity he makes it the source of that self-sufficiency which is the ruling trait of Chinese character. He gave his countrymen the type of Confucius as the attainable image of the perfect man, and for two thousand years they have rested in it.

The following passages give Mencius' views of the moral constitution of man and deserve study: ii, i, vi, 3 ff.; vi, ii, ii, 1 ff.; vii, ii, xxiv (Legge, Chinese Classics, ii, pp. 174, 326, 375).

Compare E. Faber, translated by A. B. Hutchinson, The Mind of Mencius.

For the Books of Confucianism see specially the Prolegomena to the larger edition of Dr Legge's Chinese Classics.

ii. The Sacred Books of Taoism.

The authoritative writings of Taoism, the system of Lao-tse ('the old philosopher' the elder contemporary of Confucius (born c. 600 B.C.)), are of less extent than those of Confucianism.

(a) The primary Book is the Tao-tih-King, 'the book (Classic) of the Way (Tao) and of virtue.' This has been translated into French by M. Stanislas Julien (1842), and into English by Dr Chalmers of Canton (1868). A translation is promised in the Sacred Books of the East by Dr Legge (S. B. E. iii, pp. xxi ff.). There is a good account of its contents in Dr Douglas' Confucianism, &c. pp. 186 ff. Compare Dr Legge, Religions of China, pp. 209 ff., F. H. Balfour, Tao-tih-King; and especially Watters, Lao-tse, a Study in Chinese philosophy.

Few books are more impressive and suggestive than this pregnant collection of oracular utterances. It might have been written by Heraclitus.

(b) There are also two Books of secondary authority, the Han-ying-peen, the 'Book of rewards and punishments,' and the Yin-chih-wan, the 'Book of secret blessings.' The former is translated by Dr Douglas (l. c. pp. 257 ff.), and is said to be the most popular religious book in China, being circulated gratuitously. It may be described briefly as a book of ethical proverbs of great force and truth. Some account of the latter Book is also given by Dr Douglas, l. c. 272 ff.

II. Aryan Group. THE SACRED BOOKS OF INDIA AND PERSIA.

The Aryan Sacred Books represent two distinct lines of religious development, which may be broadly described as (i) Indian and (ii) Iranian.

The Indian Books again fall into two extensive groups, (1) Brahmanic and (2) Buddhist.

The Iranian Scriptures consist of the fragments which have been collected in the Zend Avesta.

i. The Sacred Books of India.

1. Brahmanic.

The authoritative religious literature of Hinduism is theoretically distinguished as (a) Śruti, 'the hearing,' i.e. that which is heard, the voice of God, and (b) Smṛiti, recollection, tradition. Practically however the Smṛiti has the chief influence on the common faith, though in origin it is held to be less directly divine.

(a) Śruti. The primary records of revelation.

These are popularly included under the title 'the Vedas' (Veda=knowing, knowledge; comp. old-a, vid-co, wit). The writings to which this name is given exhibit very different types of thought; they belong to different dates; they were not recognised as of binding force at the same time; but they are now held in common esteem as being equally of absolute authority, self-proved, eternal.

The Vedic literature consists of three separate elements, the Mantras (the sacred text), the Brahmanas (the ritual comment), the Upanishads (the philosophic development). Properly the Mantras and Brahmanas—the practical elements—were alone Śruti, but in general account the Upanishads—the speculative element—came to be held of even higher value.

A mantra (man [mens], to think) is an expression of prayer, praise, thanksgiving, adoration. The Rishi (seer) through whom it found expression is supposed to have 'seen' it as already existing, and not in any sense to have originated it. The object to which it is directed of whatever kind, concrete or abstract, is for the time the devatā (deity) through which the divine power is manifested.

Mantras are of three kinds, (a) metrical, for loud recitation (rich, praise); (β) prose, muttered inaudibly (yajus, yaj-, āj- ios, the means by which sacrifice is effected); (γ) metrical, for chanting (sāman, probably from a root expressing calmness and evenness). From these three types of Mantra, the three chief Vedas derive their name:

(a) the Rig-Veda;

(β) the Yajur-Veda, in two forms, 'the black' (the older), and 'the white' (rearranged);

(γ) the Sama-Veda. These are several for the use of different orders of priests and are supposed to be efficacious for different orders of being. The Rig-Veda is for the Hotri, the reciter of prayers, and deals with blessings on earth: the Yajur-Veda is for the Adhvaryu, the performer of the material sacrifice, and deals with blessings of the intermediate region: the Sama-Veda is for the Udgatri, the chanter of hymns, and deals with blessings of heaven. The three together form the Trayi the triad, or trayi vidyā the threefold knowledge.

A fourth Veda was afterwards added, the Atharva-Veda. This is not reckoned with the other three in Menu, and is not used in sacrifice.

The text of the four Vedas is supposed to have been fixed by Vyāsa ('one who distributes'). Traces remain of different recensions.

It will be seen from what has been said, that there are five collections (Sanhita, συνθεσις) of Mantras.

The Mantras of the Rig-Veda are of the greatest importance. These consist of 1017+11 (later) Hymns, divided into ten Mandālas (circles). They are assigned to some very early but uncertain date (1200 or 1100 B.C.). They have for the most part been gathered from different and even rival ritual uses; and belong to the close rather than to the beginning of a period of religious development; and it is a popular mistake to suppose that they are the spontaneous outpouring of primitive devotion. They are rather compositions of a small (perhaps priestly) class, though they are not all adapted for sacrificial purposes.

The Hymns of the Yajur- and Sama-Vedas are borrowed and adapted from the Rig-Veda. The Atharva-Veda has many Hymns from the Rig-Veda, but it has also numerous additional Hymns, and prose formulas for incantation and blessing. It is probably a survival of independent rites. (Translations of the Hymns will be found in the works of H. H. Wilson, E. B. Cowell, Monier Williams, M. Müller. A complete translation (of the Rig-Veda-Sanhita) is promised in S. B. E.)

The Brahmanas (brahman [neut.] prayer) contain the foundation of the Vedic ritual. They are prose compositions giving rules, explanations, legends, illustrative of the text of the Mantras. They are connected (one or more) with each Sanhita. One of them, the Satyaṣṭha Brahmana, which belongs to the White Yajur-Veda, the most complete and systematic, is translated in S. B. E. xii.

The rules scattered through the Brahmanas were collected into short, connected, rules for action, Sutras (strings). One of these collections, the Grihyasutras (Rules for domestic life), is translated in S. B. E. xxix, xxx.

To the Brahmanas there were added in some cases obscure treatises called Araṇyākas, 'forest-books' (see Menu, vi, 1-33), for the use of recluses. These formed the basis of the Upanishads (upa near [not beneath], ni in, sad to sit: probably the band of scholars round the master: the sense of 'mystery,' 'that which rests below,' is said [E. B. Cowell] not to be justified).

The Upanishads contain inquiries into creation, being, metempsychosis, &c. and gave rise to the six systems (Darśhanas, दर्शनम्, views) of Hindu philosophy, of which the orthodox Vedānta is the dominant type. They contain passages of the highest speculative interest. Selections were translated into Bengali, Hindi, and English by Rammohun Roy and widely circulated in India. The eleven classical Upanishads have been translated by M. Müller in S. B. E. i, xv. Comp. Gough, The Philosophy of the Upanishads... (Trübner's Oriental Series, 1882).

(b) Śrīrīti. The secondary records of revelation.

The traditional teaching which in one form or other moulds the popular Hindu faith is embodied in writings of very different character, in Laws (Dharma-Shastras), in Epic poems (the Ramayāna and Mahabharāta), in Legends (Purānas), and in Incantations (Tantras).

Of the Dharma-Shastras (śas=cens-eo), the typical example is the Mānava-Dharma-Shastra ('the Law-book of the Mānavas'), known as the Laws of Menu. This is held to be the most sacred book next to the Vedas, and gives a striking (ideal) picture of early society. It is written in the old epic verse (śloka), and gives a metrical redaction of earlier prose rules (sutras), probably of various dates. It is not a legal code in our sense of the word, but a general collection of moral rules for life, a kind of Indian Pentateuch, resting on the fundamental assumption that every part of life is essentially religious. Menu, the mythical father of men, speaks at the beginning of the Book, and then commissions his son (Bhṛigu) to communicate the revelation.

The Laws of Menu are divided into twelve Books. The first gives some account of the origin of the Universe. Books ii-vi describe the four stages of a Brahmin's life (student, householder, anchorite, mendicant), with some account of the duties and position of women. Books vii, viii, ix lay down the duties of the governing class (or Kshatriyas), the rules of civil and criminal law, and the duties of Vaisyas and Sudras. Book x treats of mixed castes; Book xi of penances and expiations; Book xii of retribution and transmigration. Books i, vii-x, xii appear to be either later additions or to have been greatly modified.

This Law-Book marks a definite stage in the growth of Hinduism. It gives the matured doctrine of caste (i, 87 ff.; x, 4); of transmigration (xii, 39 ff.; 53 ff.; xi, 48 ff.; ii, 201); of the divine virtue of religious observances (xi, 262 ff.; xii, 94; i, 23). On the other hand it contains no recognition of idol worship, nor indeed of any public worship in temples. Nor is there in it any mention of the worship of Vishnu or Shiva (the names occur xii, 121), nor of the later Trimurti (Trinity).

There is no reason to suppose that the 'Code' was ever the legal code of a kingdom. It was rather the book of a school, and gradually grew into authority; but it has been treated as a supreme code by error.

The age of the Book in its present form is very uncertain. It has been assigned to various dates from 1280 B.C. to the 6th cent. A.D. Internal evidence seems to be in favour of a date between 200 B.C. and 200 A.D. The Book was translated by Sir W. Jones in 1794, and thus was 'the first real translation of a Sanscrit work.' There are recent translations by A. C. Burnell and E. W. Hopkins in Trübner's Oriental Series, and by G. Bühler in S. B. E. xxv.

The great Epic poems, the Ramayāna and the Mahabharāta, have had even greater influence than the Laws of Menu in shaping the popular Hindu faith. They have been called by scholars who speak with authority, 'the Bible of the Hindus,' 'the Veda of Krishna.' The former is probably the work of a single author—Valmiki—and gives in a single story a noble type of a heroic life. The latter is an Encyclopædia of tradition. It is attributed to Vyāsa, the mythical 'arranger' of the Vedas. Countless episodes are gathered round the central story of the wars of the Kaurāvas and Pandāvas, so that the whole poem, which consists of 18 Books, is about seven times the length of the Iliad and Odyssey together (100,000 ślokas of 32 syllables). By far the most interesting portion is the Bhagāvat-Gita, 'the lay of the adorable One' (vi, 830-1532), of which there are several English translations, by Thomson, K. T. Telang (S. B. E. viii), Davies (Trübner's Oriental Series), Chatterji, and (in part) in Monier Williams' Eastern Wisdom.

The poems deal with a state of society earlier than that of Menu, and probably embody legends of the warrior race which were shaped for Brahminical purposes. The Ramayāna is assigned to c. 300 B.C. The Mahabharāta was put together perhaps a hundred years afterwards, and continued to receive additions to a much later time.

The great thought which they add to Hindu belief is that of transitory Incarnations of the Divine Being, which was probably fashioned to meet the growth of Buddhism. They recognise also the Tri-murti, the threefold manifestation of the Divine as Creator, Preserver, Destroyer (Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva), and so laid the foundation for the sectarian teaching of the Purānas.

Outlines of the poems are given in Monier

Williams' Indian Wisdom with translations of selected passages. There is a translation of the Ramayāna into English verse by R. T. H. Griffith. A full analysis of the Mahābhārata is given in Talboys Wheeler's History of India, and a translation into English prose is in course of publication at Calcutta.

The Purāṇas (the 'old,' i.e. legends) contain partial and separate developments of the thoughts which lie together in the Mahābhārata. They were designed to meet popular wants. 'The women and Sudras,' it was said, 'want knowledge, and they cannot study the Vedas.' Thus the Purāṇas deal with different deities, chiefly Vishnu and Shiva, and probably include many primitive and local superstitions. There are eighteen, together with eighteen Upa-Purāṇas, of which the oldest is not earlier than the 9th cent. The Vishnu Purāṇa has been translated by H. H. Wilson.

Of the Tantras (tan 'to stretch,' not 'to believe') very little is known. They consist of dialogues, incantations, magical services. They are the sacred writings of the worshippers of the energy of Shiva, conceived of as his wife (Kali, Durga), and are connected with the most terrible abominations of Hinduism (Monier Williams, Indian Wisdom).

Students will find ample references and fuller information in the Introductions to the several translations: in Colebrooke's Misc. Essays (ed. Cowell); Sir M. Monier Williams' Indian Wisdom and later works; Goldstücker's Remains (including articles written for Chambers' Encyclopædia); Muir's Original Sanscrit Texts; and (especially) in Barth's Religions of India (in Trübner's Oriental Series).

2. Buddhistic.

The Buddhist sacred writings come to us in three languages and three forms: (a) In Pāli, from Ceylon: the Southern Canon; (b) In Sanscrit, from North India: the Northern Canon; (c) In Chinese. Of these three collections the Pāli books are the best known and the most authentic.

(a) The Southern Canon.

The extent of the (Pāli) Buddhist Scriptures has been exaggerated. It had been calculated that they formed a collection ten times as great as the English Bible. But Prof. Rhys Davids from actual numeration calculates that they contain, with all repetitions, about twice as many words as the English Bible, and that a translation into English would be about four times as long: 'the Buddhist Bible without the repetitions would probably be shorter than our own.'

Late Buddhist tradition fixes the collection of Scriptures at 'the first Council' immediately after the death of Buddha (placed at various dates from 543 B.C. to 400 B.C.). But neither external nor internal evidence is adequate to support this opinion. The Books of Ceylon probably contain the substance of the teaching which was recognised as authoritative at the Council of Patna

c. B.C. 250 (242) in the time of Asoka. This teaching was preserved orally till the first half of the last century B.C. (88-76), and Mahinda, the son of Asoka, who carried it to Ceylon, spent three years in learning it before he fulfilled his mission. The books contain many fragments of verse with prose comments. The language of the verse is obscure and irregular: that of the prose is uniform and regular in construction. The verse is evidently the older element, while the prose seems to belong to the date of the written redaction. The original language in which the teaching was moulded was probably the current dialect of the vernacular language of India in use in Asoka's kingdom at Magadha, closely akin to that which is found in some of his inscriptions, and which passed gradually into the present Pāli.

The Pāli Scriptures are divided into three groups, called Tripitaka ('the three baskets'), (1) The basket of [monastic] discipline (Vināya-Pitaka); (2) The basket of rules [for common life] (Sutta-Pitaka); (3) The basket of speculation (Abhidhamma-Pitaka).

(1) The Vināya-Pitaka gives the rule of life of the Buddhist Saṅgha, nearly the oldest and probably the most influential of all fraternities of 'monks.' A translation of the most important parts has been given in S. B. E. xiii, xvii, xx by T. W. Rhys Davids and H. Oldenberg, including the Bhikkhū-Pātimokkha, 'the words of disburdenment for mendicants'—the 'Penitential,' so to speak, of full members of the order—and the Khandhakas (the Mahāvagga, and Kullavagga) which give detailed rules for admission, dress, &c.

(2) The Sutta-Pitaka (sutta=sutra, an aphoristic rule) is by far the most worthy of study by the general reader. The Suttas are commonly arranged in five collections (Nikāyas), and representative specimens are easily accessible in the Selection of Buddhist Suttas in S. B. E. xi, by T. W. Rhys Davids, the Sutta Nipāta, S. B. E. x, by V. Fausbøll, Sept Suttas Pālis par M. P. Grimblot; the Dhammapada ('sentences of religion'), 'perhaps the most sacred and most widely read book of the Buddhist Bible,' S. B. E. x, by Max Müller; and the Jātakas, the experiences of Buddha in his various lives, the foundation of our own 'Æsop': Trübner's Oriental Series, by T. W. Rhys Davids.

Three Suttas in Prof. Rhys Davids' collection are invaluable as giving the noblest authentic picture of the Buddhist ideal, 'The book of the Great Decease' ('the Buddhist Gospel'); 'The foundation of the Kingdom of Righteousness,' which is substantially the sum of Buddha's own teaching; and 'If he should desire—.' If the student adds to these the translation of the Brahmajāla-Sutta in M. Grimblot's collection, which gives the Buddhist views on the finite order, and the Dhammapada, he will have a vivid and just conception of the primitive system of Buddhism.

(3) Of the Abhidhamma-Pitaka only fragments have been published, and so far its general interest appears to be far less than that of the other groups of writings.

(b) The Northern Canon.

The (Sanskrit) books of the Northern Canon are at present far less accessible than those of the South, and of far less value. It is said that there are 'nine books to which divine worship is offered' by the Buddhists of Nepal. Two of the most important have been translated, The Lotus of the true Law, by H. Kern, S. B. E. xxi, 'an undeveloped mystery play, in which Sakya-Muni is the chief speaker'; and the Lalitā Vistāra (from a Tibetan translation), a history of the birth and temptation of Buddha—'a kind of Buddhist Paradise Regained'—by M. Foucaux. Both books contain fragments of many dates in prose and in verse. They belong to a later stage in the development of Buddhism than the Pāli books. The Buddha of 'the Lotus' is 'an ideal, a personification, and not a person.' To a Western reader they are tedious and dull, yet not without passages of considerable beauty. An episode from the Lalitā Vistāra in Muir's Metrical Translations from the Sanskrit (Trübner), cxxli, which the translator calls 'The Indian Simeon,' is of exceptional interest. Compare for Northern Indian Buddhism E. Burnouf, Introduction à l'histoire du Bouddhisme Indien (1844, 1876), and Le Lotus de la bonne loi (1852); for Cingalese Buddhism, Spence Hardy, Eastern Monachism (1851), Manual of Buddhism (1860, 1880), Legends and Theories of the Buddhists (1866); for Burmese Buddhism the works of Bp Bigandet and Bp Titcomb; and for the Buddhism of Tibet, Schlangintweit.

The Sacred Book of the Sikhs, the Adi-Granth (compiled at the close of the xvth cent. A.D.), has been translated by Trumpp (1877); and the translation of the Gaina Sūtras in the Sacred Books of the East (xxii) gives a specimen of the Sacred Books of Jainism.

(c) The Chinese Books.

The Chinese Buddhist Books are of wholly subordinate value, except as materials for a study of the decay of a religion. Compare S. Beal, Catena of Buddhist Scriptures from the Chinese, and Lectures on Buddhist Literature in China; Bunyiu Nanjio, Catalogue of the Chinese translations of the Buddhist Tripitaka.

The Introductions of Prof. Rhys Davids to the several translations which have been referred to are invaluable; and his little book on Buddhism (S. P. C. K.) is a masterpiece. Comp. also the special works of Oldenberg and Kern.

ii. The Iranian Sacred Books.
The Zend Avesta.

The Sacred Books of Persia are for the most part on a purely literary estimate of less interest than the Sacred Books of China and India. But other claims even more than compensate for their want of form. They are the sole monuments of the East Iranian language which died out in the third century B.C. and left no descendants. They are also the sole monuments of the one Eastern religion, Zoroastrianism, which from the earliest ages has been in contact with Western thought, and has profoundly influenced at various times Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism. Moreover, Zoroastrianism is in itself the most authentic of ancient religious systems, and exhibits features which are characteristic of Turanian, Aryan, and Semitic types of thought. And if the mass of the extant writings are technical, there are passages in them which for purity and sublimity of thought yield to nothing in Gentile literature.

The body of Iranian Scriptures is known as the Zend Avesta. The word Avesta means 'text,' 'scripture,' and Zend is commonly explained as 'translation' or 'commentary.' In this sense the existing Books contain both Avesta and Zend, and the two can in some cases be separated as the ground-work and the explanatory gloss. The collection represents traditional teaching, or perhaps in part a literature, extending over a period of perhaps a thousand or eight hundred years to about 400 B.C. It is natural therefore that the separate Books should shew differences of dialect, but all present the East Iranian type, popularly known as Zend, though in two varieties, the Gathic and the Bactrian.

The extant writings are fragments of a much larger collection. This conclusion, which is adequately supported by internal evidence, is confirmed by tradition. Of the twenty-one parts (nosks) existing in the time of Alexander the Great, of which a list has been preserved, only one (the Vendidad) survived the destruction of his conquest fairly complete. On the other hand the specified contents of the twenty-one 'nosks' leave no place for the Yasna and Visparad of the present Zend Avesta; and it has been reasonably conjectured that these books were held apart from the other books, as the Pentateuch from the other books of the O. T. in the estimation of the Jews, while the 'nosks' included the 'whole religious and scientific literature' of the ancient Persians which could be recovered when the collection was made after the overthrow of the Greek dominion. The collection of the present Zend Avesta is supposed to have been begun by an Arsacid prince, probably by Vologeses the contemporary of Nero, and it was continued by the early Sassanidae (from Ardeshir A.D. 226). The completion is assigned to Shapur II (309–380 A.D.) about the time of the Council of Nicea. Of this second collection also much was lost when Zoroastrianism was almost exterminated by the Mohammedans. What remains was mainly that which was required for liturgical use, so that it has been justly said that the Zend Avesta is rather a Prayer-Book than a Bible.

The extreme antiquity of the Zend Avesta is sufficiently attested by its contents and by its language. The society which it presupposes is just passing into a settled life. The writings contain no references to salt or iron or money. Of great cities Babylon alone is mentioned. The language is generically different from the old Persian dialect, and the books belonged at first to the Magi only, a Median tribe. They present a civilisation and a religion earlier than the Persian Empire and foreign to it; nor was it indeed till the time of the Sassanidae that Zoroastrianism was the exclusive national faith of Persia. At the same time the influence of the Magi under an alien line is an indication of their established power; and the significance of the use of an unfamiliar language in worship is illustrated by a similar use of Latin, Greek, Slavonic, and Arabic, at the present time. (Compare Geiger, East Iranian Studies, translated by Sanjana.)

From the time of the recession under the Sassanidae the original Zend was commonly accompanied by a Pahlavi (Parthian) translation. Pahlavi was the official language of the dynasty, and represents the West Iranian type, being akin to the ancient and modern Persian. From this traditional translation the first knowledge of the contents of the Zend Avesta was derived through the romantic labours of Anquetil du Perron (1771). Anquetil du Perron's version was however most imperfect, and it was not till the work of E. Burnouf (1833-5) that a foundation for the real knowledge of Zend was laid. Even now there are rival schools of interpretation, the one party, represented by Spiegel, maintaining the traditional sense given by the current Pahlavi version (Translation 1864, rendered into English by Bleek, 1864), the other party, of whom Haug was the ablest exponent, seeking to determine the sense by an independent comparison with Sanscrit (Haug, Essays, 1862: new edition by E. W. West). The most recent translators, Darmesteter and Mills (S. B. E. iv, xxiii, xxxi), wisely combine elements of both schools. Compare also the translation by C. de Harlez (Paris, 1881).

The Zend Avesta, as now arranged, consists of four parts, the Yasna, the Visparad, the Vendidad, and the Yashts.

(a) The Yasna (i.e. sacrificial prayer) consists of seventy-two chapters. It contains the oldest fragments of the literature, the five Gāthās (songs), 'the Yasna Haptanghanti' (the Yasna of the seven chapters), and the Mazdayasni Confession. These are written in a peculiar dialect, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that they date from the time of Zoroaster (Zarathushtra, Zerdusht) himself and his immediate followers.

The Gāthās are of unique interest. They are mere fragments, but they are enough to suggest the grandeur of the whole out of which they are left. They exhibit a substantial unity of style and thought. Zoroaster appears in them as a struggling prophet, inspired with devoted courage, and engaged in a fierce conflict with his enemies, at one time depressed, at another time victorious, but always a true man, undisguised by the wild legends which are attached to him in the later books.

The first Gāthā (Yasna 29, 28, 30-34) gives an account of his call, of his message for the world, of the consummation (Frashakard) to which creation is moving. The second Gāthā (Yasna 43-46) is scarcely less important, and records Zoroaster's second mission and the questions with which he had to deal. The fifth Gāthā (Yasna 53) is held to be the marriage song of his daughter.

The student will do well to read carefully the following passages in Mills' translation, S. B. E. xxxi: The cry of the king's soul p. 16; Dualism p. 29; Ahura (the Lord) All-seeing 47; Retribution inherent 52; Progress 90; Great questions 111 ff.; The message 126; The wicked far from God 150.

Of the other Yasnas the most interesting perhaps are the Confession (Yasna 12), p. 247; the comment on the Ahuna-vairya, the great prayer [Honover] (Yasna 19), pp. 259 ff.; the comment on Ashem Vohu, the praise of holiness (Yasna 20), pp. 266 ff.; and the Yasna of the seven chapters (Yasna 35).

(b) The Visparad (i.e. all heads, lords) consists of addresses to the representatives of each order of being, inciting them to be present at the ceremonies held in their honour, and is arranged in twenty-three chapters (S. B. E. xxxi).

(c) The Vendidad (the name is a popular contraction and means 'the anti-demoniac law') is divided into twenty-two sections (fargards). It contains an introduction giving an account of the spread of Zoroastrianism, and an appendix on medicine; but the main body of the book is a code of purification, especially in regard to pollution in connection with the dead (Farg. v-xii) and with the dog (Farg. xiii, xiv), together with various civil laws and penalties. The directions are given in the form of answers by Ahura Mazda to questions of the Lawgiver. Some passages have a general interest: The praise of agriculture (Darmesteter, S. B. E. iv, 29); Purity (id. 55); Nail-parings (id. 186).

(d) The Yashts are invocations or hymns of praise to special powers. There were originally thirty, corresponding to the Calendar of thirty days, but now only eighteen remain. They include many pieces of great beauty: the 'Honover' (Darmesteter, S. B. E. xxiii, 23); The 'fiend-smiling' praise of holiness (id. 22); Divine names (id. 24 ff.); The word (id. 44); The genius of truth (id. 139); Invocation of the essences of things (Fravashi) (id. 179); and above all the noble description of The fate of souls (id. 315 ff.; comp. pp. 342 ff.), S. B. E. iv, 212 f.

The new edition of Haug's Essays (Trübner's Oriental Series) and the Introductions of Darmesteter and Mills to their translations in S. B. E. v, xxiii, xxxi give the results of the latest researches into the Zend Avesta. Mills' paraphrastic analysis of the Gāthās is of the greatest service to the English student.

Even a brief review of the Sacred Books of the præ-Christian ethnic religions suggests some general reflections as to the features by which they are distinguished from the Scriptures of the O.T. They are unhistorical, retrogressive, partial.

1. The pre-Christian non-Biblical Sacred Books are unhistorical. Even when they record historical events, the history does not appear as a manifestation of divine government and discipline; and, with the exception of the Chinese, they contain no history of a people. Whatever facts they record, are personal and not national. The Vedas with their Brahmanas cover a period as long, upon a moderate computation, as that from the Exodus to the Return, and no one fact is fixed in them from first to last. Indian history is absolutely dateless till after the invasion of Alexander, when a king in the native lists can be identified with the Sandrocottus of the Greeks.

The Zend Avesta extends over a space of time less perhaps than that covered by the Vedas and yet over hardly less than 800 years; but the facts which it records are limited to the mission and appearance of Zoroaster, which are given without any detail, to a single reference to Gautama Buddha and to an enumeration of the sixteen countries over which the Aryans were spread by the guidance of Ahura Mazda. The Buddhist writings profess to contain long stories of Gautama Buddha, but it is hardly possible to give to these the name of biographical memoirs; and of the history of national progress they appear to have no trace.

The Shoo King appears at first sight to be an exception to the unhistorical character of the Gentile Sacred Books. It contains records of the rise and fall of dynasties, of personal successes and failures, of real and striking incidents illustrative of national policy and national character. But the exception is only apparent. From the first the Shoo King presents a fixed ideal of government and action. The history is in fact a record of precedents. All that is possible for man lies at once before him and within his reach on earth. His power is supreme and sufficient. There is no object towards which the life of the nation is directed in the future. Nothing higher is proposed than to reproduce the glory and peace of the first heroic kings.

So then the general statement holds good that in no case is the revelation or authoritative rule given in the ethnic sacred books represented as embodied and wrought out step by step in the life of a people. The doctrine is announced and explained and fenced in by comment and ritual, but it finds no prophets who unfold and apply the divine words to the varying circumstances of national growth, which at once fix their application and illuminate their meaning.

2. It follows as a necessary consequence from the fact that the Gentile Sacred Books are unhistoric that they are also retrogressive. Religious teaching if it is not realized in the active life of a society must sink into a speculative theory or an elaborate formalism.

It is easy to see how the Old Testament, if it remain by itself unconsummated by the New, passes through the Mishna into the Talmud. Life in any case involves change, and true life involves advance. If there be no life then there must come in its place an artificial system of outward rules which offers a mechanical substitute for a free development, and makes life more and more impossible. So in fact it has been always outside the limits of revelation. While the books of the Bible, corresponding with successive stages in the religious advances of men, go forward from ritual to spiritual service, the case is exactly the reverse with the other canons of holy writings. That which is the first stage of a stern discipline in the history of the people of God, is the last refuge of failing faith among the nations.

This retrogression is shewn unmistakably in two ways. The oldest portions of the several collections of the Chinese, Indian, and Persian scriptures are confessedly the noblest in thought and aspiration; and secondly ritual in each case has finally overpowered the strivings after a personal and spiritual fellowship with God.

The contrast between the earlier and later books of the Gentile Canons is seen most clearly in those which are most accessible, the Vedas and the Zend Avesta. The Hymns of the Rig Veda and the Gathas of the Zend Avesta are incomparably the finest elements in the religious literature of Hinduism and Zoroastrianism, for the Upanishads are a philosophy for a few. In these Hymns the soul of man found a free utterance, which the later experience of life failed to realize. They rise, like the choruses of Æschylus, far above all later literature in grandeur of spiritual aspiration and depth of reverence. Then came an almost abrupt break. Priestly and political despotism more or less completely kept down that lofty independence of which the Hebrew prophets were the inspired preachers.

Hence followed, as a necessary consequence, the second form of retrogression, the predominance of ritual. This descent from a spiritual worship to a lifeless service is natural to man as he is; but in the case of the great Gentile religions the descent was not only actually made as it has been made in Judaism and Christianity; it was also consecrated by authoritative books. The effect of this inversion of the divine method for the restoration of man would be fairly represented if we could suppose that the Book of the Psalms had been the original basis of the Old Testament and Leviticus adapted to it as the final Commentary.

3. The Gentile sacred writings are unhistorical and retrogressive: they are also partial. They are in their most complete form, as has been just said, a Psalter completed by a law of ritual. They contain (with the partial exception of the Shoo King) no stirring episodes of national heroism: no testimonies of great men who stem the tide of popular corruption: no examples of 'learning through suffering.' On the other hand the Bible contains every element which the representatives of different races have found to be the vehicle of religious teaching, and every element in its fullest and most fruitful form. Let the Apophthegms of the Confucian Analects be compared with the Sapiential Books of the Old Testament, of which Proverbs is the type: let the Vendidad be compared with the Pentateuch: let the Rig-Veda Samhitā and the Gāthās be compared with the Psalms: let the Dhammapada be compared with the Apostolic Epistles; and the Upanishads with St John's Gospel and Epistles, and then first perhaps we shall feel what the Bible is. It is happily so inwrought into our conceptions of life, whether we know it or not, that we hardly feel how far it rises above the natural level of man's religious attainments and aspirations: how it stands absolutely fresh in the latest age: how it covers all the fields of religious speculation: how it completes what scattered races have begun: how it addresses every class with a voice which grows intelligible as each listener is prepared to hear.

III. THE PRESERVATION AND TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE.

A. PRESERVATION OF THE TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

1. THE TEXT OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

BY THE REV. R. SINKER, D.D., LIBRARIAN OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The original language of most of the O.T. is Hebrew, a few portions being written in what is popularly called Chaldee, or, more strictly, Aramaean or Aramaic (cf. R.V. m. Gen. xxxi. 47). [Dan. ii. 4—vii. 28; Ezra iv. 8—vi. 18, vii. 12—26; Jer. x. 11.]

The name Hebrew first meets us in Genesis xiv. 13 ("Abram the Hebrew"), where it may mean "one who had come from beyond [the Euphrates]," and so it is explained in the Septuagint. On the other hand, it may be a patronymic from Eber, in the days of whose son Peleg "was the earth divided" (Gen. x. 25).

It can hardly be doubted that Abraham adopted the language of Canaan on his settlement in Palestine, in place of the Aramaean of his earlier years. The remains of the ancient Phœnician or Canaanite language that have come down to us in inscriptions, coins and otherwise, point to a language hardly appreciably different from Hebrew, while Abraham's kinsman, Laban, speaks Aramaean, as against Jacob's Hebrew (Gen. xxxi. 47).

The former language (the "Syriac" of the English Bible, 2 Kings xviii. 26; Dan. ii. 4) was that spoken in Syria and Mesopotamia.

In the earlier books of the Bible the language is found in a much higher degree of purity than in the later, into which many foreign words, especially Aramaean and Persian, entered, through the increasing intercourse with foreign nations. The Captivity struck a fatal blow at Hebrew as a living language, and though it is impossible to speak with absolute certainty as to the extent to which it was still spoken after the Return from Exile (536 B.C.), yet certainly it grew more and more a language for Divine Service and the learned, its place being gradually usurped as a vernacular by a form of Aramaean. This was undoubtedly the state of things in Palestine in our Lord's time and afterwards; the knowledge of Classical Hebrew being then maintained by the Temple Service and the great Rabbinical Schools, at first at Jerusalem, and after the fall of Jerusalem at Tiberias. There were also flourishing schools in Babylonia, Sora and elsewhere.

EXTERNAL CONDITION OF OLD TESTAMENT TEXT.

The text of the Old Testament, as we now possess it, is known as the Massoretic (or traditional) text. The opinion that, even in external appearance, the ancient Hebrew Scriptures had undergone but little change, is one that can no longer be held. The original Hebrew characters were, in appearance, widely different from those now in use. These older letters are what are ordinarily known as Phœnician, and are virtually the same as the letters found in Punic inscriptions, on Maccabæan (and later) shekels, and in Samaritan MSS. Until the Captivity, these characters were, it cannot be doubted, those in use among the Israelites. An example of this is furnished by the well-known Siloam inscription.

After the Captivity, however, the returned exiles not only gradually dropped the spoken tongue of their fathers for Aramaean, but also began to use in writing the simpler characters they had brought from Babylon. This, the Hebrew now in common use, is what is usually known as "square" Hebrew, and we might fairly compare the change from the Gothic or black-letter type to Roman type in early English printed books.

The change was undoubtedly a gradual one, for, as we have said, the older character appears on the Maccabæan coins, but this does not militate against the general acceptance of the square character. It cannot be doubted that the Septuagint was made from MSS. in the square character. Our Lord's reference to the "jot" (Matt. v. 18) clearly presupposes the "square" alphabet, in which it is the smallest letter, and the proverbial character of the phrase would seem to shew a long-established use. A curious late survival of the older alphabet is mentioned by Origen († 253 A.D.), viz., that in Greek MSS. of the Bible scribes often wrote the Sacred Name in Hebrew letters in the body of the Greek, and that in the more accurate MSS. these were of the older character. Still, it may be assumed as a matter hardly capable of doubt that the Hebrew alphabet now in use was current among the Jews long before the Christian Era.

It may be noted that the earliest forms of Hebrew and the cognate languages were alike destitute of written marks for vowels; and that the late date of the introduction of the Arabic and Syriac vowel-points is a definitely known fact. Indeed if the points were part of the original written Hebrew system, the existence of unpointed MSS. (including those held in the highest estimation, the MSS. used as lectionaries in the synagogues) would be a fact very hard to account for.

Further, the numerous and wide divergences of the ancient versions, and especially of the LXX., have often been appealed to with the view of shewing that they cannot have been taken from pointed MSS.; but much later witnesses point in the same way. Thus in Origen's Hexapla, the second column contained the Hebrew text in Greek letters, and we are thus able to approximate to the Hebrew pronunciation of Origen's time. Making every allowance for corruption of text in the MSS. from which the extant fragments of this second column are derived, a pronunciation is indicated by no means identical with that embodied in the Massoretic pointing. Jerome again (345–420 A.D.), who spent the latter half of his life in Palestine, and has left numerous commentaries on the books of the Hebrew Bible, appears to have been entirely ignorant of any written system of points whatever. He remarks at times on the different ways of pronouncing the consonants of a Hebrew word and the consequent variation in meaning, in a way which would be inconceivable had he any written system of vowels before him. Later still we have the Babylonian Talmud, which was finished probably about 500 A.D. Among the discussions in it as to the meaning of passages of the Law, no appeal seems ever to be made to the vowel-points, though such an appeal would often have been most relevant.

The earliest certain references to written Hebrew points are said to occur in the writings of Saadia Gaon († 942 A.D.), but by that time they had evidently been long established.

The Hebrew point-system is so elaborate, being indeed quite out of proportion to the simplicity of the language, that a considerable time must be allowed for its development. It was in all probability devised by the scholars of Tiberias, and possibly fears as to the rapid growth of Islam may have impressed them with the insecurity of interpretation resting so largely on unwritten tradition.

Besides this system of pointing there exists also another, commonly known as the Babylonian, which was first noticed about forty years ago in MSS. belonging to the Karaite Jews. This is a less elaborate system than that in common use, and in it the points are always written above the line of consonants.

It cannot be too strongly insisted on here that comparatively modern as the point-system is, though we need by no means maintain its infallibility, its history is such that, only on well-established grounds, should it be departed from.

The history of the text of the Old Testament may conveniently be broken up into three periods:—(1) from the time when the several books were written to the Christian Era, (2) from thence to the invention of the point-system, and (3) from thence to the present day.

For the earlier part of the first period our materials are exceedingly scanty, a brief notice here and there in Scripture testifying to the possession by the Israelites of writings viewed as sacred. Thus Moses writes the "book of the Law," and delivers it to the priests and Levites to be kept "in (or, by) the side of the ark" (Deut. xxxi. 26). Long before this time he had been commanded by God to put into writing an account of the victory of Rephidim (Exod. xvii. 14). Joshua again at the end of his life lays up his own record before the Lord (Josh. xxiv. 26). See also 1 Sam. x. 25. In these passages we have our first glimpses of the formation of the Old Testament. How far and how often during the days of the monarchy the action of editors modified and rearranged the existing materials it is useless to guess, nor does it matter. The divine purpose was the same, whether author or editor was the one to be guided.

An important incident, the true meaning of which has excited much controversy, is the discovery of the "book of the Law" in the eighteenth year of Josiah (2 Kings xxii.). It must be remembered that after Hezekiah's death ensued the fifty-five years, mostly of idolatry and persecution, of Manasseh, the short evil reign of Amon, and the succession of a child of eight. Amid all this the worship of Jehovah might seem almost to die away. The discovery was made at a time and under conditions when it was sure to produce its effect: had it been left to the reign of Jehoiakim, for example, it would, humanly speaking, have been without avail. It is a strong argument that we are here dealing with a case in which God allowed His written Word to be withdrawn for a time, when in the writings of the prophets, who lived two or three generations before the date of the discovery (e.g. Hosea, Amos, Micah), numerous underlying allusions shew abundant knowledge of the details of the Law. Considering the nature of the reforms of Josiah, it cannot be doubted that copies of the Law would be multiplied. And here too the succession of prophets must be noted: Jeremiah in Palestine and Egypt, Ezekiel and Daniel in Babylon, were undoubtedly familiar with the Law.

After the returned exiles had once more settled in their own land, we find Ezra (Neh. viii. 1) reading the Law to the people, at their request, as an ordinary and natural thing. To Ezra and his colleagues, "the men of the great Synagogue," has been assigned the setting forth a carefully revised text of the book of the Law, with or without some of the other books of Scripture. It might be assumed from the nature of the case that this editorial work would be continued by Ezra's younger colleague, Nehemiah, and an important confirmation of this is furnished by 2 Macc. ii. 13 which connects his name with books "concerning the kings and prophets," and the writings of David. The former of these is at any rate suggestive of the second of the three volumes, and the name of David of the third.

Besides the Massoretic Hebrew text two other forms of the text have come down to us from pre-Christian times; the Samaritan Pentateuch, which, as the name tells, includes the five books of Moses only, and the so-called Septuagint Greek version, containing the whole of the Old Testament. It is true that the differences between these two and the Massoretic text are considerable, and of this we must speak hereafter; what is important to note at present is that as compared with the mass that is in agreement, the points of differences are not great, and hardly any important point either of narrative or doctrine is affected in either of the secondary texts.

The period from the time of Ezra to that of our Lord is one of special importance in the history of the text. As has often been pointed out, their religion and the sacred books which enshrined it were all that the Jews had now left. National independence gone, language well-nigh dead, they clung all the more firmly to what they had left, and their Scriptures became the citadel of the national aspirations. On the careful preservation and interpretation of the text labour was ungrudgingly bestowed, and the Rabbi became a far more important personage than the priest. As the outcome of all this it obviously follows that as regards Jerusalem and Palestine there would be a steady tendency to fixity of the Hebrew text.

In the New Testament a large majority of the quotations from the Old Testament follow the wording of the Septuagint, even when there is a certain amount of divergence between this and the Hebrew. This was due to the almost universal use, spite of its glaring faults, of the Septuagint.

From the Christian Era to the sixth or seventh century A.D. the evidence that meets us, such as it is, tends to bring out more and more the two foregoing points, (1) the fixity and uniformity of the traditional Hebrew text, the variations, when traces of such are found, being slight; and (2) the striking contrast between this text and that of the Greek, and, in a less degree, of other versions.

While the Rabbis of Jerusalem, and later of Tiberias, and of the Babylonian Schools, made, we know, the "word of God of none effect" by their tradition, still as regards the letter of that word, it was guarded jealously enough. The chief outcome of these schools in the above-named centuries clearly shews that. In the quotations from Scripture in the Mishnah (c. 200 A.D.), and the Talmuds of Jerusalem (c. 370 A.D.) and of Babylon (c. 500 A.D.), a certain amount of variations occurs, but within very narrow limits. The tendency clearly was to uniformity, not to variation. Jerome sometimes also refers to readings of the Hebrew not identical with those of the present Massoretic text, but these are not of sufficient weight to touch the main argument.

The first six centuries after Christ saw the rise of a large number of versions of the Old Testament. The majority of these, being taken from the Septuagint, are only of value as evidence for the text of the latter. Made directly from the Hebrew, however, are the Syriac version known as the Peshitto, which yet has some curious unexplained Septuagintal colouring, the Latin Vulgate, and various Greek versions (three of the whole of the O. T. by known authors, Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, and three of certain books only and anonymous, commonly known as the Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Versions). These six Greek versions exist only in fragments, and these are of value rather for the exegesis than the criticism of the text; but little that would come under the head of a variation of text can be deduced from them. The Peshitto, as has been said, is partially ranged with the Septuagint against the Massoretic Hebrew.

Besides these, a group of versions of a different type presents itself, the Targums, paraphrases into Aramaean of different parts of the Old Testament. The date of the ultimate form of these is a matter of much dispute: and though these versions are exceedingly paraphrastic, there is in them a large element of very ancient date; and further, it may broadly be laid down that the Targums support the Massoretic text as against the opposing versions.

Some results of the criticism of the text by the doctors of the Rabbinic schools may here be noticed. They are usually designated Qri and Kthib, by which is meant that, though a certain word is found in the text (Kthib = written), the direction is given to replace it in reading by another word (Qri = read). They may for convenience be grouped under three divisions:—(a) modernizing, where certain forms are replaced by those current in later centuries, (β) euphemistic, where coarse or indelicate phrases are softened down, and (y) what may more strictly be called critical. Some have viewed the Qri merely as a critical conjecture of the Rabbis; others, we believe with more justice, as an independent reading resting on definite objective evidence. A familiar instance by way of illustration will be found in Psalm c. 3, where the E. V. follows the Kthib, "and not we ourselves," the margin, with more point, following the Qri, "and His we are."

An extreme case is that of the "Qri without a Kthib," and the "Kthib without a Qri," that is, where a word has to be read which is not in the text (e.g. the word Euphrates in 2 Sam. viii. 3), and where, though in the text, a word has to be passed over.

It has already been pointed out that the date of the invention of the point-system is a very uncertain one, the seventh century A. V. being, however, a reasonable guess. The system of points and the recension of text furnished with them are known as Massoretic, an adjective derived from Massorah, tradition. Under this name is included a mass of details as to the criticism of the text, all the various corrections and variations mentioned above, and others also: such things as the number of verses or letters in the various books, which is the middle verse of each book, and numerous similar things, puerile enough in one sense, and yet testifying to the extraordinary care and zeal lavished on the books.

One set of corrections rather more important than some of those mentioned above is the so-called Tiqqun Sopherim, or "correction of the scribes," a term applied to eighteen places where a certain reading is rejected and replaced by another, whether on critical or subjective grounds we cannot here discuss. An example may be given. In IIab. i. 12 the Massoretic text reads, "we shall not die," which is a "correction of the scribes" for "thou wilt not die," surely a most frigid and suspicious expression.

A short abridgment of the Massorah is printed in the margin of ordinary Hebrew Bibles; the whole body of the Massorah, as may well be imagined, is of very considerable extent.

There were two great centres of Hebrew learning in the centuries in which we have been speaking, Tiberias and the Babylonian Schools. Hence two recensions of text were gradually formed, Western and Eastern. Of these two recensions, two lists of variations may be mentioned:—(1) A list, ordinarily known as "the Western and Eastern readings," 220 in number. These, we may believe, are of a date prior to the rise of the point-system, because they all refer to the consonants. None of them is of any importance as regards the sense. It is important to add that not one of them occurs in the Pentateuch, a strong piece of evidence to the exceptional care taken with the MSS. of the Law. (2) The full establishment of the point-system would in course of time furnish a fresh field for variation. About 1030 A. D. the Western and Eastern MSS. were examined for variations by Aaron ben Asher of Tiberias and Jacob ben Naphtali of Babylonia. This list of variations, which has been several times printed, consists of about 900 readings, which, with one exception, refer to vowels and accents only. The present printed Hebrew text is almost entirely according to the readings of ben Asher.

In the multiplication of fresh copies there would always be the desire to follow a carefully revised text. Accordingly various standard copies are mentioned by the mediæval Rabbis as those serving for patterns: thus Maimonides († 1204 A. D.) refers to the MS. of the Pentateuch revised by ben Asher, and states that he himself made a transcript of it in Egypt. Another important MS. was the Codex of Hillel, mentioned by the great Rabbi David Kimchi († 1240 A. D.) as seen by him in Spain, and held in high repute as an authority. Others again are the Codices of Jericho and Sinai, both containing the Pentateuch only.

The Hebrew Old Testament was printed a considerable number of years before the Greek New Testament, which was not printed till 1516. It appeared first in piecemeal fashion: the first portion being the Psalms, published in 1477, unpointed, with Kimchi's Commentary. The place of printing is unspecified. The Law was printed at Bologna in 1482, the Prophets at Soncino in 1485–86, and the Hagiographa at Naples in 1487. The first complete edition of the Hebrew Bible is that of Soncino in 1488; and the first Christian edition is that contained in the Complutensian Polyglott, Alcalá, 1514–17.

The most important editions of the text since that time have been those of Bomberg (Venice, 1518, 1526, 1547–49), to which several commentaries of the great Rabbis were added; the Rabbinic Bible of Buxtorf (Basle, 1611); Athias, Amsterdam, 1667. This last was reproduced by Van der Hooght (Amsterdam and Utrecht, 1705), and on this the great majority of modern editions have been based.

TEXTUAL EVIDENCE FOR THE OLD TESTAMENT.

We must now view the matter from the other side. The direct evidence for the text of the Old Testament comes under three heads, that of Hebrew MSS., of Ancient Versions, and of the Quotations from the Old Testament in the Talmud and other ancient Jewish writings.

Two points at once strike the student of the Hebrew MSS. of the Old Testament: first, the comparatively late date of the earliest known MSS.; and secondly, the exceedingly narrow limits within which the variations of these MSS. fall; not that these variations are few in number, but as a rule most trifling in importance.

There are but few MSS. as yet known which can be assigned with probability to an earlier date than the year 1000 A. D.

The Hebrew MSS. of the Old Testament may be divided into Synagogue-rolls and MSS. for personal use. As to the former, the Talmud lays down elaborate rules, as to the nature of the skins and fastenings, the number of columns in each, the size of each column and the title.

MSS. other than Synagogue-rolls are in book form of various sizes, from folio downwards. Sometimes these are dated, but when no date is given, it may be more or less approximated to by various internal characteristics.

The MSS. fall into various families, distinguished by different sorts of characters, as well as certain differences of text. These are known as (a) the Spanish, written in square, elegantly-formed letters. These represent the text of the Codex of Hillel, and give the Massoretic text in its closest form. With these on the whole agree the Oriental family of Hebrew MSS. (β) the German. These are written in a comparatively rude and inelegant character, and also display a certain amount of divergence from the Massoretic text. Indeed, the books of the "prophets" and Hagiographa are arranged in a slightly different order from that in the Massoretic text. (γ) Midway between these come the Italian MSS., both as regards the shape of the letters and the character of the text.

The first attempt to examine the text of a large number of Hebrew MSS. was that of Kennicott, in whose edition of the Hebrew Bible (Oxford, 1776-1780) a collation is given of 634 Hebrew MSS., besides printed texts of the Bible, copies of the Talmud, &c. Subsequently, De Rossi published (Parma, 1784-1798) a collation of 825 MSS.

In the present century, Hebrew MSS. of the Bible have been collated by Pinner at Odessa, and others have come to light in India and China.

The great mass of them date from the beginning of the eleventh century onwards. The following may be mentioned:—(1) a Cod. Laudianus, no. 1 of Kennicott, and by him assigned to the tenth century, though placed later by subsequent critics. (2) De Rossi's Cod. 634, assigned by him to the eighth century. (3) Pinner's Cod. 1 of the Pentateuch. This has a subscription, stating that it was corrected in 580 A.D., and if this be true, it would be the oldest MS. of the Hebrew Bible known. Some internal phenomena, however, point to a much later date. (4) Pinner's Cod. 5, an imperfect copy of the Pentateuch, the date of the subscription being 843 A.D. (5) Pinner's Cod. 3 of the Prophets, the date of the subscription being 916 A.D. In this MS. the vowels and accents are not those in common use, being written above the line of the letters, as we have mentioned above. (6) Pinner's Cod. 13, an imperfect copy of the "former prophets," claiming to have been written not later than 938 A.D. To these may be added (7) a MS. in the University Library at Cambridge (Kennicott 89), whose subscription would assign it to the year 856 A.D. Opinions are much divided as to the truth of this statement. The great majority of Hebrew MSS. do not contain the whole Bible, but only parts thereof.

The scrupulous care bestowed upon the Hebrew text, as far as our evidence extends, contrasts strongly with the free handling to which the other texts were subjected, and this contrast in itself furnishes a strong prima facie case in favour of the Hebrew.

When we come to view the matter in detail, we find, on throwing out those versions which, being taken from the Greek and not from the Hebrew, have no independent value, that there remain the Septuagint and the fragments of the other Greek versions, the Chaldee Targums, the Peshitto Syriac, and the Latin Vulgate; and also, though not a version, the Samaritan Pentateuch. Of these, the Targums and the later Greek fragments cannot be said to point to a text differing materially from the Massoretic. Nor, broadly speaking, can a different result be said to be yielded by the Latin Vulgate, made as it was in Palestine and under the influence of Jerome's Palestinian Jewish teachers; though where the Septuagint did not differ too materially from the Hebrew, he follows the former rather than the latter, so as not to break with old associations more than could be helped.

The Peshitto Syriac not unfrequently agrees with the Septuagint against the Hebrew, and this is doubtless due to the high position held everywhere in the Christian Church by the former; though it is by no means easy to see whether in these points subsequent interpolations have caused the difference, or whether the Septuagint was an influence on the mind of the original translator. Probably the first cause alone would be insufficient to account for the phenomenon.

There remain then the Septuagint and the Samaritan Pentateuch. The variations of the latter from the Massoretic text are often, but very far from invariably, supported by the Septuagint. At one time, the most extravagant claims were put forward on its behalf, scholars such as Morinus, Houbigant and Kennicott, placing it on a decidedly higher level than the Massoretic text. But Gesenius in his work on the subject (1815) gave a systematic arrangement to the variations between the two texts and shewed that the mass of variations are due to attempts at grammatical emendation, to glosses, to corrections of apparent deficiencies in the sense, to adaptations in favour of the Samaritan view of things and the like.

There remains finally the Septuagint. Real as the differences often are between this and the Hebrew, several points may be alleged to lessen them. The current text of the Septuagint is in a woeful state; the most recent editions leaving untouched a multitude of passages where the correct Greek of the original translation has obviously become corrupted. Very many variations are also due to difference of interpretation and not of text, unpointed Hebrew MSS. giving great latitude to interpretation. Very many of those which remain hinge on the difference between similar Hebrew letters. Some of the variations of the Septuagint are doubtless correct, though probably no two scholars will exactly agree as to which they are; nor will any important difference be made, on any view, either as to history or theology.

It may suffice here to mention one where we cannot doubt that the Massoretic text is corrupt. In Psalm xii. 17 (16 E. V.) for "they pierced" the Massoretic text has "like the lion," the difference in the Hebrew being simply that between the two similar letters, Vav and Jod. Every known ancient version makes the word a verb, the Vav (which renders the word a verb) is found in many Hebrew MSS., and there is a certain amount of traditional evidence supporting that view. On all these grounds we cannot hesitate to believe that the word is a verb (meaning probably "to pierce").

The Talmud, as we have already said, consists of the Mishnah, completed at Tiberias about the end of the second century A.D., on which two commentaries called Gemaras (or "completion") arose in Palestine and Babylonia, and were finished about 370 A.D. and 500 A.D. respectively. The Midrashim are expositions or expansions of the various books of the Bible, and are probably very composite as regards date.

In all these a considerable quantity of the Bible is quoted or embodied; yet it cannot be said that the various readings thus detected are of any noteworthy importance. There appear to be 14 various readings known from the Mishnah, and in the collation of the quotations in the Talmud for Kennicott about 1000 variations were noted. None, however, was of any special moment. Such evidence, therefore, as is afforded by this third head is strongly and absolutely confirmatory of the Massoretic text.

On the Apocrypha and other Apocryphal books see above, p. 10.

2. TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

BY THE REV. J. O. F. MURRAY, M.A., FELLOW OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

Object. The object of Textual Criticism is the restoration of the exact words of a writing, when the original copy of it has been lost.

Materials. The materials available for the determination of the exact words of the lost originals of the different books of the New Testament, and the skill to use them, have varied in different ages. At the present day three kinds of documentary sources are recognised, and have been made available for the purposes of criticism by the self-denying labours of generations of students. They are

Greek Manuscripts, or written copies of the Greek Text of the whole or parts of the different books;

Versions, or translations from the Greek into some other language;

'Fathers,' i.e. the testimony borne by ecclesiastical writers, directly or indirectly, to the readings of MSS. in their own day.

GREEK MANUSCRIPTS. These are divided into two classes, according to the characters in which they are written. Some are written entirely in capital letters, and are called Uncials. Others are written in smaller letters and a running hand, and are called Cursives or Minuscules. Uncial MSS. are, as a class, older than Cursives. No Uncial is later than the eleventh century; no Cursive earlier than the ninth. The oldest MSS. are written with no breaks between the words and very few stops. For purposes of reference an Uncial MSS. is denoted by a capital letter (A, B, Δ, Θ, Ν); a Cursive by an Arabic numeral (1, 2, 3....). The notation begins afresh in each group of books (Gospels, Acts and Catholic Epp., Pauline Epp., Revelation), and so the same letter or number may denote a different MS., and the same MS. may be referred to under different letters or numbers, in different parts of the N.T. For instance, 'B' in the Revelation is a very different MS. from 'B' in the rest of the N.T. (Dr Westcott has adopted a plan which it is to be hoped may soon become universal; he refers to 'B' in the Revelation as B₂.) On the other hand, Δ of the Gospels and G₃ of the Pauline Epp. originally formed a single MS.

Among Uncials the most important are
B. Codex Vaticanus (IV.) at Rome. N.T. complete except part of Hebrews, Pastoral Epp. and Revelation.

Ν. Codex Sinaiticus (IV.) at St Petersburg. N.T. complete. Discovered by Tischendorf in 1859 in the convent on Mount Sinai.

A. Codex Alexandrinus (V.) in the British Museum. N.T. almost complete from Matt. xxv. 6. Presented to Charles I. in 1623 by Cyril Lucar, Patriarch of Constantinople.

Γ. Codex Ephraemi (V.) rescriptus, in Paris. A 'palimpsest.' N.T. originally complete, now only about three-fifths of the whole decipherable, because the earlier writing was (XII.) washed off to make room for a Greek translation of some works of Ephraem Syrus.

D. Codex Bezae (VI.) at Cambridge, containing the Gospels and Acts and a fragment of the Catholic Epp., in Greek and Latin. Presented to the University by Beza in 1581.

Δ+G₃. Originally part of the same MS. (IX.), containing in Greek and Latin:—

Δ. Codex Sangallensis, at St Gallen, the Gospels almost complete;

G₃. Codex Bœrnerianus at Dresden, all the Pauline epistles except 'Hebrews.'

E₂. Codex Laudianus (VI.) at Oxford, containing the Acts almost complete in Greek and Latin. Presented to that University by Archbishop Laud.

1 Roman numerals denote the centuries, A.D.

Dg. Codex Claromontanus (VI.) at Paris, containing the Pauline epistles in Greek and Latin.

Among Cursives some of the most important are, in Dr Gregory's notation,

In the Gospels 1-118-131-209, 13-69-124-346, 28, 33, 665, 892.

In the Acts and Catholic Epp. 13, 31, 36, 61 (wanting in Cath. Epp.).

In the Pauline Epp. 17, 37, 40, 47, 137.

In Revelation 1, 7, 38, 91, 95.

MSS. are connected by hyphens (e.g. 1-118-209) when there is reason to believe that they represent, in part at least, a common original. The MSS. numbered 33, 13, 17 and 69, 31, 37 in the Gospels, Acts, and Pauline Epp. respectively, are in each case parts of a single volume.

The latest catalogue of known MSS. enumerates

66 Uncial MSS. of the Gospels, and 1273 Cursives,

15 Uncial MSS. of the Acts and Catholic Epp., and 416 Cursives,

20 Uncial MSS. of the Pauline Epp., and 480 Cursives,

5 Uncial MSS. of the Apocalypse, and 183 Cursives.

But it must be remembered that some of the Uncial MSS. contain only a very few verses. The number of Uncials approximately complete is, 21 in the Gospels, 9 in the Acts, 7 in the Cath. Epp., 11 in the Pauline Epp., 5 in the Apocalypse.

Of the MSS. mentioned above it may be interesting to notice that the British Museum possesses, besides A, '892' of the Gospels, '61' of the Acts, and '7' of the Apocalypse. E₂, '118' of the Gospels, and '47' of the Pauline Epistles are at the Bodleian Library, and '36' of the Acts in the library of New College, Oxford. Z of S. Matthew and '40' of the Pauline Epp. are at Trinity College, Dublin. '69' is at Leicester.

Lectionaries. Besides these MSS. of continuous portions of the Greek Text there are numbers of MSS. of very different dates, both Uncial and Cursive, which contain selections from the N.T. for use in Church Services. Dr Gregory has catalogued 936 containing lessons from the Gospels, and 265 containing lessons from the Acts and the Epistles.

VERSIONS. The second source of evidence is that contained in versions. These also are preserved in written copies which have to be carefully compared together in order to determine as far as possible the exact words of the translation in its original form. Where this can be done the evidence of the version becomes, within certain limits, depending partly on the genius of the language and partly on the faithfulness of the translator, equivalent to the evidence of a Greek MS. of the date at which the translation was made. And the importance of such evidence, where it can be had, for establishing landmarks in the history of the Text can hardly be over-estimated. The versions most important for critical purposes fall into three groups—Latin, Syriac, and Egyptian. Versions must have been in existence in each of these languages before the end of the second century.

Latin. MSS. of the Latin versions are usually denoted by small letters (a, b, c, ...). The oldest form of it was produced in Africa. We have evidence of its existence in the writings of Tertullian (c. 200 A.D.), and of the character of its Text in the 'copious and careful' quotations of Cyprian (250 A.D.). By means of these quotations we are able to identify as substantially African two Latin MSS. of the Gospels,

c. Palatinus (IV. or V.).

k. Bobiensis (V.) (Matt. and Mark only), and also a few palimpsest fragments of the Acts and Revelation, h₂ (V. or VI.).

Very valuable evidence towards reconstructing it in this form is also contained in the Latin portion of the bilingual MSS. mentioned above, esp. D and Δ.

In the fourth century another type of text, called 'European, perhaps derived from the African, perhaps representing an indigenous Italian version, was current in western Europe, and especially in N. Italy. The European Text is represented among MSS. of the Gospels in

a. Vercellensis (IV.).

b. Veronensis (IV. or V.).

c. Colbertinus (XI.).

f. Corbeiensis (VI.).

h. Claromontanus (IV. or V.) (part of Matt.).

i. Vindobonensis (V. or VI.), (Mk, Lk.).

r. Dublinensis (VI. or VII.).

Of the Acts and perhaps of Revelation, in

g. Holmiensis (XIII.).

A peculiar version of S. James is preserved in

f. Corbeiensis (X.).

Successive revisions of the 'European Latin,' sometimes casual, sometimes perhaps systematic, produced at length before the time of S. Augustine (c. 400) a third type of text, the 'Italian Latin.' This is now preserved in

f. Brixianus (VI.).

q. Monacensis (VI.), of the Gospels; and in a few fragments of the Pauline and Catholic Epp. These three forms of the Latin version are sometimes classed together as 'Vetus Latina' or 'Old Latin.'

About 383 A.D. Jerome undertook a formal revision of the current 'Italian' Text, and produced what afterwards came to be recognised as the authoritative text of the version, the 'Vulgate.' Probably the two best MSS. for determining the text of the Vulgate as Jerome left it are Codex Fuldensis (Fu) (VI.), and Codex Amiatinus (Am). This MS. has a peculiar interest for Englishmen, as it was copied by order of Ceolfrid either at Wearmouth or at Jarrow, and taken with him on his last journey to Rome (A.D. 716) as a present to the Pope. Ceolfrid died on the way. The book, we must suppose, was taken to Rome and presented in due course. We next hear of it in the possession of the Abbat of a Lombard monastery at the end of the ninth century, who presented it to the convent of Monte Amiata.

Syriac. There are three distinct Syriac versions of importance. The materials for determining the history of the first are very scanty. It must have been in existence in the second century, before the composition of Tatian's Diatesaron; and it seems to have been revised in the fourth, in accordance with the Greek text current at that time. The early stage of the version survives at present only in an imperfect copy of the Gospels published by Dr Cureton from a MS. (V.) in the British Museum in 1858.

The later stage, to which the term Peshitto is ordinarily applied in contradistinction to the 'Curetonian,' is represented, apparently with remarkable uniformity, in all other MSS. (VI. and onwards) and in the bulk of Syrian patristic writings from the fourth century onwards. This version does not contain 2 and 3 John, 2 Peter, Jude, and Revelation.

The 'Philoxygenian' Syriac was made for Philoxenus of Mabug in 508. It is only known to us, except in a few citations, in the form it assumed after it was revised in 616 by Thomas of Harkel, who supplied throughout in the margin various readings from Greek MSS., which have great critical value. It is remarkable for its strict adherence to Greek idiom. It contains all the books of the N.T. except Revelation.

The 'Jerusalem' Syriac, so called from the supposed resemblance of the peculiar dialect in which it is composed to that of the Jerusalem Talmud, has till recently been known only from a single MS. collection of Lessons from the Gospels (XI.) in the Vatican Library. Some further fragments, including a few verses of the Acts, have lately come to light. The Greek Text which this version represents is interesting from its curiously composite character. Nothing is known of the origin of the version.

Egyptian. There are three Egyptian versions of first-rate importance, representing the dialects of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The term Coptic,—which ought to be coextensive with Egyptian, Copt being the name given to Egyptian Christians by their Arabic conquerors,—is sometimes applied specially to the version in the dialect of Lower Egypt, more properly called Boheiric or Memphitic. The version of Upper Egypt is called Sahidic or Thebaic. Both these versions contain all the books of the N.T., though the Revelation seems in neither case to stand on quite the same level as the rest. Both must have been at least begun in the second century.

The Memphitic version is contained completely in many MSS. The Thebaic is extant only in fragments. There is as yet no satisfactory edition of either of these versions, but we know enough to feel sure of the extreme value of their evidence for critical purposes. They represent not only very ancient, but also very accurate Greek MSS.

The version of Middle Egypt is called Bashmuriic or Fayumic. Until recently only about 330 verses of it were known; fresh fragments are however continually coming to light among the treasures of the library recently unearthed at Fayum.

The only other versions that call for mention here are the Gothic, made by Bishop Ulfilas (IV.), the Aethiopic (IV. or V.), and the Armenian (V.).

FATHERS. The third and last source from which materials for Textual Criticism may be drawn is supplied by the writings of the Fathers. The writings of Christians in all ages, and not least in the earliest, have been full of traces, direct and indirect, of the study of the Holy Scriptures. The ascertainment of the evidence which can be derived from this source is beset by peculiar difficulties. Authors do not always take pains to quote exactly, and scribes and editors are apt to assume that anything unfamiliar in the form of a quotation is due to their author's carelessness, and to correct his work accordingly. When however we can make sure that an author quoted correctly and that his words have been faithfully transmitted, we have evidence as to the reading of Greek MSS. at a particular period, which it is worth taking a great deal of pains to secure, because it is capable of being precisely dated. The authors whose works are most important for critical purposes are

Greek:

Just=Justin Martyr, d. 160?, Palestine, Greece, Italy.

Methods. Such are the materials for Textual Criticism. We have now to consider the use that has been made of them. This divides conveniently into two heads: (1) the Collection, (2) the Interpretation of the Evidence.

The Collection of the Evidence is a task which requires no ordinary diligence and accuracy, and has made great progress since the first 'Critical Edition' was published by Mill in 1707; the last half century has been especially fruitful, both in the discovery of fresh material and in the more accurate examination of the old. Much, however, yet remains to be done in the collation of Cursives and Lectionaries, in the careful editing of versions, and in the verifying of Patristic citations. The different documents have been carefully described by Dr Scrivener in his Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament (3rd Ed., 1883), and by C. R. Gregory in the Prolegomena to Tischendorf's last edition (Part I. 1884; Part II. 1890). The variations that have been noticed, down to the very minutest variations in order and spelling, and the evidence by which they are each supported, have been collected in two great critical editions, by Constantine Tischendorf (8th Ed., 1869-72), who aims at absolute completeness, and by S. P. Tregelles (1857-1879), who gives with especial care all the evidence of a select group of authorities—all the Uncials known in his day, some select Cursives, the Fathers to Eusebius (inclusive), and the chief Versions.

The multiplication of available authorities has led to a large and at first sight alarming increase in the number of observed discrepancies. The total, estimated at 30,000 after Mill's edition, has swollen to about 120,000. But there is no real cause for alarm even in such a number as this. No document of any length is ever faultlessly transcribed, and so each fresh document that is examined adds its own quota to the list of various readings, yet at the same time it throws a light of its own, however dim, on the subject of our investigation. It is a help and not a hindrance to us in our search, though at first sight it may seem only to add to our perplexity.

The Collection of the Evidence by itself takes us very little nearer to our goal, apart from its Interpretation. The first step towards this necessary Interpretation is found, as has been already hinted, in a study of the history of the variations. For, isolated as they seem, they are really connected. They are each and all the outcome of a continuous process of change, the factors in which are all in themselves human, and well within the bounds of comprehension. The results are no doubt complicated, but there is no reason why patience and insight need despair of unravelling even the most tangled portions of the skein; and very much has already been done, especially by the latest English editors, Drs Westcott and Hort (Ed. 1881), towards securing this result. The variations have been classified under four heads, Syrian, Western, Alexandrian, and Neutral.

Syrian Readings are so called because they seem to have originated in Syria, and because the chief Patristic authority for them is found in the writings of Fathers (e.g. Chrysostom) who were trained in Antioch, the capital of Syria. This group of variations has the support of the vast mass of later MSS. and Fathers. It is, in fact, certain that the Text current in Antioch in the latter half of the fourth century became without serious change "the prevalent Greek text of the Middle Ages." But the characteristic readings of this group have no support, either from Versions or from Fathers, which can be assigned with certainty to any time before the death of Origen (254). The writings of that Father, however, contain ample evidence of the existence in his day of readings belonging to each of the other three groups.

The Western variations are so called because they are found mainly, though not exclusively, in the Graeco-Latin MSS. and the Old Latin Versions. They have a body of evidence in their favour of extreme antiquity and wide range. All the second century versions (with the partial exception of the Memphitic), the Curetonian Syriac, the Old Latin, and the Thebaic, were largely affected by them, and many second century writers (Just., Tatian, Marcion, Tr.) used what was substantially a Western text. This evidence becomes startling when we consider the character of the readings. Over and over again they bring before us the old thought in a new dress, sometimes rearranging, sometimes amplifying the old materials with astonishing boldness. They in fact reveal unmistakably a perilous crisis, through which the Text passed before the authority of the books had become generally recognised, and while oral tradition of the Apostolic history and doctrine was still strong. Scribes seem often to have felt at liberty to paraphrase rather than to copy the document before them, and even, especially in the historical books, to improve it by alteration or addition when they thought they possessed further or more accurate information. To this feeling we owe indeed the preservation of the priceless tradition incorporated in so many MSS. of St John's Gospel (St John vii. 53-viii. 12), and perhaps the concluding verses of St Mark (Mark xvi. 9-20); but it is clear that if all scribes had taken the same liberty we could never hope to restore our lost originals with any certainty. This happily is not the case. The evidence shows that this lax conception of the scribe's office only affected documents gradually, and was never universal.

Alexandrian, for example, remained in a marked degree free from this source of danger, though apparently the scholars who presided over its famous school of theology became in their turn responsible for a fresh series of changes, and gave rise to the third, or 'Alexandrian,' class of Text. The characteristic Alexandrian readings are neither so numerous, nor so marked, nor so important as the Western. They rarely affect more than a word or two. Their tendency is to modify the grammar and to clear away difficulties connected with proper names, e.g. Bethabara, Gergesenes, Jesus Barabbas. These changes are relatively more numerous in the Epistles than in the Gospels, and, like the Western readings, were only introduced gradually.

Documents preserving a text free alike from Western and from Alexandrian corruption, and so containing what has been called a 'Neutral' Text, continued to be copied in Alexandria and elsewhere. They were largely used by the translators of the Egyptian versions, especially the Memphitic, and by leading Alexandrian writers from Clement (II.) to Cyril (V.).

These four types of Text were current side by side, in various degrees of purity, interacting one upon another, at least from the middle of the fourth century, just as the three earlier types had been interacting since the beginning of the third. This interaction has left its mark in the shape of an extensive mixture of these Texts on almost every extant document to the grievous entanglement of the evidence. Fortunately, however, we have individual MSS. or fairly defined groups of MSS., which sufficiently represent each of these types, except the Alexandrian. And so we are able, by observing the company in which it stands, to refer a large proportion of the readings, even in a document that has suffered considerably from mixture, to the appropriate source in its composite ancestry. Testing our chief MSS. by this method we discover for example a Western element in the Pauline Epp., in the predominantly Neutral B, and a text fundamentally Neutral sprinkled with Western and Alexandrian readings in \aleph . It is to be observed that for the most part the later a MS. is the more purely Syrian is its Text, so completely did that Text succeed in supplanting its rivals in popular estimation.

These then are the four main groups into which the whole mass of various readings fall. In spite of much complication in the evidence, there can be little doubt of their existence. Nor is a scholar, who has once mastered their several characteristics, internal and external, by a careful study of typical examples, often at a loss to which to refer any particular variant that comes before him.

The existence of these four types being granted, and the variants in each particular case being grouped accordingly, it yet remains for us to ask what considerations are to guide us in our decision between them. At this point a fact to which Dr Hort has called attention becomes of the utmost importance. He has pointed out that not only is the evidence for the characteristically 'Syrian' readings late in date, but also that they can again and again be shown to be simple 'conflations,' or weldings into one, of the readings of two of these rival Texts; that they can in no case be shown to have contributed in a similar manner to the formation of any of the others; and that there is no reason to suppose that they ever represent an entirely independent and apparently pure tradition. If this can be regarded as established, and the evidence for it is certainly exceedingly strong, all 'Syrian' evidence—and that, it must be remembered, means the evidence of the vast majority of extant documents—may be disregarded: we have access to all the authorities out of which it was composed. Assuming then that we may now dismiss the whole 'Syrian' group, we are left with the other three, each demonstrably presenting a very early type of Text. And we have to decide on their relative importance; or in other words on the antecedent probability that in any particular case, where their evidence is conflicting, the true reading is to be found in one and not another of the competing Texts. Here again, if we were right in our description of the growth of these types, the problem is considerably simplified. Characteristically Western or Alexandrian readings are, according to our definition of them, corruptions, the result of changes introduced somewhere in the chain of transmission subsequent to the Original, to be rejected as soon as they are discovered, in favour of the 'Neutral' or unadulterated Text, whenever that can be identified. It is, in fact, the justification of the description given above, that this, with but rare, and those intelligible, exceptions, is found to be the case. In almost every instance where the three Texts are at variance the Neutral Text asserts its superiority unmistakably. And in the more ordinary cases, where Western or Alexandrian readings stand out in contrast to a single variant in which both the other Texts combine, the advantage in almost every case remains with the reading which has 'Neutral' support. 'In almost every case'—for the origin of both the Western and Alexandrian types of Text, or rather the date of the common original to which the groups that for the most part support them lead us back, is of such extreme antiquity that we have always to bear in mind the possibility that either of them has preserved the original reading in cases where corruption has affected all other documents. And cases do occur, notably in connexion with the omission of certain words and even whole verses in the last three chapters of St Luke's Gospel, in which documents characteristically Western stand alone in attesting what seems to represent most accurately at least the form of the Gospel as it first left its author's hand; and a few other, and those far less important, readings which have what seems Alexandrian support have fair claims to be considered genuine. And the claim may in both these cases be granted without damage to our description of the general relations between the types of Text; for nothing is claimed for the Neutral Text beyond freedom from characteristically Western or Alexandrian forms of error.

fit each various reading into its proper place in a genealogical tree, starting from the Autograph. There is a second method of treating the evidence which deserves notice before we leave this part of our subject, because it supplies us with a means of comparing the relative importance of the groups of documents which we find opposing one another in any particular instance, without raising the question of their genealogical relationship. And so it not only enables us to verify the results at which we have arrived by genealogy, but it also affords us invaluable assistance whenever the guidance of genealogy fails us, as it does for instance all through the Revelation, for lack of evidence. This method is laborious, but simple. It consists in examining in detail the whole set of readings supported by each of the documents, or rather groups of documents, in question, and seeing what proportion of the readings supported by them are clearly right, and what proportion are clearly wrong when judged by internal evidence alone, with reference that is, in each case, simply to the demands of the context and to capacity for affording a rational explanation of the origin of all the other variants. The result of this process is to establish the overwhelming superiority of the Text contained in B, and the groups, sometimes exceedingly small groups, that support it, in almost every part of the N.T. which it contains. Here again we have to notice that the purity claimed for the Text of B is relative, and not absolute. If followed blindly without regard to all the evidence it would again and again lead us wrong. The conviction of its worth, at which Drs Westcott and Hort have arrived, is due not to any unreasoning attachment to the particular MS., but is based on, and at each step verified by, a careful study of all the evidence available. Accordingly they are enabled, with a precision which in a measure carries its own conviction with it, to point out at once the intrusion of an alien strain into the otherwise pure text of the noble document, and to use each fresh scrap of evidence that becomes available to test and correct their conclusions all along the line.

Conclusion. We come now to the last and most momentous stage in our inquiry. We have considered the object of Textual Criticism, its materials, and its methods. We have to ask whether such materials and such methods are adequate for the object which we have in view. And there can be no doubt about the answer. Though it would not be right to pretend that the true reading can in all cases be determined with absolute certainty, or even to deny that there may be cases in which it has been lost altogether from all the available authorities, yet the materials are, beyond all comparison, more abundant, the results more secure, than is the case with regard to the text of any prose author of classical antiquity. The extremest margin of observed variation leaves seven-eighths of the Text untouched, and while it affects here and there a favourite proof-text it leaves the whole voice of Scripture on the main problems of life and conduct practically unchanged. And even this debatable one-eighth may be reduced by the careful application of the methods indicated till, in the judgement of the most competent critics, "the amount of what can in any sense be called substantial variation hardly forms more than a thousandth part of the entire Text."

Notes on the Text of Secondary Books. It may be interesting for purposes of comparison to give a list here of the authorities for the Text of some of the secondary books mentioned in the article on the limits and growth of the Bible (p. 20).

The Ep. of Clement is contained in A (almost complete), in one cursive (XI.), and in one MS. (XII.) of a Syriac version.

The Ep. of Barnabas is contained in N, in ten cursives, and in one MS. (VIII.) of a Latin version.

The Shepherd of Hermas, about a quarter of which is preserved in N, is contained almost complete in one cursive (XIV.), part of which is now at Leipsic and part on Mount Athos. It is found also in two Latin versions and an Ethiopic.

The Teaching of the Apostles is found only in one cursive (XI.).

B. TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

1. ANCIENT TRANSLATIONS.

By THE REV. R. SINKER, D.D.

Some ancient Translations have been referred to already as forming a certain part of the evidence for the text.

The Samaritan Pentateuch is not indeed a version, for it is in Hebrew, though in the so-called Samaritan letters, which are much the same as the Phœnician. It is, however, of a different recension to the Masoretic. The history of this Pentateuch, the only part of Scripture received by the Samaritans, is very uncertain. It has been held by some that it is that form of the Pentateuch current in the Northern Kingdom, by others that on the foundation of the Samaritan temple on Mount Gerizim, copies of the Pentateuch were procured by the Samaritans from the Jewish exiles in Egypt.

The Samaritan Pentateuch often agrees with the Septuagint against the Massoretic text. This favours the second of the above views, the Septuagint having been made in Egypt.

Among the leading differences between the Samaritan and Massoretic Pentateuchs may be specially noted the much greater length given for the age of the earlier Patriarchs in the former, and the substitution of Gerizim for Elbal in Deut. xxvii. 4.

Two versions exist of the Samaritan Pentateuch:—(1) a Samaritan version (i.e. actually in the Samaritan language), and (2) an Arabic version made in the eleventh century.

The word Targum means an interpretation or version, but, as a matter of fact, it is confined to the versions of the Old Testament into the so-called Chaldee (Aramean). As we have already stated, this language is akin to Hebrew, and was that which in an increasing degree was the vernacular in Palestine after the return from Captivity. In all probability, these versions were at first oral, gradually crystallizing more and more into shape, and ultimately reduced into writing.

The two most important Targums are those of Onkelos on the Pentateuch and of Jonathan ben Uzziel on the Prophets. Both of them present a great contrast to the other Targums, which run far afield from their original and at times introduce the wildest and most puerile stories.

Onkelos is not mentioned earlier than by the Babylonian Talmud (c. 500 A.D.). It is exceedingly probable that the name is a mere variant of that of Aquila (the two names are much more nearly akin when written in Hebrew letters), the Greek translator, of whom we shall speak presently, seeing that of this latter exactly the same things are said in the Jerusalem Talmud as of Onkelos in the Babylonian. The date has been a matter of much dispute, the 1st century B.C., the 1st century A.D., and even the third or fourth. Jonathan ben Uzziel is said by the Babylonian Talmud to have been a disciple of the older Hillel and therefore of the 1st century B.C. Other Targums are those of Pseudo-Jonathan and the Jerusalem Targum, both on the Pentateuch, the latter being fragmentary. These two are akin to each other and are full of the wildest tales. They are works of the 7th or 8th century. Other Targums exist of various parts of the Hagiographa.

The name Septuagint, the "Version of the Seventy," is doubtless to be connected with the various legends as to its origin. The oldest form of the story is that contained in the so-called letter of Aristeas, according to which 72 elders were sent from Jerusalem to Alexandria and by conference achieved a version in 70 days. According to a later story, apparently believed by Philo and certainly by many of the Christian Fathers, the elders were placed separately, each in his own cell, and at the end of 70 days the versions of each were miraculously found to be identical. The story of Aristeas was not challenged till the 16th century, but it is a sufficient refutation to say that the version is undoubtedly the work of Egyptian-Jewish hands.

There can be little doubt that the following is approximately the truth as to the matter. Even before Alexander's time, the Jews had settled in large numbers in Egypt, and the building of Alexandria would help to bring them together yet more largely. As in Palestine, so a fortiori in Egypt, Hebrew had died out, and here Greek, the universal lingua franca, had taken its place. Unless the Jews were to remain ignorant of the contents of their Scriptures, some means must be found of setting them forth in Greek. With hardly an exception, ancient witnesses give the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus (284—246 B.C.) as the date when the translation was made, so that we may probably assume that in his reign the work (doubtless the Law only in the first instance) was reduced to writing or that some specially authorized text was put forth. The work was clearly done piecemeal, as the varying character of the different parts shews, and was finished probably not later than the middle of the second century B.C. (Evidence as to this last point is furnished by the Prologue to Ecclesiasticus and the apocryphal epilogue to Esther.)

The majority of the quotations from the Old Testament in the New are taken from the Septuagint, and this translation was the Bible of the great mass of the Christian Fathers. It would be the only basis of argument between the first Christian teachers and Hellenistic Jews or Gentile inquirers.

All ancient versions of the Old Testament, excepting the Peshitto Syriac, Targums, and the Vulgate, are taken from the Septuagint.

In the 2nd century A.D., other Greek translations, those of Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, were made.

Aquila was a native of Sinope in Pontus and was probably the most literal translator the O. T. ever had, his translation indeed requiring at times a knowledge of Hebrew to understand its Greek interpretation.

Of Symmachus hardly anything is known: he is said to have been an Ebionite and appears to be later than the other two. Theodotion appears to have been a native of Ephesus.

All these versions entered into Origen's great work the Hexapla, in which the six columns were arranged (from left to right) according to their closeness to the Hebrew, thus (1) Hebrew, (2) Hebrew in Greek letters, (3) Aquila, (4) Symmachus, (5) Septuagint, (6) Theodotion.

Besides these, there were three other Greek versions, by authors unknown, none of which, however, embraced the whole of the Old Testament. These are commonly known as the Quinta, Sexta, and Septima.

The chief Syriac Version is that known as the Peshitto, i.e. simple (doubtless in contradistinction to free and paraphrastic). This version, containing both O. and N. T., is probably of the 2nd century of our era. The

O. T. part was taken from the Hebrew, though there are traces of the influence of the Septuagint. It has been for many centuries and still is the Bible of all the fragments of the now disunited Syrian Church.

Besides this may be named (1) the Curetonian, fragments of a version older than the Peshitto. This is as yet known by one MS. of the fifth century, in the Brit. Mus., containing the Gospels only; (2) the Philoxenian or Harclean version of the N. T., made 508 A.D. by one Polycarp for Bishop Philoxenus, and revised a century later by Thomas of Harkel, whence its two names; (3) the so-called Syro-Hexaplaric Version, made in 617 A.D. by Paul, bishop of Tella, from the text of the Septuagint, as given in Origen's Hexapla.

The oldest Latin version was made, not later than the 2nd century A.D., in the Roman province of Africa, the O. T. part being a translation of the Septuagint. Another version, sufficiently different from this to be in all probability independent, was in use in North Italy in the latter part of the fourth century. In 384 A.D., the great scholar Jerome was asked to revise the text and, after partially doing so, was led ultimately to translate the O. T. directly from the Hebrew, the whole work being finished by 405 A.D. This work of Jerome's is known as the Vulgate and ultimately, though very gradually, it superseded the older Latin translation. As in our own Church, however, so in the Roman, the newer version of the Psalms, though of course more accurate, could never dislodge the old familiar one, the Psalter in the Vulgate to this day being what is known as the Gallican Psalter, the 2nd edition of Jerome's revision of the old Latin.

The Gothic version is the work of Ulphilas, appointed bishop of the Mæso-Goths in 348 A.D. The O. T. part of it is taken from the Septuagint, and apparently from the Hexaplaric text; only slight fragments, however, exist of this part of the work. Of the N. T. much larger fragments are known, by far the most important MS. being the Codex Argenteus of the Gospels, written in the 6th century and now in the University Library of Upsala.

The Egyptian Versions are three in number, all in what is commonly known as Coptic. They are known as the Memphitic, Thebaic and Bashmuric, representing respectively the dialects of Lower and Upper Egypt, and of the region of the Delta. The second of the above is very incomplete in the N. T., and of the O. T. merely a few fragments survive. Of the third very little survives. The date of these versions, in part at any rate, must be decidedly ancient, perhaps not later than the end of the 2nd century. See above, p. 36.

The only other ancient versions needing to be mentioned are the Ethiopic and Armenian versions. The former, the Bible of the ancient Abyssinian Church, has been variously referred to the 4th and later centuries. The O. T. therein is translated from the Septuagint. The Armenian version is the work of Miesrob and his coadjutors, shortly after the time of the Council of Ephesus, 431 A.D. The elaborate Armenian alphabet of 36 letters was specially devised for this, replacing the Syriac alphabet which had previously been in use. The Old Testament is from the Septuagint.

2. ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS. HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE.

BY THE REV. W. F. MOULTON, D.D., HEAD MASTER OF THE LEYS SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE.

i. The first English Bible is associated with the great name of John Wycliffe. Attempts had been made in the early part of the fourteenth century to supply the Scriptures in a language intelligible to the common people, but these had been very partial and insufficient. When Wycliffe began to send throughout the land his itinerant evangelists, he saw the necessity of providing them with the Bible in English. As in his controversial writings his leading principle was the supreme authority of Scripture, so he made it the chief duty of his 'poor preachers' faithfully to scatter the seed of God's Word. Wycliffe himself does not lay claim to the translation which now bears his name, but we possess evidence which leaves no doubt that the work is his, though in the execution of it he received much help from friends. Of the exact character and detailed history of Wycliffe's Bible little was generally known until 1850, when for the first time the complete work appeared in print, edited by Forshall and Madden. No fewer than 170 manuscripts were examined for this edition, and the researches of the editors led them to results which are now accepted by all. It is very plain that we possess two versions, not one only, the older completed in 1382, the other about 1388. Of the earlier two-thirds must be assigned to Nicholas Hereford: the remainder (the New Testament, the last books of the Old Testament, and one-third of the Apocrypha) is in all probability from the hand of Wycliffe himself. Hereford's portion ends abruptly, in Baruch iii. 20: his citation before the Synod in London (1382) probably explains the sudden close. The later translation, which is introduced by a Prologue of remarkable interest, is mainly due to John Purvey, Wycliffe's assistant at Lutterworth. It cannot be called a distinct version, but is rather the work of a careful and skilled reviser. Purvey's aims were to secure a better original text, and to improve the English renderings; and his work shews a great advance on the early version in correctness and clearness, and in ease of style.

These Versions were of necessity made from the Latin. They include all the Canonical Books and almost all the Apocryphal Books that are usually found in English Bibles. To many books are prefixed short prefaces or prologues, and explanatory words, or 'glosses', are often introduced into the text. A striking feature of the later Version is the large body of marginal notes, critical and explanatory, derived from Jerome, Augustine, and other Fathers, but especially from Lyra, a celebrated commentator of the fourteenth century. The work, thus carefully executed, was circulated far and wide. To what extent it has influenced later English Versions is a much debated question, to which reference will again be made.

ii. William Tindale was born near Berkeley in Gloucestershire, about 1490. When about eighteen he entered at Oxford, where he remained seven years; from 1516 to 1521 he studied at Cambridge. Colet had left Oxford in 1505. Erasmus lectured in Cambridge as Professor from 1509 to 1514; and his first edition of the Greek Testament (the earliest Greek Testament published) bears date 1516. Hence the influences of Tindale's prolonged University career must have done much to foster the great purpose of his life, to translate the Scriptures for his countrymen. In 1523 he went up to London hoping to execute his work under the patronage of Tunstall, Bishop of London. After a year of anxious and fruitless waiting he left England for the Continent, where he remained until his death in 1536. After landing in Hamburg, it seems probable that he visited Luther at Wittenberg. In 1525 we find him at Cologne, engaged in printing a quarto edition of the New Testament at Quentel's press. When about ten sheets were printed his plan was discovered, and an interdict placed on the work. On this Tindale fled to Worms, with Roye his assistant, carrying with him the sheets already printed. Whether this edition was ever completed is uncertain; but in the same year, or early in 1526, an octavo edition of 3000 copies was published in Worms, at the press of P. Schoeffer the younger. Of the sheets printed at Cologne one fragment remains (Matt. i. 1-xxii. 12), which is now in the British Museum. Prefixed to the Gospel is a prologue of some length, which is mainly translated from Luther: the marginal notes also, and the arrangement of the table of contents, clearly shew Luther's influence. Of the Worms edition we possess one complete copy, now preserved in the Baptist College, Bristol: it contains no notes or prologues, but only a short unsigned Address to the Reader. These two works differ so slightly in the translated text (as far as we can now compare them) that they are usually taken together as constituting Tindale's first New Testament. The printed copies, bearing no author's name, reached England in the course of 1526. Though proscribed, they were eagerly sought after; and the large demand led to the publication of pirated editions by Dutch printers, and also to the issue of an unauthorized revision of Tindale's translation, by Joye, one of his assistants. Tindale's second edition, published at Antwerp in Nov. 1534 by Marten Emperour, bears his own name: 'the New Testament diligently corrected and compared with the Greek by William Tindale.' This edition is furnished with marginal notes and prologues, and also contains a very small portion of the Old Testament and Apocrypha, namely certain 'Epistles' read in the Services of the Church. The translation was 'yet once again corrected by William Tindale': the first title-page of this volume has the date 1535, the second 1534, and on the latter is added a trade-mark, with the letters G. H. These letters were first interpreted by Mr Bradshaw (1881), as denoting G. van der Haghen, the Antwerp publisher. To the same year (1535) belongs another edition, conspicuous for the strange spelling of the words; there is little doubt that the edition was pirated, and that the peculiarities are due to the Flemish printers. As many as forty editions of Tindale's Testament were published from 1525 to 1566; the first printed in England was a folio of 1536. The period from 1526 to 1534 seems to have been devoted by Tindale in large measure to work on the Old Testament; and in 1530 he published the Book of Genesis, printed by Hans Luft at Malborow in the land of Hesse (Marburg). The other books of the Pentateuch were no doubt printed at the same press, but are without name or date. A revised edition of Genesis appeared in 1534. All these books are furnished with prologues and notes, often keenly controversial. With the exception of a translation of Jonah (1531) no other portion of the Old Testament was published by Tindale himself. He laboured however to the last. A letter is extant in which he begs for the use of his Hebrew Bible, Grammar and Dictionary, in his place of imprisonment; and when the end came he had completed the translation of nine books, Joshua-Chronicles. Tindale suffered martyrdom at Vilvorde, in October 1536.

iii. Miles Coverdale was born in Yorkshire in 1488, and was educated at Cambridge under Robert Barnes, in the Monastery of the Augustine Friars. With the exception of a statement by Foxe, that in 1529 he assisted Tindale in translating the Pentateuch, we have hardly any record of Coverdale's history earlier than 1534. From that year to 1541 he is closely identified with the history of the English Bible, as given below. After the fall of his patron Cromwell (1540) he left England, and remained abroad until the accession of Edward VI. From 1551 to 1553 he held the see of Exeter. He died in 1569.

The King's proclamation (1530), which promised to the people the New Testament in their own tongue, was followed up in 1534 by a petition from Convocation for a translation of the whole Bible. Urged probably by Cromwell, Coverdale, who had long been an earnest student of Scripture, devoted himself to the work of translation; and in October 1535 gave to the world the first printed English Bible. The copies preserved contain two different forms of title-page, in foreign and in English type, respectively; but there is no mention of the printer's name or the place of publication. It is now believed that the book was printed by J. van Meteren of Antwerp, and then sold to Nicolson the Southwark printer. On the Antwerp title-page the translation is said to be made 'out of Dutch and Latin'; but these words were omitted by the English printer. The volume is dedicated to Henry VIII.; and both the dedication and the prologue bear Coverdale's name. These documents shew clearly that he undertook the work at the instance of others, and also that he had no wish to claim the position of a direct and independent translator from the original texts. He refers in plain terms to Latin and German translations by which he had been helped; and declares that he had 'purely and faithfully translated out of five sundry interpreters.' Coverdale's Bible contains very little extraneous matter; his few marginal notes are limited to explanations, various readings, and alternative renderings. Two other editions were issued by Nicolson in 1537; and now we read on the title-page, 'Set forth with the King's most gracious license.' A later edition of the Bible (1550, 1553), the New Testaments of 1538, and three Latin-English Testaments (1538), containing Coverdale's Version somewhat altered, can only be mentioned here.

iv. We must leave Coverdale for a time to notice a Bible of 1537, printed abroad (probably at Antwerp), but published in London by Grafton and Whitchurch, and issued with the King's license. On the title-page the translation is ascribed to Thomas Matthew, and the dedication also bears this signature. In various parts of the volume we meet with the capital letters R. G., E. W., W. T., I. R. Grafton's, Whitchurch's and Tindale's initials are recognised at once: I. R. indicates John Rogers (1500-1555), Tindale's faithful friend during the last two years of his life, who was one of the first to suffer martyrdom under Mary. Rogers was the real editor of this work; and it is probable that Thomas Matthew was merely a name assumed by him, as in 1555 he is described as 'John Rogers alias Matthew.' In this volume the New Testament and half the Old Testament are Tindale's, the remainder Coverdale's. 'Matthew's' Bible is remarkable as containing a very large amount of marginal commentary (explanatory and controversial) and prefatory matter, derived to a great extent from Olivetan's French Bible (1535).

v. Closely akin to Matthew's Bible is that which bears the name of an Oxford scholar, Richard Taverner (1539). In the Old Testament the chief difference consists in the omission of many notes. The New Testament however often shews signs of careful and skilled revision.

vi. We now return to Coverdale, who is connected with the chief Biblical enterprise of 1539. The previous year he had spent in Paris; commissioned by Cromwell to superintend the printing of a new Bible, differing in important respects both from Matthew's and from his own work of 1535. When the printing was nearly completed, an interdict was laid upon the work by the Inquisition; but, through Bp. Bounner's assistance, the sheets were saved, and the presses sent over to England. In April, 1539, 'Cromwell's Bible'—otherwise known as (the first edition of) the Great Bible, as being the Bible 'of largest volume'—was issued from the press. On the title-page is an elaborate engraving, which represents the king giving the Word of God to the clergy, and, through Cromwell, to the laity of his kingdom, amid the great joy of his subjects. The Bible is here described as 'truly translated after the verity of the Hebrew and Greek texts, by the diligent study of divers excellent learned men'; but there can be no doubt that the translation, which is a revision of that in Matthew's Bible, is due to Coverdale. There are no marginal notes: though promised in the Prologue, and even referred to by 'hands' and other signs in the margin, they were never added in any edition of the Great Bible. In April, 1540, an improved edition was published, containing a long Preface written by Archbishop Cranmer: as this Preface appears in all subsequent editions, the Great Bible has been widely known as Cranmer's. Five other editions of the Great Bible appeared in 1540-1; two of these purport to have been 'overseen and perused' by Bishops Tunstall and Heath, but their revision can have been but slight. The points of difference indeed amongst all seven editions, though by no means few, were relatively of small account: Coverdale seems certainly to have been the reviser throughout.

vii. During the reign of Edward VI. many editions of the Bible (in various versions) and of the New Testament (mainly Tindale's) were published; but, with one partial exception, no new translation was undertaken. The isolated attempt was a rendering of St Matthew and part of St Mark by Sir J. Cheke, formerly Professor of Greek at Cambridge. The chief characteristic of this work is a strained and excessive avoidance of words derived from Latin or Greek.

viii. The accession of Mary threatened danger to all who were closely identified with the translation or circulation of the English Bible. Coverdale narrowly escaped with his life; Cranmer and Rogers were brought to the stake; many others sought safety in flight. The work of Bible-revision was however continued and advanced by the band of English exiles who in 1555 found their way to Geneva, the city of Calvin. Amongst these were Knox and Coverdale; but those with whom we are here most closely concerned are W. Whittingham, who succeeded Knox as English pastor in Geneva, T. Sampson, and A. Gilby. To Whittingham is ascribed the translation published at Geneva in 1557, commonly known as the Genevan New Testament. In this Testament, which was printed in Roman type, we find the now familiar verse-division, which had been introduced by R. Stephen into his Greek Testament of 1551. The volume contains 'annotations of all hard places,' also an introductory 'Epistle' written by Calvin: an Address to the Reader follows, from which we learn that the translation was executed by one hand.

This version however was cast into the shade by the appearance in 1560 of a volume, dedicated to Queen Elizabeth, containing a translation of the whole Bible. This is the Genevan Bible, of which probably 150 editions were published, in England and Scotland, between 1560 and 1616. This volume resembles the Testament of 1557 in the use of Roman type, in the division of the text into verses, and in its copious notes, explanatory and controversial. The introductory address shews that the work was the result of combined labours, extending over two years. No names are given, but it is probably to Whittingham, Sampson, and Gilby, that the work is almost wholly due. The expenses were borne by the English community in Geneva, amongst others by Sir T. Bodley, who afterwards obtained a patent for the printing of this Bible in England. The Genevan Version is familiarly known as the Breeches Bible, from the rendering in Genesis iii. 7.

Tomson's Testament is a small volume published in 1576, purporting to be a translation by Beza. It is really a revision of the New Testament of 1560, with a greatly enlarged body of notes, mainly from Beza: the changes of translation are of no special importance. Tomson's Testament often took the place of the true Genevan Version in editions of the Genevan Bible: in 1599 a new translation of the Apocalypse, with an elaborate commentary, was introduced, perhaps by Tomson himself. The earliest Bible printed in Scotland (1579) was an edition of the Genevan Version; it is generally known as the Basendyne Bible, from the name of one of its publishers.

ix. During the early years of Elizabeth's reign the English Versions chiefly in circulation were the Great Bible and the Genevan Bible. The strong ecclesiastical bias often shewn in the Genevan notes was unwelcome to many who owned the excellence of the translation. Archbishop Parker devised a plan for a revision of 'Cranmer's' Bible by the joint labour of a number of learned men, mostly Bishops. The revisers were instructed to follow 'the common English translation used in the churches,' unless alteration were necessary, and to avoid bitter and controversial notes. In three or four years the Bishops' Bible was completed, and was presented to the Queen in 1568. There is no Dedication. Cranmer's Prologue is reproduced, and there are Prefaces (written by Parker) to the Old and New Testaments. This edition was very carelessly printed, but many of the blunders were removed in a quarto edition of 1569. A revision of the Bishops' Bible appeared in 1572. Attention had been called to errors in the New Testament of 1568, and in this part of the work the edition of 1572 gives proof of careful revision; but the Old Testament fared ill, for many corrections that had been made in 1569 were now passed over, and old blunders restored. The influence of Convocation secured a large circulation for the Bishops' Bible, of which nearly 20 editions were published, besides as many of the New Testament in separate form. There seems to have been considerable irregularity and license in the printing, many unauthorized changes finding their way into the text. In the Psalter, the Bishops' Version failed to maintain its ground against the Great Bible: in the edition of 1572 the two versions stand side by side, but in all later editions except one (1585) the old Psalter stands alone. The marginal notes are much less numerous than those of the Genevan Bible, and are very uneven in quality and in distribution. Inequality is indeed the most marked characteristic of the whole work.

x. In 1582 was published a New Testament 'translated faithfully into English out of the authentical Latin, according to the best corrected copies of the same, diligently compared with the Greek and other editions in divers languages... In the English College of Rheims.' The whole Bible was translated at the same time, but the publication of the Old Testament was delayed until 1609-10. The two parts of the version are usually named from the places at which they were published, Rheims and Douai. The Prefaces explain with care and ability the plan of the translation, which, it is alleged, had been rendered necessary by the wide circulation of 'heretical translations poisoning the people.' No names are given; but there is no doubt that the translation of both Testaments is mainly due to Gregory Martin, formerly Fellow of St John's College, Oxford, a man of great learning. With him were associated other Oxford scholars, chiefly Reynolds, Bristow and Worthington, the two last-named supplying the notes, an essential part of Roman Catholic Versions. In modern editions the Douai translation has been very freely altered, many renderings being taken from the Authorized Version.

xi. The first impulse towards the preparation of a new Version of the Bible was given at the Hampton Court Conference, held in January 1604. The leader of the Puritan Party, Dr Reynolds, 'moved his Majesty that there might be a new translation of the Bible, because those which were allowed in the reign of King Henry VIII. and Edward VI. were corrupt, and not answerable to the truth of the original.' The King in reply affirmed that there existed no good translation in English, and that the Genevan was worst of all; he also strongly condemned some of the marginal notes in the Genevan Bible. The King also gave an outline of a plan for this new version:—that the work should be assigned to the Universities, and the translation then reviewed by the Bishops and the chief learned of the church, presented to the Privy Council, and ratified by himself. In July 1604 the King announced that he had chosen 54 translators, to meet in various companies at Westminster, Oxford, and Cambridge. Whatever preliminary work may have been done by the scholars selected, we hear nothing further of the project until 1607; and in the list of names, which is then for the first time supplied, 47 only are mentioned. The Books of the Bible were thus allotted:—Genesis—2 Kings to the first Westminster Company, consisting of 10 members; 1 Chronicles—Canticles to the first Cambridge Company, of 8 members; Isaiah—Malachi to the first Oxford Company, of 7 members; the Apocrypha to the second Cambridge Company, of 7 members; the Gospels, Acts, Revelation, to the second Oxford Company, of 11 members; and the Epistles to the second Westminster Company, of 7 members. The accounts which we possess differ in some degree as to the names of the revisers, but enough is known to shew the general excellence of the choice. Of the rules laid down for the work the following are the most important:—the Bishops' Bible to be followed, and 'as little altered as the truth of the original will permit'; the translations of Tindale, Matthew, Coverdale, Whitechurch (i.e. the Great Bible), Geneva, to be used when they agree better with the text than the Bishops' Bible; the old ecclesiastical words (church, &c.) to be retained; no marginal notes to be affixed, unless for necessary explanation of some Hebrew or Greek words. Provision was made for consulting scholars outside on special points, for the revision of the work of each company by their colleagues, and for a final revision or review for the harmonizing of details. As 'directors in each Company' were appointed, the Deans of Westminster and Chester for the two Westminster Companies, and the King's Professors in the Hebrew or Greek in either University. The final revision by a small Committee occupied nine months. The new translation was published in 1611. The familiar Dedication to the King, and also a long Preface, ably setting forth the principles and aims of the work, are said to have been written by Dr Miles Smith, afterwards Bishop of Gloucester. The words on the title-page, 'appointed to be read in churches,' would seem to imply express authorization; but we have no evidence that the book ever received formal sanction. It was however naturally regarded as the legitimate successor of the Bishops' Bible, which had been directly sanctioned by Convocation; just as the Bishops' Bible had succeeded to the position of the Great Bible, which was 'authorised and appointed by the commandment of Henry VIII.' But no kind of authorization would have enabled this version to maintain its ground, had not its intrinsic excellence ultimately commended it to all.

The later history of the Authorized Version has many points of interest, but we have space for but few particulars. The earliest editions were very incorrectly printed, and it was by slow degrees that a high standard of accuracy was attained. Not a few editions are commonly known by names derived from gross blunders in their text. The first editions remarkable for their accuracy were those of 1629, 1638 (Cambridge). At a later date Dr Paris (Cambridge 1762) and Dr Blayney (Oxford 1769) bestowed great labour on the marginal notes and references: in the Bible of 1611 these were comparatively scanty. The marginal dates (mostly from Usher) were first inserted in 1701.—King James's Version had a formidable rival in the Genevan Bible, and it was not until the middle of the century that the Authorized Version held the field. In 1652 the Long Parliament made an order for a new translation, but the scheme was abandoned. Until 1662 the Epistles and Gospels in the Prayer Book were taken from the Great Bible, with but slight alteration: in that year, when the Prayer Book assumed its present form, the translation of 1611 was adopted throughout, except in the Psalter, the various Canticles, the Commandments, and a few isolated quotations of Scripture. The Psalter is Coverdale's, as we have seen: the translation of the Canticles, &c., differs more or less from all our versions.

xii. In 1856 the subject of a revised translation was brought before Convocation, but without any definite result. Fourteen years later the discussion was revived, and a Committee was appointed by the Convocation of Canterbury to consider the desirableness of revising the Authorized Version. The Convocation of York resolved to stand aloof. On receiving a favourable report from its Committee, in May 1870 the Convocation of Canterbury appointed a Committee of its own members to undertake the work of revision, and authorized this Committee to invite the co-operation of other scholars, 'to whatever nation or religious body they may belong.' Two Companies of revision were formed without delay, and invitations issued to scholars belonging to the Church of England and various bodies of Nonconformists. To the Old Testament Company were assigned nine members of Convocation and fifteen invited members; for the New Testament Company the numbers were seven and eighteen respectively. Both Companies entered on their work in the course of June, 1870, holding their meetings in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster. The chief rules of revision laid down by the Committee of Convocation were the following:—the alterations to be as few as possible, consistently with faithfulness, and to be made in the language of the Authorized and earlier Versions; the text adopted to be that for which the evidence is decidedly preponder-ating; each portion to be revised twice; all changes to be made on the first and provisional revision by the decision of simple majorities, but not to stand finally unless approved by a two-thirds vote; the work of each Company to be communicated to the other, as completed; external scholars to be consulted on difficult points, if necessary.

Many changes were made in the constitution of both Companies, through death and retirement, and the appointment of new members; but during the greater part of the work the Old Testament Company consisted of nearly thirty members, the New Testament Company of twenty-five. In 1871 the co-operation of American scholars was sought; and two Revision Companies were formed in the United States.

In the New Testament the work of revision occupied about ten years and a half; in the Old Testament fourteen years. The Revised New Testament was published on May 17, 1881; the whole Bible on May 19, 1885. The main body of results rests on the authority of English and American Revisers alike; but Appendices are added, specifying certain points as to which the American Companies had formed and wished to place on record a different judgement. The Prefaces to the Old Testament and New Testament furnish information as to the principles of revision, and notice some important points of detail.

Having reviewed the history of the several English Bibles, we will now notice the characteristics and mutual relations of the Versions themselves, taking separately the New Testament, the Old Testament, and the Apocryphal Books. The Wycliffite versions however stand by themselves, and may be considered as a whole. They depend entirely on the Vulgate, and upon manuscripts of the Vulgate which were often faulty and inaccurate. Each version is carefully executed and generally faithful; but the earlier is at times obscure through excessive literalness of rendering. The Vulgate itself varies greatly in quality: a translation of the Vulgate therefore must be of unequal value. The chief question before us now, however, is the relation of these versions to those which follow them. Some hold that Tindale 'is merely a full-grown Wycliffe,' and that the excellence of the Authorized Version is thus in large measure inherited from the Bible of 1382. Tindale on the other hand denies that he was 'holpen with English of any that had interpreted the same or such like thing in the Scripture beforetime.' Internal evidence is fully consistent with this statement, for most of the direct coincidences are explained by the common use of the Vulgate. The earliest translation may have exerted great indirect influence by shewing the language and style most fitting for the Bible of the people; current proverbial expressions and familiar technical terms would naturally be retained; direct imitation is most improbable. Tindale's work bears the clear stamp of originality.

I. New Testament.—i. The Greek text from which Tindale translated was that of Erasmus (eds. of 1519, 1522). His renderings shew that, whilst aided by the Vulgate and Luther, and still more by Erasmus's Latin Version, he made it his chief aim faithfully and independently to follow the Greek. His second New Testament differs very frequently from the first, mainly in a more exact rendering of the original text; and his latest edition (1534 G. H.) shews in some four hundred places the hand of the careful reviser. The characteristics of his style may be learnt from the Authorized Version itself; for from 85 to 90 per cent. of the New Testament of 1611 is to be found in Tindale. No doubt much had been gained between 1535 and 1611; but we cannot study Tindale's work without being impressed by his general accuracy, and acknowledging that he furnished to all later translators a wonderful pattern of simple and dignified English.

ii. The 'Latin and Dutch' (German) authorities followed by Coverdale in the New Testament were the Vulgate, Luther, and the Zürich Bible—a German-Swiss translation by Zwingli and others, founded on Luther's in the New Testament and a large portion of the Old. He appears to have taken Tindale's Testament of 1526 as the basis of his own, making alterations here and there in deference to Tindale's later revision, or Luther's version or the Zürich Bible, or in accordance with his own true feeling for rhythm and ease of style. The amount of change is small.

iii. The New Testament of Matthew's Bible is Tindale's latest edition; the differences do not average one for each chapter.—Taverner's New Testament is interesting, but is very unequal in different parts. His variations from Tindale, which are not very numerous, shew appreciation of the Greek, and are often good and vigorous renderings. Not a few have held their ground.

iv. In his work upon the Great Bible (1539), Coverdale had before him Tindale's translation (in Matthew's Bible) and his own revision of 1535. In the main he follows Tindale; where he differs, it is usually in deference to the Vulgate or Erasmus. The chief characteristic of the Great Bible is seen in the additions to the text, mainly derived from the Latin: e.g., it is here that Luke xvi. 36 first finds a place.

v. In the two Geneva Testaments—three, if Tomson's be included—the influence of Beza is very marked, both in the Greek text translated and in the interpretation of the Greek. As a critic Beza was often rash; but his translation and commentary were used by Whittingham and his associates with the greatest advantage. The basis of their work in the New Testament was not the Great Bible, but Tindale's translation as given in Matthew's Bible. It is necessary carefully to distinguish between the Testaments of 1557 and 1560: the latter is a much more mature and important work, which exercised great influence on the translation of 1611.

vi. Of the Bishops' Bible it is very difficult to speak, as the several portions greatly differ in merit, according to the revisers' care and skill. Some books give proof of excellent work. In accordance with the instructions given, the Great Bible was throughout taken as the basis of the revision; but we find numerous proofs of the influence of the Genevan Version.

vii. The carefully executed, but eccentric, Rhemish Testament might seem to have no place in this family of English Versions, as being derived from the Vulgate. Whilst however this version stands apart from the rest in its Latinized diction, its strange and obscure terms, its perverse literalness, yet it has links of connexion both with preceding and with later Versions. In a multitude of places the Rhemish Testament adopted earlier renderings, and the influence which in turn it exerted on the Authorized Version was considerable. The Latin text before the translators (though often faulty) is frequently nearer the original than was the Greek text of their time, for the best Greek manuscripts were then unknown. It is also clear that in rendering the Latin the translators had constant reference to the Greek text, so that the influence of the Greek is often manifest where the Latin could have been no guide. The use made of the Wycliffite Versions, likewise derived from the Latin, is apparently very slight.

viii. The elaborate Preface to the Bible of 1611 tells us very little about the revisers' principles and plans of work. In one passage they make reference to helps used, but only in general terms. 'Neither did we think much to consult the Translators or Commentators, Chaldee, Hebrew, Syrian, Greek or Latin, no nor the Spanish, French, Italian, or Dutch.' Besides the English Versions which they were directed to consult, they diligently studied the Rhemish Testament, though its eccentricities found no favour with them. They were instructed to make the Bishops' Bible the basis of their revision; the distinctive renderings of the Bishops' Bible, however, are very frequently set aside, in favour of others suggested by the Genevan or Rhemish translations. In various parts of the New Testament the proportion of new renderings is but small; but even here the ability of the revisers, who have used old materials with admirable discrimination and skill, is clearly manifest. They cannot be said to have followed consistently any one Greek text. The texts most widely known at that time, those of Beza (ed. 4, 1569) and Stephen (1550), are very nearly akin; when they differ, the revisers usually follow Beza. His influence on their interpretation of the text is manifest throughout, usually as an influence for good. The separation of the revisers into six companies introduced many inconsistencies of rendering; and these were multiplied through the avowed preference of the revisers for varying the translation of the same Greek or Hebrew word. But the chief weakness of the Authorized Version in the New Testament lies in the character of the Greek text translated. Few important manuscripts were known, and these were not rightly estimated. This defect however belonged not to the men, but to the age.

ix. Of the New Testament of 1881 little can here be said: the reader is referred to the Revisers' preface. No one Greek text was followed, but the great majority of the readings adopted have the support of the highest authorities in textual criticism.

II. Old Testament.—i. The portions of the Old Testament published by Tindale (not reckoning the 'Epistles of the Old Testament') were the Pentateuch and Jonah. Early writers assert that he also left in manuscript a translation of the books from Joshua to Chronicles, which first appeared in Matthew's Bible: and the statement receives strong support from the character of the translation itself. Tindale's independence as a translator of the Old Testament has been denied, but on altogether insufficient grounds. The internal evidence of his translations confirms what we gather from his own writings as to his knowledge of Hebrew. Hebrew study indeed had attracted great attention, in Germany especially, during the early years of the sixteenth century. Tindale had no lack of helps and authorities; and he used them as he used Erasmus in the New Testament. An examination of his translations, which are all of the same general character, shews that he made use of the Vulgate and Luther, and the Latin Version of Pagninus; but the whole is clearly the work of a man who is translating from the Hebrew for himself. His frequent appropriation of Luther's notes does but bring into relief the independent manner in which he makes use of Luther's translation. As in the New Testament, a large portion of Tindale's work still lives in the Authorized Version: in the Pentateuch, probably, more than 80 per cent.

ii. Coverdale in his Bible of 1535 avowedly translates from the German and the Latin. Careful study of his text and notes has made it probable that in the Old Testament his 'five interpreters' are Tindale (Pentateuch, Jonah), the Vulgate, Pagninus's Latin Version, Luther, and the Zürich Bible. Of these the last-named stood first with him; at all events in those parts of the Bible in which Tindale had not preceded him, Coverdale is mainly a translator of the Zürich Version.

iii. Of Matthew's Bible little remains to be said. The Pentateuch is Tindale's, with very slight alteration; the nine following books are from the same hand: but Tindale's Old Testament Epistles and Jonah are passed over. What remains in the Old Testament is nearly identical with Coverdale's Version; there are however throughout the volume minute alterations which shew careful editing. Taverner's Old Testament has little that is distinctive: in his variations from 'Matthew' he seems usually to follow the Vulgate.

iv. The Old Testament of the Great Bible (1539) is a careful revision of 'Matthew' with the help of Münster's valuable Latin Version. In the first fourteen books the amount of change is comparatively small: the Prophetic Books are dealt with more freely. The same kind of revision was continued in the editions of the next two years, especially that of April, 1540. The Book of Psalms in this Bible is of peculiar interest, as being nearly identical with the Prayer-Book Psalter, so widely known and highly prized. The additions to the text which the reader who compares Bible and Prayer-Book will discover illustrate a marked feature of this Bible, to which we have already called attention. The Psalter contains as many as 70 or 80 of these additions, mainly derived from the Vulgate. Such added words and clauses were freely admitted by Coverdale, but were placed within brackets, printed in different type, and marked by a special sign.

v. The chief tendencies of the Geneva revision of the Great Bible (1560) were towards faithful literalness in the rendering of the Hebrew, and the improvement of the English. In both respects this version takes a very high place. The French Bible of Olivetan, revised by Calvin (1558), exerted some influence on the translators; but their chief aids were the Latin Versions of Pagninus and Münster, and another, mainly by Leo Juda, published in 1543.

vi. The various editions of the Bishops' Bible contain a large amount of irregular and unauthorized alteration, especially in the Old Testament. As a rule this version returns to the Great Bible (usually, however, removing the interpolations in the text), and much valuable aid given by the Geneva translators is disregarded.

vii. The Douai Bible, not published until 1609, 1610, probably exerted no influence on the Authorized Version. The general characteristics of the translation are the same in both Testaments—excessive literalness, Latinized words and style, obscurity. In the Old Testament, however, their original text is usually better than in the New Testament; and the excellence of Jerome's Version not unfrequently led the translators to excellent results. In the Psalter, where the ordinary Latin text is poor and inaccurate, the Douai Version is often unintelligible.

viii. The helps available for the Revision of 1611 have been in great part already mentioned. It is only necessary to add three valuable Latin translations, by Castalio (1551), Arias Montanus (1572), Tremellius (1579). Of earlier English Versions the Geneva exerted by far the greatest influence; and in most books the improvements introduced seem in large measure to be traceable to this version and one or other of the Latin translations mentioned above. As however the different portions of the Bishops' Bible differ widely in excellence, the extent of divergence in the revision varies accordingly; it is in the Prophetic Books that the power of the Genevan Version asserts itself with greatest effect. The general characteristics of the Authorized Version are the same in the Old Testament as in the New. No examples of its excellence are more striking than those furnished by some chapters in the Prophetic Books, in which the translation is wrought out with wonderful felicity, built up in part with earlier materials, but receiving its last touches from the Revisers themselves. In such passages the English of this Bible 'lives on the ear like a music that can never be forgotten.'

ix. The Revisers of 1885 explain in their Preface the chief points in their procedure. They had no sufficient materials for the construction of a new Hebrew text; but in marginal notes they often call attention to the diversity of reading in ancient authorities. On the whole, the Revised Bible stands much nearer to the Authorized Version in the Old Testament than in the New.

III. Apocrypha.—The Apocryphal Books have had a place in every English translation of the Bible; and the table of books included has in the main agreed with that which is familiar to us in the Authorized Version. In the Bibles of Coverdale and Matthew, in the Great Bible (but not in the edition of November 1541); and in the Genevan Bible, the Apocryphal Books have a special Preface in which attention is called to their exceptional character. As regards the translation, Coverdale is as elsewhere mainly dependent on the Zurich Bible; and Rogers differs but little from Coverdale, except by adding the Prayer of Manasses, translating it from a French Bible. A great advance was made by the Genevan translators, who were the first to render the Greek text in a number of passages in which a widely different (Latin) text had been followed by their predecessors. Strange to say, these corrections were set aside in the Bishops' Bible: but they were restored in 1611. In other respects, however, the Authorized Version usually follows very close to the Bishops' Bible in the Apocrypha. None of the Apocryphal Books was issued with the Revised Bible of 1885; but they were intrusted to the same revisers, and this last portion of their work is near completion.

IV. INTRODUCTIONS TO THE SEVERAL BOOKS OF THE BIBLE, WITH SUMMARIES OF CONTENTS.

1. THE SEVERAL BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

THE HEXATEUCH. BY THE RIGHT REV. J. J. STEWART PEROWNE, D.D., LORD BISHOP OF WORCESTER.

The Hexateuch. The first five Books of the Bible according to the Jewish tradition form a complete whole in themselves and a distinct division of the Hebrew Scriptures under the name of Torah, or Torah of Moses, i.e. the Teaching or Law of Moses. A new division, that of the (earlier) Prophets, begins with Joshua. But recent criticism has shewn that the Book of Joshua is marked by the same characteristics in point of structure (the use of the same documents) as the earlier books; and moreover that as the earlier books give us the origin and growth of the Hebrew nation, and its vicissitudes, the discipline of the nation by the bondage in Egypt, the wandering in the wilderness, the legislation there given,—all the steps preparatory to the occupation of the Promised Land, the work would be incomplete if it did not close with the occupation itself. People and Land are the two leading ideas which beginning with Genesis are never lost sight of till they culminate in Joshua. Hence instead of the Greek name Pentateuch given to the Five Books modern critics have adopted the name Hexateuch for the Six Books, including the Book of Joshua. Four different documents form the basis of the whole work, having their several characteristics of style, phraseology, &c. There is the principal Elohist (so called from his predominant use of Elohim as the name of God), the Jahvist who prefers the Name Jehovah (Jahveh), a second Elohist whose work has been taken up by an editor and so incorporated with that of the Jahvist that it is not always easy to distinguish them, and lastly the Deuteronomist. A final editor (or editors) has made use of all these materials and given them their present form.

Genesis. The book consists of two very unequal divisions. I. The early history of mankind, i.—xi.; II. The history of the Patriarchs, the Fathers of the Jewish race, xii.—L. The main structure of the book rests on the principle of genealogies. The phrase “These are the generations” marking different sections occurs ten times (one of these however being a mere repetition xxxvi. 9), and in every instance except the first, which refers to the Creation of the world, is a heading to a genealogical tree or certain portions of family history. In ii. 4 it is doubtful whether the phrase “these are the generations of the heaven and the earth” closes the first account of creation, or whether it opens the second. In v. 1, we have “This is the book of the generations of Adam.” Afterwards the phrase is, “These are the generations” of Noah in vi. 9, of the sons of Noah in x. 1; of Shem in xi. 10; of Terah the father of Abram in xi. 27; of Ishmael in xxv. 12; of Isaac in xxv. 19; of Esau in xxxvi. 1, 9; of Jacob in xxxvii. 2. But these genealogical trees do not exactly correspond with the vital structure of the book, which is remarkable for its organic unity. The narrative groups itself round five principal personages, Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

I. Adam. The creation of the world and the earliest history of mankind (i.—iii.). As yet no divergence of the families of man.

II. Noah. The history of Adam's descendants to the death of Noah (iv.—ix.). Here we have (1) the line of Cain branching off; while the history follows the fortunes of Seth, whose descendants are (2) traced in genealogical succession, and in an unbroken line as far as Noah; and (3) the history of Noah himself (vi.—ix.) continued to his death.

III. Abraham. Noah's posterity till the death of Abraham. (1) The peopling of the whole earth by the descendants of Noah's three sons (xi. 1—9). The history of two of these is then dropped and (2) the line of Shem only pursued (xi. 10—32) as far as Terah and Abraham, where the genealogical table breaks off; (3) Abraham is now the prominent figure (xii. 1—xxv. 18). But as Terah had two other sons, Nahor and Haran (xi. 27), some notices respecting their families are added. Lot's migration with Abraham into the land of Canaan is mentioned, as well as the fact that he was the father of Moab and Ammon (xix. 37, 38), nations whose later history was intimately connected with that of the posterity of Abraham. Nahor remained in Mesopotamia, but his family is briefly enumerated (xxii. 20—24), chiefly no doubt for Rebekah's sake who was afterwards the wife of Isaac. Of Abraham's own children there branches off first the line of Ishmael (xxi. 9, &c.) and next the children by Keturah; and the genealogical notices of these two branches of his posterity are apparently brought together (xxv. 1—6 and 12—18) in order that being here severally dismissed, the main stream of the narrative may flow in the channel of Isaac's fortunes.

IV. Isaac. His life (xxv. 19—xxxv. 29) is in itself retiring and uneventful. But in his sons Jacob and Esau the final separation takes place, leaving the field clear for the great story of the chosen seed. Even when Nahor's family comes on the scene, as it does in ch. xxix., we hear only so much of it as is necessary to throw light on Jacob's history.

V. Jacob. The history of Jacob and Joseph. Here after Isaac's death we have (a) the genealogy of Esau (xxxvi.), who then drops out of the narrative in order that (b) the history of the Patriarchs may be carried on without interruption to the death of Joseph (xxxvii.—i.). A specific plan is thus preserved throughout. The main purpose is never forgotten. God's relation to Israel holds the first place in the writer's mind. The introductory chapters are a history of the world only so far as that is a preparation for the history of the chosen seed.

The book then is evidently constructed on a plan. It coheres by an internal principle of unity. The whole structure presents a very clearly marked outline. There are however manifest traces in this as in the other books of the use and incorporation of earlier documents. There are two accounts of the Creation, ch. i. and ii. Gen. ii. 4—iii. 24 is as clearly a distinct document as Gen. i.—ii. 3. Two accounts of the Flood have been worked up to form the existing narrative. Gen. xiv. is another document. For the most part considerable sections of Genesis are stamped, as has been said, by a different use of the Divine Names, but other signs of a different authorship have been noticed, e.g. the frequent use of certain words and phrases by which whole sections are characterized.

Exodus, so called because its opening portion details the circumstances connected with the Departure of the Israelites out of Egypt. The book, which is a continuation of the narrative in Genesis, consists of two principal divisions, I. Historical, i. 1—xviii. 27; II. Legislative, xix. 1—xl. 38. The former of these may be subdivided into (1) the preparation for the deliverance of Israel from their bondage in Egypt; (2) the accomplishment of that deliverance. The first section, i. 1—xii. 36, records the great increase of Jacob's posterity in Egypt, their oppression under a new dynasty which "knew not Joseph" (ch. i.); the birth, education and flight of Moses, and marriage with a daughter of the priest of Midian; his call at the burning bush to be the deliverer of his people, encouraged by the revelation of the name of Jahveh, by miraculous signs, and by help from his brother Aaron (iii. 1—iv. 17); his return to Egypt in consequence (iv. 18—31); his first ineffectual attempt to prevail upon Pharaoh to let the Israelites go, which only resulted in an increase of their burdens (v. 1—21); a further preparation of Moses and Aaron for their office, together with their genealogies (v. 22—vii. 7); the successive signs and wonders and especially the Ten Plagues, by means of which the deliverance of Israel is at length accomplished, and the institution of the Passover (vii. 8—xii. 36); the departure itself together with instructions concerning the Passover and the sanctification of the firstborn (xii. 37—xiii. 16); the march to the Red Sea, destruction of Pharaoh's army and Moses' song of victory (xiii. 17—xv. 21); events on the journey from the Red Sea to Sinai, the bitter waters of Marah, the giving of quails and the manna, the observance of the sabbath, the miraculous supply of water from the rock at Rephidim and the battle there with the Amalekites (xv. 22—xvii. 16); the arrival of Jethro in the camp and his advice as to the civil government of the people (xviii.).

II. The solemn establishment of the Theocracy at Sinai. The people are set apart "as a kingdom of priests and an holy nation" (xix. 9); the ten commandments are given, and are followed by the simplest and earliest code of laws intended to regulate the social life of the people (xx.—xxiii.); an Angel is promised as their Guide to the Promised Land, and the covenant between God and Moses, Nadab and Abihu and the 70 elders is ratified (xxiii. 20—xxiv. 18); instructions are given respecting the Tabernacle, the Ark, the altar of burnt offering, the separation of Aaron and his sons, the vestments which they are to wear, the ceremonies to be observed at their consecration, the altar of incense, the lavers, the holy oil; the selection of Bezaleel and Aholiab for the construction of the Tabernacle, the observance of the sabbath and the delivery of the two tables of the testimony into the hands of Moses (xxv. 1—xxxii. 18); the sin of the people in the matter of the golden calf, their rejection in consequence and their restoration to God's favour at the intercession of Moses (xxxii. 1—xxxiv. 35); lastly, the construction of the Tabernacle and all pertaining to its service in accordance with the instructions previously given (xxxv. 1—xl. 38). "In this account of the actual construction everything is arranged from the outside of the Tabernacle to the innermost part of it; whereas in the instruction given to Moses on Mount Sinai the beginning is made at the centre with the Ark and so outwards, except the supplementary arrangements in ch. xxx." The statement in vi. 3 "I appeared unto Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as El Shaddai, but by my name Jahveh was I not known unto them" plainly shews that the earlier use of the name in Genesis is due to a different writer, and confirms the theory of different documents. Exodus gives the early history of the nation in three clearly marked stages: first a nation enslaved, then a nation redeemed, lastly a nation set apart, and through the blending of its religious and political life consecrated to the service of God.

Leviticus. The book, which by its opening words is seen to be a continuation of Exodus, consists of the following sections: I. The sacrificial ordinances (i.—vii.). This may be subdivided into (a) the general law respecting sacrifice (i.—vi. 7), the burnt-offering i. 1-17, the meal-offering ii. 1-16, the peace-offering iii. 1-17, the sin-offering iv. 1-v. 13, the guilt-offering v. 14-vi. 7; and (b) supplementary instructions as to the various sacrifices for the priests, vi. 8-vii. 38. II. The ritual observed in the consecration of the priests, viii. (exactly following Ex. xxix.) and ix., together with the historical statement of the death of Nadab and Abihu, because they offered strange fire, and other particulars connected with the consecration (x.). III. Laws relating to ceremonial uncleanness xi.-xv.: (a) Animals which may not be eaten, and contact with which is forbidden, xi. 1-47; (b) uncleanness of child-birth, xii.; (c) uncleanness of leprosy, six different forms of it enumerated and the separation of the leper enjoined; leprosy in a house, xiii.-xiv.; occasional states of the body causing uncleanness; these laws, a protection from death which is the penalty for defiling the tabernacle of Jahveh (xv.). IV. The Day of Atonement and its ordinances, xvi. V. The Law of Holiness, xvii.-xxvi. This was originally it would seem a distinct law-book; an older stratum of priestly legislation lying at the basis of it. The resemblances to the legislation in Ezekiel are close and striking, and various suggestions have been made to account for them. Some have conjectured (holding that the Priestly portions of the Pentateuch are post-exilic) that Ezekiel himself was the author of these chapters; others, that they are derived from his legislation; the traditional view being of course that Ezekiel borrowed from Leviticus. The subdivisions of this corpus are as follows: communion with Jahveh in sacrifice; the blood of all slain animals must be offered with the fat at the door of the tent of meeting so long as the Israelites live in the camp, xvii. 1-9; all eating of blood forbidden, or that which dies of itself or is torn of beasts (10-16). A series of enactments follows touching incestuous commerce, unnatural lusts, sacrifice of children to Molech, &c., with a warning of the consequences of transgression (xviii.). Then come a number of laws which are not arranged on any very intelligible principle, introduced by the solemn formula, "Ye shall be holy, for I Jahveh your God am holy" (xix. 1-2); reverence for parents; keeping the sabbath enjoined and idolatry forbidden, directions respecting the peace-offering (3-8); breaches of the law of love enumerated and the observance of the Second Great Commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" enjoined (9-18); forbidding of mixture of cattle, in sowing the field, and in garments (19); of uncleanness with a betrothed bondmaid; law concerning fruit-trees; superstitious observances, as eating blood (see xvii. 10 ff.), using enchantments, cutting of the hair and flesh, prostitution (observance of sabbaths and reverencing of the sanctuary interposed, 20-30) and having recourse to wizards forbidden; reverence for the aged, kindness to the stranger, just weights and balances enjoined (31-37). Chapter xx. is usually regarded as a kind of appendix to xviii. repeating its prohibitions and enumerating the punishments for transgression which are omitted there, but they are rather "two independent though substantially parallel Torah on the same subject." Holiness in the priests, their marriages, their families, and their service at the altar (xxi.), and especially in the high-priest (10-15); further directions with regard to the ceremonial purity of the priests (xxii.). The Feasts which are holy convocations: the sabbath (xxiii. 1-4); the Passover (5-8) and the offering of firstfruits (9-14); the Feast of Weeks, seven sabbaths complete or 50 days (Pentecost), 15-22 with a repetition of the enactment about gleaming in xix. 9; the Feast of Trumpets (23-25); the Day of Atonement (26-32); the Feast of Tabernacles, of which there are apparently two accounts, 33-36 and 39-43, for a distinct summing up follows each, 37, 38 and 44. Chapter xxiv. gives directions concerning the pure olive-oil for the lamp which is to burn continually before Jahveh (1-4, cf. Ex. xxvii. 20, 21); and the continual shewbread (5-9, cf. Ex. xxv. 30, xl. 23); tells the story of a half-breed who in a quarrel blasphemes the Name and is sentenced to death by stoning; and this is followed by certain civil laws which are to be the same for the stranger as for the Israelite (10-23). Chapter xxv. contains the Law of Jubilee directing the redemption of the land (which Jahveh claims as His own), houses and persons. Chapter xxvi. repeats the laws forbidding idolatry and enjoining the keeping of the sabbath and reverence of the sanctuary, and then pronounces the Blessing and the Curse as the Covenant is kept or broken. The code presents in this respect a certain analogy to Deuteronomy which closes with a similar peroration. It is marked by a peculiarity which distinguishes it from other portions of the Law, viz. the frequent recurrence at the close of each paragraph of the phrase: "I am Jahveh." Verse 46 summing up the whole legislation must have been the original termination of the book. Chapter xxvii. is supplementary, dealing with vows and the principles on which things that have been devoted may be redeemed. The book opens with the solemn formula "And Jahveh called unto Moses and spake to him out of the tent of meeting, saying, &c.," and each section of the code is prefaced by the formula "And Jahveh spake unto Moses saying" (iv. 1, vi. 1, viii. 1, xii. 1, &c.). In xi. 1, xiii. 1, xv. 1, it runs "unto Moses and Aaron." It closes with "These are the commandments which Jahveh commanded Moses for the children of Israel in Mount Sinai."

Numbers, so called from the double numbering or census of the people; the first of which is given in chaps. i.-iv., and the second in ch. xxvi. It contains notices of events in the wilderness, more especially in the second year after the Exodus and the close of the wandering, interspersed with legislation. I. The first principal section (i. 1-x. 10) is the preparation for the departure from Sinai. In ch. i.—iv. we have the first census in the wilderness. Israel is about to occupy the Promised Land and must be organized as Jahveh's army for that purpose. Hence there is recorded (a) the numbering of the 12 tribes (i. 1–54); their position in the encampment (ii. 1–34); the charge of the Levites and their numbering by families (iii. 1–51); the charge of the Levites on the march (iv. 1–49); (b) certain laws apparently supplementary to the legislation of Leviticus; the removal of the unclean from the camp (v. 1–4); the law of restitution (v. 5–10); the trial of jealousy (v. 11–31); the law of the Nazirites (vi. 1–21); the priestly blessing (vi. 22–27); (c) final arrangements before breaking up the encampment at Sinai; the offerings of the princes at the dedication of the Tabernacle (vii.); Aaron's charge to light the lamps (viii. 1–4); the consecration of the Levites (viii. 5–26); the second observance of the Passover (the first in the wilderness); certain provisions made to meet the case of those who by reason of defilement were unable to keep it (ix. 1–14); the pillar of cloud and the fire regulate the march and the encampment (ix. 15–23); two trumpets of silver to be used by the priests to give the signal for moving the camp and on other occasions (x. 1–10).

II. March from Sinai to the borders of Canaan (x. 11–xiv. 45). The first moving of the camp after the erection of the Tabernacle, and order of march (x. 11–28); Moses entreats Hobab to remain with him (x. 29–32); departure from Sinai, led by the Ark (x. 33–36); an account of the several stations and events connected with them, as the murmuring, and the consuming fire at Taberah; the loathing of the manna and the lusting after flesh (xi. 4–9); the complaint of Moses that he cannot bear the burden thus put upon him, and the appointment of 70 elders to help him (xi. 10–29); the quails sent and the judgement following thereon which gave its name to the station Kibroth-hattaavah (the graves of lust); arrival at Hazeroth (xi. 30–35), where Aaron and Miriam oppose Moses because of his wife, and Miriam is smitten with leprosy, but healed at the intercession of Moses (xii. 1–16). The sending of the spies, their report, the refusal of the people to enter Canaan, notwithstanding the efforts of Joshua and Caleb; the anger of Jahveh kindled but partly averted at the intercession of Moses; the doom pronounced that the nation shall wander 40 years in the wilderness, and the rash attempt to invade the land which results in a disastrous defeat (xiii. 1–xiv. 45).

III. The section which follows is partly legislative, partly narrative, but without any note of time. We have laws touching the meal-offering, drink-offering, offering for sins of ignorance, &c. (xv. 1–31); the stoning of one who gathered sticks on the sabbath (32–36); the direction to put fringes on their garments as mementoes (37–41); the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, and the murmuring and punishment of the people (xvi.); the budding of Aaron's rod as a witness that the tribe of Levi was chosen (xvii.); the direction given that Aaron and his sons should bear the iniquity of the people, and the duties of priests and Levites clearly defined (xviii.); the law of ceremonial defilement caused by death; the water of purification (xix.).

IV. The history of the last year in the wilderness from the second arrival of the Israelites in Kadesh till they reach "the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho" (xx. 1–xxxvi. 13). Miriam dies (xx. 1); the people murmur for want of water and Moses and Aaron "speaking unadvisedly" are not permitted to enter the Promised Land (xx. 2–13); Edom refuses the people permission to pass through his country (14–21); the death of Aaron at Mount Hor (22–29); the Canaanite king of Arad attacks them but is defeated—a notice which seems out of place, as Arad is in the south of Palestine, and the narrative continues "they journeyed from Mount Hor, &c." (xxi. 1–3); the people murmur again by reason of the roughness of the way, and are bitten by fiery serpents, but healed by looking at the Brazen Serpent (4–9); there is again a gap in the narrative. We are told nothing of the march along the eastern edge of Edom, but find ourselves suddenly transported to the borders of Moab. Here the Israelites successively encounter and defeat the kings of the Amorites and of Bashan, wresting from them their territory and permanently occupying it (xxi. 10–35); their successes alarm the king of Moab, who distrusting his superiority in the field sends for Balaam to curse his enemies, hence the episode of Balaam (xxii. 1–xxiv. 25); the Israelites under the influence of the Moabitish women join in the worship of Baal-Peor, and are punished. The everlasting priesthood is promised to Phinehas because of his zeal for God in this matter (xxv.); a second numbering of the people takes place preparatory to their crossing the Jordan, none included in the first census was found in this except Caleb and Joshua (xxvi.); a question arises as to the inheritance of daughters, and a decision is given thereon (xxvii. 1–11); Moses is warned of his death and Joshua appointed to succeed him (12–23); a catalogue of the festival offerings of the community, "a later supplement to the Torah on the feasts in Lev. xiii., with details of sacrifice for each day of the Feast of Tabernacles (xxviii., xxix.); the law of vows (xxx.); narrative of the vengeance taken on the Midianites and Balaam (xxx.); the partition of the country east of the Jordan among the tribes of Reuben and Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh (xxxii.); a recapitulation, though with some difference, of the various encampments of the Israelites in the desert (xxxiii. 1–49); the command to destroy the Canaanites (50–56); the boundaries of the Promised Land, and the men who are to divide it (xxxiv.); the appointment of the Levitical cities and cities of refuge, together with laws concerning murder and manslaughter (xxxv.); further directions respecting heiresses with special reference to the case mentioned in xxvii. (xxxvi. 1-12) and summing up of the legislation given "in the land of Moab" (13), forming the conclusion of the book. The book is remarkable for the number of fragments of ancient poetry preserved in it. Cf. vi. 24-26, x. 35, 36, xxi. 14, 15, ib. 17, 18, ib. 27-30.

Deuteronomy. This book contains an account of the last great discourses of Moses delivered in the plains of Moab just before his death. It is however in style quite unlike the earlier books, and expressions occur in it which seem to indicate that it was written in Palestine, e.g. the phrase "the other side Jordan," denoting that the writer was on the western side (i. 1, 6, &c., R.V.), and the historical statement in ii. 12 which refers to what took place after the occupation of Canaan.

More than any other book of the Pentateuch it is a homogeneous whole. It contains the following sections: I. chaps. i.-iv., the First Discourse, and statement of circumstances under which it was delivered; II. chaps. v.-xxvi., Second Discourse. This Discourse beginning at v. 1 is introduced by the superscription in iv. 45-49. "It is obvious," says Kuenen, "that v.-xi. is intended as an introduction to xii.-xxvi." There is complete agreement in style, language, details between the Introduction, v.-xi., and xii.-xxvi. which contains the legislative portion of the book. This is a single Book of Law, a repetition as the title (Deuteronomy) implies of the law, the unity of which is admitted on all hands.

(i) It opens with an emphatic command to destroy all idolatrous objects of worship in the land of Canaan, only one central place for the worship of Jahveh is to be allowed, thither all sacrifices, tithes, freewill offerings, &c., are to be brought; animal food however may be partaken of at home, only blood must not be eaten; this is again and again forbidden; a solemn warning against the abominations connected with heathen worship, and an urgent exhortation to obedience, conclude the first division of the Code (xii.). Then follow special instances of enticement to false worship: the prophet or dreamer of dreams, the near member of the family, the city which is gone after idols, all these are to be exterminated lest they become a snare (xiii.). Israel is to remember that he is holy unto Jahveh and to keep himself from superstitious observances and unclean food (xiv. 1-21); tithes of the fruits of the field and firstlings of the cattle are to be consecrated to Jahveh in the place which He appoints, &c., and the tithe of every third year is to be for the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless and the widow (22-29). Every seventh year is to be a year of release by creditors (only this is not to prevent the exercise of charity to the poor), and the slave is to be manumitted after seven years' service (xv. 1-18); precise directions as to the sanctifying and eating of firstlings, whether at the Sanctuary (19, 20) or at home (21, 23), are followed by the Kalendar of Festivals, Passover (xvi. 1-8), Feast of Weeks (9-12), Tabernacles (13-17).

(ii) The next group of laws deals chiefly with the orders of the state and the administration of justice; with the judges (xvi. 18-20), the supreme court at the central sanctuary (xvii. 8-13); the king (14-20); the priests (xviii. 1-8); the prophets (9-22); the cities of refuge (xix. 1-13); the removal of landmarks (14); the two witnesses necessary for a conviction (xix. 15); but these are broken somewhat abruptly by the prohibition of ashéras and maçcébas (xvi. 21, 22), by the command to offer beasts without blemish to Jahveh (xvii. 1), and by a law on the stoning of idolaters (2-7), which however by its requirement of two witnesses is brought into connexion with the general precepts concerning the administration of justice (xix. 15-21). Then follow the laws for war (xx.), shorter laws concerning expiation of murder in the open field, marriage with females taken in war; rights of firstborn sons; punishment of rebellious sons; removal of bodies of malefactors from the gibbet before evening (xxi.); laws enforcing brotherly dealing, kindness to animals, protection to life; against mixing unlike sorts in sowing seed, in using beasts or making clothes; tassels on the four corners of the garment; punishment of a man who slanders his bride, laws concerning adultery, rape, fornication before marriage; incest (xxii.); qualification for admission into the assembly, to secure the cleanness of the camp; against surrender of runaway slaves; prohibition of prostitution in the worship of Jahveh; laws concerning usury, vows, the use of a neighbour's cornfield (xxiii.); divorce; newly-married men exempted from public duty for a year; a millstone may not be taken in pledge; kidnapping forbidden; the law of leprosy to be strictly observed; of taking pledges; justice to the day-labourer; punishment to be inflicted only on the culprit himself; regulations in favour of foreigners, orphans and widows; scourging as a punishment; provision for the ox that treads the corn; marriage with a deceased brother's wife; observance of decencies where two men are at blows; unjust weights and measures forbidden (xxiv. 1-xxv. 16). The corpus of laws closes with a return to the Covenant relationship between Jahveh and the people; Amalek is to be rooted out; the firstfruits are to be offered at the one sanctuary; the tithes are solemnly to be given up in the third year, and the people are to pledge themselves to observe the laws and ordinances and to keep the covenant of Jahveh, who on His side will bless and exalt Israel (xxvi.). This last chapter as Kuenen has remarked is the winding up of the whole legislation, and shews that in spite of the want of anything like sequence in many of the separate enactments, the whole section xii.-xxvi. constitutes "a single book of law."

The rest of the book contains: The command to write the words of the law on plastered stones; the blessings to be pronounced on Mount Gerizim and the curses on Mount Ebal (xxvii.); the last exhortation of Moses announcing the blessings of obedience and the curses upon disobedience, the confirmation of the covenant, with the solemn appeal that he has set before them life and death and that the choice rests with themselves (xxviii.). The closing scenes of Moses' life. He writes this Law and delivers it to the Levitical priests and elders, it is to be kept by the side of the Ark and read at the Feast of Tabernacles every seventh year (xxix.—xxx.). Moses' song (xxxii.); his Dying Blessing (xxxiii.); his death and burial by Jahveh (xxxiv.). There is much difference of opinion as to the authorship of these latter chapters, and the dates of the several portions. The book, or at least the main portion of it, is by modern critics assigned to the age of Josiah or at the earliest of Manassch, this being the Law-book discovered in the Temple in the reign of Josiah, and chiefly on the ground that it insists so strongly on the centralization of the cultus which though attempted by Hezekiah was not accomplished till Josiah's Reformation. But there are serious difficulties in the way of this theory. In any case the legislation is a repetition and expansion in hortatory form of the earliest code in Exod. xx.—xxiii., and in substance at least is Mosaic. The writer or redactor of the book distinctly asserts that Moses is the author of the legislation and that he provided for its custody (xxx. 24—26) and transmission.

The Book of Joshua, so called, not because he is the author, but because he is the principal figure in it, opens with the entrance of Joshua on his office as Leader of the people in succession to Moses and closes with his and Eleazar's death and burial. It consists of two nearly equal parts: I. the conquest of Canaan under Joshua (i.—xii.); II. the allotment of the land among the tribes, with Joshua's final exhortations before his death (xiii.—xxiv.). The book is thus a complete whole in itself. The Jewish tradition as has been said separates it from the Five Books of the Law and places it in a different division of the Sacred Writings. It belongs however to the Five Books as containing: (a) the fulfilment of the promises made in Genesis concerning the possession of Canaan; (b) the accomplishment of the commands given by Moses to Joshua (cf. i. 1, &c. with Num. xxvii. 15, &c., Deut. iii. 28, xxxi. 1—8; i. 12, &c. with Num. xxxii., Deut. iii. 18, &c.; viii. 30, &c. with Deut. xi. 29, &c., xxvii. 1—8, 11—14; xiii. with Num. xxxiv.; xiv. 6—15 with Num. xiv. 24, Deut. i. 36; xvii. 1—6 with Num. xxvii. 1—11, xxxvi. 1—12; xx. with Num. xxxv.); (c) the establishment of the theocracy for which the whole Pentateuch is a preparation; (d) as being of the same literary structure as the preceding books, the three or rather four main documents out of which the Pentateuch is composed reappearing here.

In section I. we have (i), from i. 1—v. 12, the preparations for the conquest of the land (i.), the sending of the spies (ii.), the crossing of the Jordan which parts miraculously before the Ark (iii., iv.), the renewal of the Covenant by the circumcision of the people, the observance of the Passover, the ceasing of the manna (v. 2—12); (ii) the beginning of the holy war, the captain of Jahveh's host appears to Joshua and directs him how to compass Jericho; the miraculous fall of the city (v. 13—vi. 27); the war interrupted by the sin of Achan who takes of the spoil which had been devoted; Joshua fails in consequence to take Ai. Achan is discovered, his confession and punishment (vii.); a second attack on Ai successful, Bethel taken, the covenant confirmed at Mount Ebal (viii.; cf. Deut. xi. 29, 30, xxvii.); the southern confederacy against Israel; the Gibeonites by an artifice make peace with Joshua; five kings of the Amorites combine to punish them, but are defeated by Joshua in the battle of Beth-horon, when sun and moon stand still at the command of Joshua; the Amorite army destroyed, the five kings hanged; other successes of Joshua (ix., x.); the northern confederacy, Jabin king of Hazor uniting with other kings in the north of Canaan; Joshua defeats them and destroys their cities (xi. 1—15); result of the conquest, extent of territory covered by Joshua's campaigns (xi. 16—20); the war in the south renewed against the Anakim (xi. 21—23); the territory of the two kings east of the Jordan whom Moses smote which he divided to the two tribes and a half (xii. 1—6); thirty-one kings west of Jordan smitten by Joshua (xii. 7—24).

II. The allotment of the land (xiii.—xxi.); the command to allot the land, though much still remained to be conquered, having respect to what Moses had done and also to the rule that Levi was to have no share in it (xiii. 1—14); first, the inheritance given by Moses to Reuben (15—23); secondly, to Gad (24—28); thirdly, to half the tribe of Manassch (29—31); summing up of this work by Moses (32, 33). The allotment of western Palestine; the provision to be made for nine tribes and a half by Joshua with Eleazar the high-priest and the heads of the fathers' houses (xiv. 1—5, cf. Num. xxxiv. 16—20); Caleb's claim to Hebron being acknowledged by Joshua (xiv. 6—15); the territorial division; first, Judah (xv. 1—12); Caleb's portion and conquest (13—14); the cities of Judah (20—62); Judah unable to take Jerusalem (63); next Joseph, i.e. Ephraim and Manassch (xvi. 1—4); Ephraim (5—9); cities within Manassch being given to Ephraim (cf. xvii. 11) who fails to drive out the Canaanites from Gezer (10); Manassch a firstborn of Joseph has a double portion (xvii. 1—11), but fails also to drive out the Canaanites (12, 23); the claim of the house of Joseph (xvii. 14—18). The Tabernacle set up at Shiloh. Joshua reproaches the seven remaining tribes for their slackness in occupying the land, orders a survey and casts lots for them (xviii. 1—10); territories and cities of Benjamin between Judah and Ephraim (11—23); Simeon, within the portion of Judah (xix. 1—9); Zebulun (10—16); Issachar (17—23); Asher

(24-31); Naphtali (32-39); Dan (40-48); the gift of a city to Joshua and summing up of the section (49-51); appointment of the cities of refuge (xx., cf. Num. xxxv. and Deut. iv. 41-43); of the Levitical cities and distribution of Levitical families among the tribes (xxi. 1-42); summing up of the history of the conquest (43-45); closing scenes (xxii.-xxiv.); the return of the Eastern tribes to their own home (xxii. 1-8), their memorial altar on the west side of Jordan with the remonstrance of the other tribes and the explanation given and accepted (xxii. 9-24); a solemn warning addressed to the people by Joshua (xxiii.); his last words, &c.; renewal of the covenant at Shechem, which he writes "in the book of the law of God," setting up a great stone as a witness to the transaction "by the sanctuary of Jahveh" (xxiv. 1-28); the death of Joshua, and of Eleazar; their burial and the burial of Joseph's bones (29-33).

THE HISTORICAL BOOKS.

BY THE REV. J. R. LUMBY, D.D., LADY MARGARET PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY.

The Book of Judges. This book and the Book of Ruth contain all the Jewish history which has been preserved to us of the times between the death of Joshua and the birth of Samuel. The Book of Judges consists of three parts. (i) An introduction, extending from i. 1 to iii. 6. (ii) The history of various periods of transgression, and the oppressions and deliverances by which they were followed. This occupies from iii. 7 to xvi. 31. (iii) Two narratives, which shew in a special manner the proneness of the people to idolatry, and the lawlessness of the times that succeeded their partial occupation of Canaan (xvii.-xxi.).

The rulers whose exploits are narrated in this book are called 'judges,' but what is told of them relates far more to what they did as conquerors and deliverers of the people. When the enemy had been driven away we may assume that these conspicuous leaders regulated and consolidated the institutions of the country, but of such work the history is almost silent. We can see from Abimelech's conduct (ix. 2) that the office tended to become kingly, inasmuch that he speaks as if there were a right of succession in the family of the judge. Such occurrences were likely to lead the people to thoughts of a kingdom before long.

There is little to guide us as to the time when the book was compiled. But the allusion to the captivity of the ten tribes (xviii. 30) points to a date later than that event (B.C. 721). We know from Proverbs xxv. 1 that the reign of Hezekiah, who was then king of Judah, was a time of literary activity. It may very well be, therefore, that the Book of Judges was brought to its present form by some among the 'men of Hezekiah.' The disappearance of a large portion of the nation into captivity would give an impulse, to those who were able to do the work, to bring into connected form the early national history. And the style in some parts of the book bespeaks their early origin. Thus the song of Deborah and Barak, the parable of Jotham, and the riddle and other utterances of Samson are stamped with a very primitive character. The compiler states his purpose in the first words of the book. He means to compile a history of things which befell after Joshua was dead, but to connect his work with matter already existent he goes over in his introduction some things which happened in Joshua's lifetime, as is evident from a comparison of Jud. i. 10-15 with Josh. xiv. 1-15. Such passages as Jud. ii. 6-10 and Josh. xxiv. 28-31 must have been drawn from the same source. But there is nothing in the compilation of the Book of Judges to lead us to believe that the compilers used their material otherwise than faithfully. And that the book was brought together from existing material at a date several centuries after the events which it records can in no wise diminish the trustworthiness of its lessons.

Among these lessons, however, chronology is clearly not one. For no attempt is made to give precision to the dates. Almost every record of time is made in round numbers, and can only be taken as an approximation, while we have nothing to help us to decide whether any of the judges were contemporary or overlapped one another in the time when they were in power. The influence and power of some of them appear to have been rather tribal than national. Hence two of them might have been living at the same time. For example, we are told (x. 7), just before the rise of Jephthah, that God sold the people into the hands of the Philistines and into the hands of the children of Ammon. Now the exploits of Jephthah were all against the Ammonites. Some other leader, and there is nothing to indicate whether it was Shamgar (iii. 31) or Samson (xv. 6), must have been the agent to keep the Philistines in check on the west, while Jephthah's victories were gained over the eastern oppressors. Such an instance is sufficient to illustrate the entire neglect of chronology in the book, and the same thing is clear from the two appendices in chapters xvii.-xxi., which are quite out of their place in order of time. To attempt a chronological arrangement from the book itself is therefore out of the question. Nor are we helped by anything recorded in other parts of the Bible. A passage often referred to for this purpose is 1 Kings vi. 1. There we are told that the 4th year of Solomon's reign was the 480th after the Exodus. That no great stress can be laid on this number is clear, because the Septuagint says the 440th year, while Josephus makes it the 592nd. Now if we put together the numbers found in the Old Testament, we have 40 years between the Exodus and the death of Moses, 40 years' peace after Othniel, 90 after Ehud: Jabin's oppression lasted 20 years: there were 40 years' peace after Barak, 40 in Gideon's time: Tola was judge for 23 years, Jair for 22, Jephthah for 6, Ibzan for 7, Elon for 10, Abdon for 8. The servitude to the Philistines lasted 40 years, and Samson judged 20 years. After this we have as dates Eli 40 years, Samuel 20 (1 Sam. vii. 2) at least, David 40 and Solomon 4. These alone make 500 years, and we have allowed no time for the leadership of Joshua nor for the years between the death of Joshua and the judgeship of Othniel, nor yet again for the reign of Saul. Hence it is clear, if 480 be the correct number of years between the Exodus and Solomon, that some of these events in the Judges must have been contemporaneous.

Again, the time from the capture of Gilead down to the days of Jephthah is stated (Jud. xi. 26) at 300 years. If to this sum we add the numbers recorded for the events between Jephthah and Solomon, we arrive at a total of 485 years without counting anything for the length of Saul's reign.

Again, according to Acts xiii. 20, the time between the partition of the land under Joshua and the days of Samuel was 450 years; adding to this the other numbers down to Solomon and allowing, as St Paul did, 40 years for the reign of Saul we reach a total of 554 years. All these reckonings differ, and we have nothing left us whereby to confirm or contradict any of them. A list of the judges, in their order and with the years assigned to them, will be found elsewhere (see p. 58), but what has been said will shew that these numbers are not recorded in such wise as to be available for a chronological arrangement of the history.

The introduction (i. 1—ii. 5) narrates how Israel dealt with the Canaanites. Judah and Simeon fought together against the people, and their endeavours were largely successful, but though Jerusalem was smitten by them, Benjamin did not get possession of it (2 Sam. v. 6). The house of Joseph (i.e. Ephraim and Manasseh) had a certain measure of success, yet did not drive away all the heathen inhabitants, but were content with making them tributary (i. 27—29). Zebulun pursued the same policy, while Asher and Naphtali were content to dwell among the Canaanites, even exacting tribute from very few of them (i. 30—33). The Danites found the work of conquering the Amorites more than they could effect, and had to seek another settlement (i. 34). For their remissness the people are rebuked by an angel (ii. 1—5), and at the time express their penitence. Then (ii. 6—iii. 6) follows an epitome of the subsequent histories. In the generation after Joshua the people forsook the Lord, and joined in the Canaanite idolatries. For this they were given into the hands of one spoiler after another, and when punishment had wrought temporary repentance, deliverers were raised up in various places to rescue them. This part of the introduction, which tells of Joshua's death, forms a close connexion between the books of Joshua and Judges, and concludes with a brief list of the Canaanitish people who were suffered to remain in the land (iii. 1—6).

The second portion of the book is four times broken by special mention of a gift of the Spirit of the Lord to the judge then in power. This help is spoken of in the case of Othniel (iii. 10), of Gideon (vi. 34), of Jephthah (xi. 29), and of Samson (xiii. 25), and makes them conspicuous above the rest. The sin which kindled God's anger was idolatry (iii. 7), the serving of 'the Baalim and the Asheroth' (R. V.). For this they were given into the power of Cushan-rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia. In answer to their cry the Lord raised up Othniel as a deliverer, after which was a time of rest for 40 years (iii. 8—11).

For another transgression the people were given into the power of Eglon, king of Moab, for eighteen years, after which time they were delivered by a Benjamite named Ehud, who by stratagem slew Eglon, and roused Israel to slaughter their Moabite oppressors. A rest of fourscore years follows this deliverance (iii. 12—30). Next in order follows, but without details of time or circumstance, the deliverance from the Philistines by Shamgar (iii. 31).

Closely connected with the end of Ehud's life is the sin for which Israel was sold into the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan. From this oppressor deliverance was wrought by the murder of Sisera, his commander-in-chief (iv. 1—v. 31). Deborah, who was judge at this time, was also a prophetess. At her summons Barak the son of Abinoam went with an army against Sisera, but because of his unwillingness at the first, the victory was given into the hands of Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite, into whose tent the retreating commander fled for rest and refuge. Joined with the prose narrative of these events is the song of Deborah and Barak, written in celebration of this deliverance, and manifestly a composition of very early date.

The oppression for the relief of which Gideon was raised up (vii. 1—viii. 32) was by the Midianites and had lasted seven years with such severity that the people hid from the enemy in dens and caves and the fastnesses of the mountains. Deliverance was promised by a prophet of the Lord, and Gideon was encouraged by an angelic messenger to undertake the rescue. As a first step, however, he was directed to overthrow the altar of Baal which his father had made, and to build an altar unto the Lord instead. This done, he gathered the men of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun and Naphtali to fight against Midian. By signs given in answer to his entreaty he was assured of victory, and directed to reduce his large army of 32,000 to 300. A visit in the night to the camp of Midian made it clear how a dread of him was in the hearts of the enemy. Hence by a stratagem he startles the great army, who in their terror destroy each other, while the fugitives are slain by the Ephraimites as they attempt to cross the Jordan, the heads of two of their princes being brought in triumph to Gideon. The anger of the Ephraimites, because they had not been called with the other tribes, is prudently appeased, while the treachery of the men of Succoth and Peniel is promised, and soon receives its due punishment. Two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, are captured and slain, and the rescued Israelites would fain have made Gideon their king, but he refused, though he asked of them, as a present, the gold ornaments which each had taken from the prey. With these he made some sort of idol, called an ephod, and led the people into idolatry, which became grosser still after his death.

Abimelech, the son of Gideon by a Shechemite concubine, slays all the other sons (70 in number) of his father, except one Jotham, and makes himself king when Gideon was dead. To this end he secures the help of the men of Shechem, and Jotham by a striking parable predicts, and invokes, enmity between Abimelech and the Shechemites. This soon breaks out, and there is war in the land until Abimelech is killed by a piece of a millstone thrown over the wall of Thebez by a woman of that city (ix. 1-55). So came to its fulfilment the curse of Jotham. A deliverer was sorely needed after these miseries, and we are briefly told of two judges in succession, whose administration was uneventful. These were Tola of the tribe of Issachar, who was judge for 23 years (x. 1-2), and Jair, a Gileadite, for 22 years (x. 3-4).

But again the people fell away, and the catalogue of their idols is now greatly increased. To the Baalim and the Ashtaroth there are added (x. 6) the gods of Syria, of Zidon, of Moab, of Ammon and of the Philistines; and the Ammonites are the enemy whom God now employs as His instruments of punishment. To these also are joined the Philistines (x. 7), though no relation of their attacks, or how they were repulsed, has been preserved to us. In their distress and in answer to their cry, Jephthah the Gileadite was raised up to deliver Israel (xi. 1-40). He had been banished from Gilead, but in their extremity the people recalled him. At first Jephthah tries the effect of negotiations with the Ammonite king, but these being unsuccessful, he prepares to fight with the enemy. Before the battle he vowed to offer, if successful, the first thing that came forth to meet him on his return. This rash vow cost the life of his only daughter, in whose memory there was kept a yearly lamentation. In consequence of the murmurings and threats of the Ephraimites because they had not been called to the battle, Jephthah attacks them and destroys 42,000 (xii. 1-7). To Jephthah succeeded Ibzan of Bethlehem for 7 years (xii. 8-10); then Elon, a Zebu-lunite (xii. 11-12), was judge for 10 years; then Abdon, a Pirathonite, for 8 years (xii. 13-15). Nothing but some particulars of their domestic life is told us of any of these.

The fourth oppression was by the Philistines and lasted 40 years. The judge who was appointed to deliver Israel from this enemy was Samson (xiii. 1-xvi. 31), whose birth was foretold to his parents by an angel, who at the same time directed that he should be a Nazirite all his life long. Samson belonged to the tribe of Dan, which had been driven from its first settlements by the Philistines. His life was of such a character, that we are not surprised when the record only states that 'he shall begin to deliver Israel' (xiii. 5). He was endued with immense strength, which was to continue with him while his Nazirite vow was observed and his hair unshorn. But at the beginning he sets his heart on taking a wife from among the Philistines, and on his way down to visit the woman he slew a lion which roared against him. At his second visit to keep the marriage feast a quarrel arose, which resulted in Samson slaying 30 men of the Philistine city of Ashkelon. The giving of his wife to another caused a final breach with the Philistines, whose standing corn Samson burnt, by sending into it foxes (or jackals) bearing lighted firebrands tied between them. Samson's own people, however, left him to resist their enemies alone, and rather sided with the Philistines. To this may perhaps be ascribed some of the great recklessness which he manifested in his future behaviour. His sin brought him into danger at Gaza, but his great strength saved him. Later on he betrayed to Delilah the secret of his strength, and she gave him up to the Philistines. Blinded and a prisoner he was mocked at by his enemies, but receiving his strength again from God, he slew more of the Philistines, in the ruin of their temple, than he had slain in all his life before.

The two narratives with which the Book of Judges concludes are contained in chapters xvii.-xviii. and in chapters xix.-xxi. respectively. They belong to an early part of the time covered by the book, for the events mentioned in the latter occurred while Phinehas, the grandson of Aaron, was high-priest (xx. 28), and in it Dan is spoken of as the northern limit of the land (xx. 1), so that the migration of the Danites spoken of in chapter xviii. must have already taken place. They are probably appended as illustrations of the evils prevalent throughout this period, and of the terrible consequences of the frequent transgressions.

The first tells how Micah and his mother dwelling in the hill country of Ephraim fell away into the worship of idols, and how a Levite of Bethlehem was induced to become their priest.

This took place at the time when some Danite spies were moving northward in search of additional land. These ask counsel of Micah's priest and are encouraged to go forward. They find a suitable place for their settlement at Laish. And having returned home they gather a force of six hundred men for the expedition. These on their northward journey rob Micah of his images and his priest, and after their conquest of Laish set up idolatrous worship in this new Dan. There is reason to suppose (see R.V. of xviii. 30) that the Levite who became Micah's priest was a grandson of Moses. This idolatrous worship continued till the ten tribes were carried captive.

The second narrative makes evident the low moral condition of this time. A Levite of the Ephraimite hill country was fetching back his runaway concubine from Bethlehem. As they stayed for the night in Gibeah of Benjamin the woman was killed by the outrage of the men of Gibeah. To rouse the national indignation the man cut his concubine's body in pieces and sent a portion thereof to each tribe. The people came together to Mizpeh resolved to punish the men of Gibeah, who were defended by the other Benjamites. The Israelites were defeated in the two first engagements, but afterwards by a stratagem destroyed all the Benjamites except six hundred, and took an oath not to give wives to this remnant. The thought of blotting out one tribe from the twelve, however, moved them to be sorry for their oath. Hence they sent a force against Jabesh-gilead and carried off 400 maidens whom they gave to the Benjamites, and commanded the other men to seize wives for themselves at the time of a great feast in Shiloh. Thus their oath was unbroken, and the name of Benjamin was still preserved in the nation.

The whole history finds a fit conclusion in the words, 'In those days there was no king in Israel, every man did that which was right in his own eyes.'

The subjoined table shews the different oppressions of the Israelites, and the several judges, in the order in which they are mentioned in the narrative.

Ruth. This book is the history of the family of Elimelech, who in the days of the Judges because of a famine went away from Bethlehem to dwell in the land of Moab. There, the children, two sons, married Moabish wives, and died, as did also their father.

Naomi, the mother, returned to Bethlehem, and Ruth, one of her widowed daughters-in-law, came with her. Ruth, when gleanings in the field of Boaz, a kinsman of Elimelech, finds favour with him. Naomi wishes and plans that Boaz should marry Ruth, and he is ready to do so, if a nearer kinsman, to whom the right belongs according to the law in Deuteronomy xxv. 5—10, declines. He does decline, and so Ruth becomes the wife of Boaz. Her son was Obed, the father of Jesse, the father of David. The book appears to be intended to connect the history of David with the earlier times, and also to form a contrast, in its peaceful and pastoral simplicity, to the disorders of which we read so continually in the Book of Judges.

Samuel. These two books formed in the Hebrew only one, as did also the two books of Kings. In the Septuagint they were each broken into two parts, and this division came to be recognised in the whole of Christian literature. The four books are very frequently called the four books of Kings. The books of Samuel take their name from the judge who plays so conspicuous a part at the commencement of them. The history in them opens with his birth and continues almost to the death of David.

I. Samuel. The First Book of Samuel may be divided into three sections, of which the first, containing chapters i.—vii., is the history of Eli and Samuel as judges. It opens with the birth and dedication of Samuel, with which stands in contrast the evil-doing of Eli's sons. Their punishment is foretold, and they are slain in a war with the Philistines, in which the ark of God, sent for to the battlefield, is captured by the enemy. They carry it away, but calamity and judgement fall on every place to which it is brought. At length they are advised to send it back and they do so, sending along with it various trespass-offerings. It first arrives at Bethshemesh, where the inhabitants are punished for irreverently looking into it, and petition the men of Kirjath-jearim to come and fetch it away. In that city it remained for twenty years; in which period we are told of a time of penitence among the Israelites, and how Samuel gathered them at Mizpeh for a service of confession, after which the Philistines are conquered at Ebenezer, and peace is secured between Israel and the Amorites. The section concludes with a brief note about Samuel's administration, for the seats of which he selected three ancient holy places, and had also an altar in Ramah, where his home was.

The second section (chapters viii.—xiv.) tells how the people, because of the injustice of Samuel's sons, came to desire a king. The Lord was angry, but granted their request, and Samuel describes for them what they may expect from their future king. Saul, who came to Samuel to inquire about his father's asses, is secretly anointed as king, and certain signs are given him to assure him of God's choice. Later on follows a public appointment of Saul by lot at Mizpeh. The manner of the kingdom is written in a book by Samuel and laid up before the Lord. Saul is not accepted of all till he shews his fitness to be king by a victory over the Ammonites in defence of Jabesh-gilead. Samuel testifies of his own integrity and exhorts the people to the fear of the Lord, that they and their king may prosper.

Next we have a brief notice of Saul's army, and how war rose against the Philistines, during which Saul took upon him to offer sacrifice, and thus committed his first great sin. Samuel leaves him, and the Philistines are for a while victorious, till they are defeated by Jonathan. Saul's administration is for a time successful, but he is constantly exposed to the inroads of the Philistines.

In the third section (chapters xv.—xxxi.) we see the kingdom passing from Saul to David. By his disobedience in the Amalekite war and by sparing Agag, Saul again offended God, and David is secretly anointed king by Samuel at the divine command. The Spirit of the Lord forsakes Saul, and he is troubled by an evil spirit. David slaying Goliath, the Philistine champion, gains great favour with the people. Saul waxes jealous, and seeks both openly and by stratagem to slay David, whose popularity still increases. Saul tries to incite his servants to kill him, but he is saved, at one time, by Jonathan; at another, by Michal, the daughter of Saul, who was his wife. David now takes refuge with Samuel, leaving the court entirely, but keeping his covenant of friendship with Jonathan. He afterwards goes to Nob to the tabernacle, and obtains help from the high priest, which is noticed by Doeg, the Edomite, Saul's chief herdsman. On that information Saul subsequently slays the priests at Nob. After this David flees to Gath to king Achish, then is in hiding in the cave of Adullam; he takes his parents for safety into the land of Moab, himself coming back to his own country. But he is constantly in peril from treachery, as at Keilah and among the Ziphites. Saul pursues him relentlessly, and in the midst of these troubles Samuel dies. Then David retires to the southern wilderness, where he is churlishly treated by Nabal. He comes a second time into peril through the Ziphites, and though he has an opportunity of slaying Saul, yet spares him. Once more he goes to king Achish, who gives him the city of Ziklag, from which he makes raids on the tribes around, which Achish fancies are made on Israel, and hence invites David to go with him to war against his own people. Saul, in fear of the Philistines, consults the witch of Endor, who foretells his coming ruin. The Philistine princes will not have David with them in the war, so Achish lets him depart. In David's absence Ziklag had been plundered by the Amalekites, but pursuing he recovers the spoil and much beside. In the battle with the Philistines on mount Gilboa Saul and Jonathan are slain. The Philistines insult the dead bodies, but these are recovered and solemnly buried by the men of Jabesh-gilead.

II. Samuel. In chapters i.—iv. we have the history of David's reign in Hebron. He puts to death the Amalekite who professes to have slain Saul; and he laments bitterly over the death of Saul and Jonathan. Going up to Hebron he is anointed king a second time. Abner proclaims Ish-bosheth, Saul's son, king in Mahanaim, and a civil war begins in which David gains the advantage. An account is given of his wives and children, then of Abner's quarrel with Ish-bosheth, through which he offers to help David to gain the whole kingdom. In the course of these arrangements Abner is killed by Joab and Abishai, and soon after Ish-bosheth is murdered by two of his captains, and thus the way is opened for David to become king of all Israel.

The next four chapters (v.—viii.) describe his rule and its glories. He is anointed for the third time. He conquers Jerusalem, the Jebusite city, and a palace is built for him there by Hiram, king of Tyre. The Philistines, invading the land, are defeated at Baal-perazim. David brings the ark from Kirjath-jearim, but leaves it, because of Uzzah's death, in the house of Obed-edom. After three months he takes it into Jerusalem, and proposes to build a temple for Jehovah. Nathan at first approves, but by a vision is directed to forbid David's purpose. His son shall build the house. David thanks God and is resigned. Heathen enemies attack him, but are all overcome. Next follows an account of the king's officers.

Chapter ix. contains a notice of David's friendship to Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan.

In chapters x.—xx. is the narrative of David's great sin and its consequences. David's ambassadors were insulted by the king of the Ammonites. Hence war arose, the Ammonites being helped by the Syrians. These latter are defeated, and the war is concentrated on Rabbah, the capital of the Ammonites. While this siege is in progress David commits adultery with Bath-sheba, and causes her husband Uriah to be slain in the battlefield. The king marries Bath-sheba, but is rebuked for his sin by the parable of Nathan, and the child of Uriah's wife dies. David's repentance is accepted, and her second son Solomon is born, and is beloved of the Lord. But the punishment is not removed. Amnon's conduct towards his half-sister Tamar leads Absalom to kill him, for which he has to flee, but through Joab's management is recalled. Soon Absalom revolts against his father, and David goes away beyond Jordan. Hushai is sent back to Jerusalem to defeat the treacherous counsel of Ahithophel. Absalom takes possession of Jerusalem, and is advised by Ahithophel to pursue and slay his father. Hushai gives different advice, which is followed. David escapes, and Ahithophel hangs himself. David comes to Mahanaim in Gilead, where he receives much kindness and help from Barzillai and others, and whither he is pursued by Absalom. In a battle victory declares for David, and Absalom fleeing is caught by his head in a tree, and is killed by Joab. News of his death is brought to David, who grieves exceedingly for his son. Joab forces him to refrain himself, and both Israel and Judah are anxious to bring the king back to Jerusalem. On his way back Shimei, who had cursed David when he went in flight, comes to meet him and to ask forgiveness. David settles the differences between Ziba and Mephibosheth about the land which Ziba had procured wrongly from David's grant. Barzillai accompanies the king to the river Jordan, but will not, for age, go further, yet sends his son Chimham on to Jerusalem. There arises jealousy between Judah and the other tribes about the haste of Judah in bringing back the king. Sheba, a Benjamite, stirs up the tribes to revolt, but he is pursued and killed at Abel-beth-maachah. A short list of David's officers concludes this portion.

In the remaining chapters (xxi.--xxiv.) are several unconnected matters. First how the Gibeonites sought and obtained vengeance on Saul's family for the slaughter of their kinsmen by him. Then fellow notices of Philistine giants from whom David and his mighty men were in peril. Next is a psalm of thanksgiving, differing very slightly from Psalm xviii.: after which follows another psalm, the last words of David. This is followed by a list of David's warriors and their exploits, and the book closes with David's census of the people, by which God's anger is provoked. Gad, David's seer, is sent to offer the king a choice of punishments. He chooses pestilence, and when 70,000 of the people have died, David humbles himself. He is commanded to purchase the threshing-floor of Araunah, where he builds an altar, and offers sacrifices, and the plague ceases.

I. Kings. This book is separated from 2 Kings in the midst of the reign of Ahab's family over Israel without anything in the narrative which makes a proper break.

In chapters i.--xi. is given the history of the undivided kingdom. (i) On account of David's feebleness Adonijah tries to secure the kingdom, and this action leads to the anointing and coronation of Solomon. Adonijah is pardoned, and (ii) David before his death gives a charge to Solomon with special reference to Joab and Shimei. On his accession Solomon executes his father's injunctions, and also deprives Abiathar of the high-priesthood. (iii) He marries Pharaoh's daughter. God, in a vision at Gibeon, offers him a choice, and he chooses wisdom. His wisdom is made widely known by his decision in the case of a child claimed by two mothers. (iv) He parcels out the land under governors, and arranges how his own table shall be supplied by them. He prospers, and his dominion is wide. Wise people from other lands gather to him. (v) Hiram, king of Tyre, sends congratulations to Solomon, and undertakes to supply wood and workmen for the proposed temple. An account follows of the preparations for the building. (vi) Then a description of the building itself, which occupied seven years and a half. (vii) Thirteen years are spent in building Solomon's own house. Hiram does much of the work for the furniture of the temple and its court. (viii) Solomon brings the ark from the city of David to its place in the temple. The glory of the Lord fills the house. Solomon blesses the congregation, and with solemn prayer dedicates the temple. He offers many sacrifices, and the feast of tabernacles is kept for twice its usual length. (ix) The Lord answers Solomon in a vision, as at Gibeon. After this follows an account of the cities which Solomon built, and the levies needed for this work: of his navy on the Red Sea, and (x) of the visit of the Queen of Sheba: of Solomon's revenue, riches and fame: (xi) of his wives, and how by them he was drawn into idolatry. By this God's anger was provoked, and adversaries were raised up against Solomon; and to Jeroboam it was promised, by Ahijah the prophet, that ten of the twelve tribes should be rent away from the hand of Solomon. Solomon dies, and is succeeded by his son Rehoboam.

From chapter xii. to 2 Kings, chapter viii., the history is occupied with the two rival kingdoms until the overthrow of the house of Ahab. (xii) Rehoboam's refusal to relieve the burdens of the people causes ten tribes to revolt. He prepares to fight against Jeroboam, the king chosen by the revolted tribes, but is forbidden to do so. The calves are set up in Dan and Beth-el, the priesthood thrown open to all the people, and a change made in the time of the feast of tabernacles. (xiii) A man of God is sent to Beth-el to prophesy against the altar there. He is deceived by another prophet, and killed by a lion for his disobedience. (xiv) Sickness and death of Jeroboam's son. Jeroboam is succeeded by his son Nadab. Evil doings of Judah under Rehoboam, for which they are chastised by an invasion of Shishak, king of Egypt. (xv) Abijah, the son of Rehoboam, follows his father's bad example, but his son Asa attempts to suppress idolatry. He makes a league with Benhadad, king of Syria, against Baasha king of Israel. Baasha had murdered Nadab, and was a wicked king. (xvi) A prophecy against him by Jehu, the son of Huanani. Elah, son of Baasha, succeeds his father, and is murdered by Zimri, who after a seven days' reign takes his own life. A short civil war in Israel follows, after which Omri reigns and builds Samaria, and surpasses all former kings in wickedness, but is surpassed in evil by Ahab his son, who, having married Jezebel the daughter of the king of Zidon, introduces Baal-worship into the land. (xvii) Now we have an account of Elijah's struggle for the pure worship. He prophesies against Ahab, and, in consequence, must hide himself. He is fed by ravens at the brook Cherith. Thence he is sent to Zarephath, to a widow, where he and she are miraculously sustained. (xviii) From Zarephath he comes to meet Ahab, and in a contest with the priests of Baal puts them to shame, and they are subsequently slain by the people. (xix) Elijah is threatened by Jezebel and flees to Horeb, where he is divinely commissioned to anoint Hazeal king over Syria, Jehu king over Israel, and Elisha to be prophet in his room, which latter order alone he fulfils. (xx) Benhadad besieges Samaria. The Syrians are overcome, but Ahab lets Benhadad go, for which God's anger and judgement against him are proclaimed by a prophet. (xxi) Ahab covets Naboth's vineyard, and Jezebel contrives that Naboth shall be put to death. Elijah pronounces God's judgement on both king and queen. (xxii) Ahab obtains the help of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, son of Asa, in a war with Syria. The false prophets encourage him, but Micaiah foretells his defeat. Jehoshaphat is in much danger and Ahab is killed, and the dogs lick his blood. Jehoshaphat reigns well in Judah, but Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, follows his father's evil ways, as well as those of Jeroboam.

II. Kings. At this point an arbitrary break is made, and the Second Book of Kings commences with (i) a short notice of the rebellion of Moab against Israel. Ahaziah, king of Israel, injured by an accident, sends to consult Baal-zebub, god of Ekron. Elijah meets the messengers and sends them back to tell Ahaziah he shall not recover. The prophet calls down fire on those who would have seized him. Ahaziah dies. (ii) Elijah is carried to heaven by a whirlwind. A double portion of his spirit descends on Elisha. He divides the Jordan, heals the water at Jericho, and is mocked at Beth-el, and the lads who mocked him are torn by bears. (iii) Jehoram, brother of Ahaziah, is king over Israel: puts away the image of Baal. He goes against Moab and is helped by Jehoshaphat and by the king of Edom. The king of Moab makes a desperate resistance. (iv) Elisha multiplies the widow's oil; raises to life the son of the hospitable Shunammite lady; heals the deadly pottage at Gilgal, and satisfies one hundred men with twenty loaves. (v) He heals the leprosy of Naaman the Syrian, with which disease Gehazi is smitten. (vi) He gives leave to the sons of the prophets to enlarge their dwelling, and causes an axehead to swim: he discloses the plans of the king of Syria, who sends men to seize him. Samaria is besieged, and there is a terrible famine. (vii) Elisha foretells plenty on the morrow. Flight of the Syrians, leaving their stores of provisions to the Israelites. (viii) The Shunammite lady has her lands restored for Elisha's sake. Hazeal is told by Elisha that he shall be king of Syria. He departs and murders his master. Wicked reigns of Jehoram and Ahaziah in Judah. Ahaziah goes with Joram, king of Israel, to war at Ramoth-gilead, and visits that king at Jezreel when he is wounded.

From chapters ix. to xvii. we have the history of the fall of the house of Ahab, and the events which occurred before the captivity of the ten tribes. (ix) Jehu is anointed king of Israel, to destroy the house of Ahab. He slays Joram in the field of Naboth, and wounds to the death Ahaziah, king of Judah, who was with him in Jezreel. Jezebel's dead body is eaten by the dogs. (x) Jehu has seventy of Ahab's sons beheaded, and destroys Ahab's line, and forty-two brethren of Ahaziah. He gains the support of Jehonadab the son of Rechab, and puts down the worship of Baal. Israel begins to be cut off, Hazeal smiting it on the east side. (xi) Athaliah, mother of Ahaziah, usurps the throne of Judah, and kills all the seed royal except the youthful Joash. By the plans of Jehoiada, Athaliah is slain, and an end is made of Baal-worship in Judah. (xii) Joash at first reigns well in Judah. He gives orders for the repair of the house of God, and sees it carried out. He procures the withdrawal of Hazeal from Jerusalem. At last he is slain by his own servants. (xiii) Jehoahaz reigns wickedly in Israel, and Jehoash as wickedly after him. That king came to Elisha on his death-bed, and was promised a partial victory over the Syrians. A dead man is raised to life by touching Elisha's bones. (xiv) The good reign of Amaziah in Judah. He punishes the murderers of his father, and conquers the Edomites, but having provoked Jehoash, king of Israel, he is defeated by him and disgraced. Amaziah is murdered by a conspiracy, and is succeeded by his son Azariah (Uzziah), who recovers for Judah the port of Elath on the Red Sea. The success of Jeroboam the second. He restores the boundaries of Israel as the prophet Jonah had foretold. (xv) Azariah reigns well in Judah, but is struck with leprosy. Zechariah, the last of the line of Jehu, reigns ill in Israel and is murdered by Shallum, who after a month's rule is slain by Menahem, who is a very cruel king. He buys the help of the Assyrians. He is succeeded by a wicked son, Pekahiah, whom Pekah slays, but reigns as wickedly. Pekah is murdered, and the northern tribes are carried into captivity by Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria. Jotham king of Judah. Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Israel, sent by the Lord against Judah. (xvi) Ahaz reigns wickedly. He obtains help against Syria and Israel from Tiglath-pileser. Sets up a new altar, in the temple court at Jerusalem, after the fashion of one he had seen in Damascus. The house of the Lord much injured. (xvii) Hoshea, who had murdered Pekah, is king over Israel, but after a time is put down by the king of Assyria, who found him treacherous, and the rest of the ten tribes are now carried away. The reason of their downfall was their forgetfulness of Jehovah. Heathen nations are brought to occupy the land of Israel, and seeking to know something of the God of the land, there results a mixed religion.

In the succeeding chapters (xviii.—xxv.) we read the history of Judah after the captivity of Israel. (xviii) Hezekiah comes after Ahaz, and institutes many reforms. Sennacherib, king of Assyria, invading Judah, is bought off at first by tribute, but sends afterwards his embassy to induce the people to revolt; (xix) Hezekiah is comforted by Isaiah. Sennacherib sends a blasphemous letter. Isaiah foretells his overthrow, which is wrought by a divinely sent plague, that destroys a great part of his army. He returns to Assyria, and is murdered by his two sons. (xx) Hezekiah receives from the Lord a message of death, but, in answer to his prayer, fifteen years more of life are granted him. Berodach-baladan, king of Babylon, sends an embassy to Hezekiah, who boastfully shews them his treasures. Isaiah foretells the Babylonian captivity. Hezekiah meekly accepts the message. An account is given of his works and his death. (xxi) His son Manasseh succeeds him, and sins by idolatry and cruelty. Amon follows, who is also wicked, and is murdered, but the populace punish the murderers, and put his son Josiah on the throne. (xxii) Josiah's good reign. He repairs the house of the Lord. The book of the law is found, and inquiry is made of Huldah the prophetess. She foretells the destruction of Jerusalem, but not in Josiah's lifetime. (xxiii) The king assembles the people and reads them the law. He destroys all traces of idolatry, both in Judæa and in Samaria. He holds a memorable passover feast, and is praised above all kings, yet the sins of Manasseh could not go unpunished. Going against Pharaoh-necoh, king of Egypt, Josiah is slain in battle. His son Jehoahaz has a short but evil reign, and is deposed by Pharaoh-necoh, who puts his brother Eliakim (Jehoiakim) on the throne, who also reigns wickedly. (xxiv) Being subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, he rebels, and brings upon the land an invasion of Chaldeans and others. At his death, he is followed in the kingdom, and in his wickedness, by his son Jehoiachin, who, with all but the poorest people, is carried to Babylon. The king of Babylon makes Zedekiah king, who soon rebelled against him. (xxv) Then came the final siege of Jerusalem; Zedekiah is blinded and taken away to Babylon. Jerusalem is overthrown, and all its treasures carried away. Gedaliah was set over the few people left in the land, but he is slain, and the people make their way into Egypt. King Jehoiachin, in his captivity, finds favour with Evil-merodach, king of Babylon.

The chronology of the kingdoms of Judah and Israel is included in the section on Chronology, pp. 199 seqq.

Chronicles. The two Books of Chronicles are counted as one in the Hebrew canon, and have the name 'Words of the days,' i.e. Annals. They are called in the Septuagint by a name which signifies 'things left out,' and were looked upon by the Greek translators as supplementary to the other historical books of the Old Testament.

I. Chronicles. The chapters i.—ix. deal with genealogies. The lines of descent from Adam to Jacob are given in chap. i. Then follow the genealogies of the sons of Jacob in the following order: Judah, in which the descendants of David are carried down to the grandchildren of Zerubbabel, who brought back some of the exiles from Babylon: Simeon, Reuben, Gad and Manasseh, some mention of the last-named tribe being found also in a later chapter. Then follow the descendants of Levi, dwelt on specially because of the priesthood, and because from this tribe came the great leaders of the Temple music, Heman, Asaph and Ethan (Jeduthun). Next we have the lines of Issachar, Benjamin, Naphtali, a second notice of Manasseh, because one part of the tribe was on the other side of Jordan: Ephraim, Asher, and a second notice of Benjamin, forming an introduction to the account of the ancient dwellers in Jerusalem, and to the genealogy of the house of Saul. These lists bring us to the end of chapter ix.

The remainder of the first book deals with the history of David, but treats it mainly in its relation to the establishment of the worship of the Temple. Little mention is made of any part of David's actions which might cast discredit on the king who gives his name to so many of the Psalms. Chapters x.—xiv. recount portions of the history which already have appeared in the books of Samuel: xv. and xvi. are occupied by the story of the bringing of the ark to Jerusalem and the arrangements for services which were consequent thereon. Chapters xvii.—xx. are again a repetition of previously recorded history; but in xxi. and xxii. David's sin in numbering the people is dwelt on, and the temptation thereto ascribed to Satan, but this recital is made to shew how the king was brought to know that the place of the altar which he erected after the plague was to be the site of the future Temple, and to introduce an account of the preparation for its building. In xxiii. we are told of Solomon's acceptance as king during David's lifetime. Next comes an account of the courses of the Levites and their work; of the priests, the sons of Aaron, and then of the ordinary Levites under their twenty-four heads. Next follow notices of the singers, the door-keepers, the Levites who kept the temple treasures, the officers, judges, military captains, and civil heads of tribes, a notice of the men who had charge of king David's substance, and those who were his chief officers and advisers. The last two chapters (xxviii., xxix.) tell how David gathered all his chief men together, and describe the great work of temple-building which is to be left to Solomon. The aged king by words and gifts stimulates the liberality of all the people, his joy at which is recorded in a solemn thanksgiving, which is followed by the anointing of Solomon amid great rejoicings and religious observances. The book closes with the king's death.

II. Chronicles. The chapters i.—ix. give an account of the reign of Solomon, repeating what is given in 1 Kings, only, as in the case of David, omitting everything which might detract from the praise of the house of David. From x.—xx. treats of the early history of the kingdom of Judah, giving no notices of the northern kingdom which are not absolutely unavoidable. Chapters xxi.—

xxviii. describe the time from the death of Jehoshaphat to the death of Ahaz, and shew the gradual falling away of the people from the true worship of Jehovah, while in the rest of the book (xxix.—xxxvi.) we are told of the efforts after reform in the reigns of Hezekiah, and later on of Josiah, at which two periods the religious history is much enlarged on. But the evil had gone too far for reform, and the captivity brings their national life to a close. The book ends with the proclamation of Cyrus for the rebuilding of the Temple, exactly as in the opening verses of the book of Ezra.

Some interesting light is thrown by the Chronicles on the sources from which the compilers of the Historical books drew their materials. For Solomon's reign the writer of the Kings refers (1 Kings xi. 41) only to 'the Book of the Acts of Solomon.' The chronicler, whose language is almost the exact counterpart of Kings, enumerates (2 Chron. ix. 29) three documents as his authorities, 'the book of Nathan the prophet, the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and the visions of Iddo the seer.' For the other reigns we are referred in Kings simply to 'the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah' and 'the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel.' Here again the chronicler breaks up these general titles, by referring to separate and special documents. Thus he cites for the reign of Rehoboam 'the Book of Shemaiah the prophet and Iddo the seer' (2 Chron. xii. 15); for Abijah's reign he refers (2 Chron. xiii. 22) to 'the story of the prophet Iddo'; for Jehoshaphat's history his authority (2 Chron. xx. 34) is 'the Book of Jehu the son of Hanani,' which, he tells us, 'is inserted in the Book of the Kings of Israel.' Further, we read (2 Chron. xxvi. 22) that Isaiah the prophet wrote the history of Azariah (Uzziah) and also (2 Chron. xxxii. 32) the acts and good deeds of Hezekiah, and it is added that 'the vision of Isaiah' is included in 'the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel.' The account of Manasseh's reign we read (2 Chron. xxxiii. 18) is to be found partly in 'the Book of the Kings of Israel,' and other things concerning him are among 'the sayings of the seers' (R.V. 'in the history of Hozai').

These instances make it clear that from the earliest times of the kingdom, if not before, writers living amid the events described, and generally of the prophetic order, recorded the history of their own times, and that from these are constructed the history of the nation as it has come down to us; the compilers, whether before or after the Captivity, selecting from contemporary records such portions as suited the purpose of their composition.

Ezra and Nehemiah were counted by the Jews as one book, and the former appears to be intended as a continuation of 2 Chronicles, while Nehemiah's journal relates to a time not long after the return of the second body of exiles who came back under Ezra. Together they embrace a period of more than 100 years.

Ezra commences with the proclamation of Cyrus, with which 2 Chronicles concludes, and proceeds to notice the restoration of the sacred vessels which Nebuchadnezzar had carried from Jerusalem. Sheshbazzar is the Babylonian name for Zerubbabel (see ii. 2), who is mentioned in Haggai and Zechariah. In chapter ii. we have a notice of the numbers of the returning exiles, with their means and their offerings. In iii. commences the notice of the setting up of the altar and the rebuilding of the Temple. Then (iv.) the adversaries offer to join them in their work, but being refused, malign the people at the court of Persia. The Ahasuerus of verse 6 in this chapter, and the Artaxerxes of 7, 8, 23, are by some thought to be Cambyses the son of Cyrus and the pseudo-Smerdis who reigned next for only seven months; others, who look upon verses 6—23 as a long parenthesis, introduced to shew that the hindrances went on longer than the reign of Darius, take Ahasuerus to be the Ahasuerus of the book of Esther, who is most likely the Xerxes of classical history, and Artaxerxes to be his successor Artaxerxes Longimanus, who is the king intended in Ezra vii. and Neh. ii.

In chapter v. the people are incited by Haggai and Zechariah to resume their building. The governor of the land and his companions at first are minded to stop them, but on writing to king Darius there is found (vi) among the royal records the decree of Cyrus, and Darius makes a similar decree, upon which the governor becomes friendly to the work of Zerubbabel and his people, and the Temple is finished and dedicated and a joyous passover is kept.

The rest of the book, which is Ezra's own work, tells of the return of a second band of exiles over whom he had charge. This event would be about 80 years after Zerubbabel's coming to Jerusalem, and about 13 years before Nehemiah's mission. Ezra had his commission from Artaxerxes (Longimanus). A list is given of the families who returned at this time and their numbers. Ezra takes steps for procuring some Levites to go with the returning band, and for the security of the treasure that was carried up. They reach Jerusalem, and there Ezra learns that many marriages have taken place between the returned Jews and strangers. These strange wives he exhorts them to put away, and they consent to do so. The book concludes with a list of those who had thus offended.

The Book of Ezra contains two passages, iv. 8—vi. 18 and vii. 12—26, which are not in Hebrew but in Aramaic.

Nehemiah. The book is called 'the words of Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah.' He was cupbearer to king Artaxerxes, and having heard of the misery in Jerusalem was very downcast. The king observed this and gave him a commission to go to Jerusalem. He arrived, and arranged for the building of the walls of the city, in spite of the mockery and opposition of the enemies. By prayer and watchfulness amid their labours, and by arming all the people while the work was in progress, it is possible to carry it on. The people complain to Nehemiah of their debt, mortgages and bondage. He takes measures for a remedy, and sets an example of great self-denial. The enemies now try the effect of pretended friendship, and after that of troublesome rumours, but in the end the wall is completed, though there were even among the nobles of Judah some who sympathised and communicated with the adversaries.

The rest of the book (chapters vii.—xiii.) treats of certain reforms which Nehemiah inaugurated. First he prepares to take a census of the people, and finds the list, the same which is given in Ezra ii., of those who came up at the first. He promotes a revival of religion, by regular and stated reading of the Law, and by teaching the people. They celebrate the feast of tabernacles with great joy. Next is recorded a solemn fast, and after confession they bind themselves to a covenant, which is sealed by the chief men on behalf of the rest. They pledge themselves to walk before the Lord, not to intermarry with strangers, to observe the sabbath, to contribute regularly to the services of the sanctuary, and to give duly their first-fruits and their tithes. Next there is given a list of the names of those who were dwelling in Jerusalem, and a description of the way in which the Nethinim, the Levites and the people generally were distributed throughout Judah and Benjamin. Next follow lists of the heads of the priestly courses, the line of the high priests, and various lists of the Levites. After the recital of these arrangements, we are told how the newly-finished wall was dedicated; how the arrangements of David and Solomon for the service of the priests and Levites, and for their maintenance, were restored. Then the mixed multitude is separated from Israel, as commanded in the law of Moses. Next we read how, in an absence of Nehemiah for about twelve years, Eliashib the priest had been unfaithful in his trust, and had prepared for Tobiah a chamber in the Lord's house. This abuse Nehemiah corrected on his return; expelled Tobiah and all his belongings: took means to prevent the profanation of the sabbath, and checked the marriages with heathen women, even expelling a grandson of Eliashib, who by such a marriage had defiled the priesthood.

This book is full of interest because of the direct appeals which Nehemiah so frequently makes to the Lord to bear in mind the labours which he has borne.

Esther. This book contains the history which led to the institution of the Jewish feast, Purim. Ahasuerus, king of Persia, most probably Xerxes, gives orders to his queen Vashti to shew her beauty to the people and the princes. Because of her refusal, the king is advised to divorce her. A new queen is to be chosen from the fairest maidens, and the choice falls on Esther, the adopted daughter of Mordecai the Jew. She does not disclose her kindred. Mordecai had aforetime saved the king's life from a plot. The chief man at the court of Ahasuerus was Haman the Agagite, and to him Mordecai did not pay due reverence. For this reason Haman, having cast lots to find a suitable day for his petition, obtains a decree to put the Jews to death, and to take their goods as spoil. There is great grief among the Jews, and Esther is charged by Mordecai to interpose by going before the king. This she does in spite of the peril of such a course, and invites the king and Haman to a banquet, and repeats the invitation for the next day. Haman, thus high in favour, as it seems, with the queen as well as the king, yet repines at Mordecai's neglect of him, and prepares a gallows on which, when the time comes, Mordecai shall be hanged. Meanwhile in the intervening night the king, reading in the Chronicles of Mordecai's former service, finds it has been unrewarded. Haman comes to ask permission to hang Mordecai, and is made the agent to do him great honour: whereupon his friends tell him that he is doomed to fall before this Jew. At her second banquet, Esther makes her petition to the king for her own life and that of her people, and discloses Haman's plots. The king orders Haman to be hanged on the gallows he had prepared, and bestows his office on Mordecai. Then Esther procures letters to be sent throughout the land to hinder the effect of the decree which Haman had procured. The joy of the Jews is great at Mordecai's honour. But in spite of the favour of the king the enemies of the Jews try to carry out Haman's intentions. The Jews defend themselves, and a second day is granted them in Shushan to take vengeance on their foes. The bodies of Haman's sons are hanged. The day following is kept as a great feast-day. And two days of feasting are appointed to be observed for all time, by command of Mordecai and Esther, in feasting and gladness and hospitality and liberality to those in need. They are called Purim, because of the lot (Pur) which Haman had cast for the destruction of the Jews. The book closes with a brief notice of the power of king Ahasuerus, and the advancement of Mordecai, who sought the welfare of his people and spoke peace to all his seed.

The Book of Esther contains no mention of God, and its spirit of revenge is somewhat alien to the better ages of Judaism. The historical character of the book, though it is probably incorrect in details, is vouched for by the observance of the Purim-feast in memory of the deliverance.

THE POETICAL BOOKS. BY THE REV. CHARLES TAYLOR, D.D., MASTER OF ST JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The Book of Job narrates the afflictions which befall the righteous patriarch of that name by the divine permission, and discusses the moral problem which they present. It consists of a Prologue (ch. i.—ii.) and an Epilogue (ch. xlii. 7—17) written in prose; with a series of argumentative discourses (ch. iii.—xlii. 6) unsurpassed for poetry of thought and diction. The opening verses describe Job as a man "perfect and upright," and blessed in family and substance. The scene then changes to Heaven, where the "sons of God" come to present themselves before Jehovah, and the adversary Satan comes also among them. On his cynically asking, "Doth Job fear God for nought?", he is allowed to try him by successive losses of possessions and of his sons and daughters; and afterwards to smite him in person with a sore disease, elephantiasis, yet so as to spare his life. His wife tempts him to curse God and die; but he is resigned alike in losses and bodily afflictions. "In all this did not Job sin with his lips" (ch. ii. 10). The delivery of Job into the hand of Satan may be compared with St Luke xlii. 31, where the adversary again has his request, that he may have power over the disciples to sift them as wheat. When Job's three friends, Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, heard of the evil that had befallen him they came to condole with him, and they sat with him in silence seven days and nights, "for they saw that his grief was very great." Then Job opened his mouth and cursed the day of his birth (ch. iii.).

Ch. iv.—xxxi., xxxviii.—xlii. In the Prologue the end is seen from the beginning, but all is obscure in the arena of the lower world. There Job and his friends strive hotly with one another as to the cause and the significance of his afflictions in the three cycles of speeches, ch. iv.—xiv., ch. xv.—xxi. and ch. xxii.—xxxi. respectively. Each cycle should contain attacks by Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, with Job's reply to each, six speeches in all; but Zophar's third speech is missing, and Job, having replied to Bildad in ch. xxvi., "continued his parable" to the end of ch. xxxi., where it is said, "The words of Job are ended." It has been argued very plausibly that the apparently lost speech has been merged in the words of Job by the accidental omission of the statement, that "Zophar the Naamathite answered and said," just before ch. xxvii. 13. "This is the portion of a wicked man with God, &c." which is a repetition of Zophar's concluding words in ch. xx. 29 and is inconsistent with Job's complaint of the prosperity of the wicked in ch. xxi. But explanations of the seeming contradiction have been offered, and it has been held that, "where the regular mechanism of the several parts leads us to expect a third speech likewise from Zophar," he fails to come forward only because he has nothing more to say, and that his silence and the meagreness of Bildad's indictment in ch. xxv. and the fulness of Job's defence (ch. xxvi.—xxxi.) are meant for indications that the attack of the three friends has been repelled. Eliphaz speaks always first of the three, and with the authority of an ancient seer to whom the Lord reveals Himself (ch. iv. 12—16). Accordingly it is to him that the Lord speaks in ch. xlii. 7, "My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath." Bildad is the master of traditions, who takes his stand upon the wisdom of the past: "For inquire, I pray thee, of the former age. . . For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing" (ch. viii. 8, 9). Zophar, if their inferior in spiritual endowments and erudition, does not yield to them at all in self-confidence (ch. xi., xx.). To what end are rhetoric and abstruse speculation? "Should a man full of talk be justified?" "Canst thou by searching find out God?" He makes haste to reply out of the spirit of his understanding, and is troubled with no doubt of the uniform working of his law: "This is the portion of a wicked man from God." Throughout the discussion the good and evil that befall men are assumed to come as rewards and punishments from the hand of God, without the intervention of second causes. One "stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted" (Isaiah liii. 4), as Job was, must have been a sinner. His friends ring the changes on this thesis. He maintains his innocence, and the question necessarily arises, "Is God unrighteous?" (Rom. iii. 5). The thought wrings from him words without knowledge (ch. xxxviii. 2), which he eventually retracts (ch. xlii. 3); yet he is declared to have spoken the thing that is right of the divine government (ch. xlii. 7), as having refuted their superficial arguments, and shewn that there was a mystery in the incidence of suffering which only a fresh revelation could solve. The two answers of Jehovah out of the whirlwind (ch. xxxviii.—xl. 2; ch. xl. 6—xli.) give no solution of this to the understanding, but they set forth the glory of God in creation by typical instances, and put the unanswerable questions, "Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct Him?" "Wilt thou condemn Me, that thou mayest be righteous?" Job's craving for light is satisfied by the vision of God, at length vouchsafed in answer to his appeals. "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth Thee."

Ch. xxxii.—xxxvii. The Three having ceased to answer Job because he was righteous in his own eyes, a fresh interlocutor, Elihu, is introduced with some verses in prose in continuation of the Prologue. He had waited for them to speak, as being much older than himself, but on their failure to confute Job he himself could not but take up his parable. He accepts their view of Job's sinfulness, and charges him with adding rebellion to his sin (ch. xxxiv. 37) by his defiant attitude toward God, whom he regards as having afflicted him wrongfully. Elihu's main thesis is that the Almighty will "not pervert judgement," and he is shocked at the impiety of one who can think this possible. His disapprobation is expressed in the strongest terms. "Job hath said, I am righteous: and God hath taken away my judgement... What man is like Job, who drinketh up scorning like water?" (ch. xxxiv. 5, 7). Afflictions may have been sent with a gracious purpose, although sinners by their contumacy turn them to their destruction (ch. xxxvi. 8-13). God is the righteous governor of all sorts and conditions of men, of nations as of individuals (ch. xxxiv. 29). To this Job makes no reply. Elihu had thrown down the challenge, "If thou hast anything to say, answer me: speak, for I desire to justify thee" (ch. xxxiii. 32); and we may suppose that Job does not take it up because he cannot justify his attitude of mind toward God. These chapters are thought by many to be an addition to the original book of Job for the following reasons: (1) They break the connexion between the "words of Job" (ch. xxxi.) and the answer to them in ch. xxxviii., "Then Jehovah answered Job out of the whirlwind, &c." But it may be said that the storm of ch. xxxvii. 2-5 leads up to the "whirlwind" out of which the Lord answers, and that not until after the reproofs of Elihu, which he accepts in silence, was Job in a fit frame of mind to receive the answer of the Almighty. (2) There is no mention of Elihu, no praise or dispraise of his contribution to the discussion, in the Epilogue. This is, no doubt, a difficulty. But the writer may have thought that he had commended him sufficiently by making Job fail to find an answer to him. Moreover the statement that the Lord answered "Job" points to the intervention of another speaker after his last words. (3) Elihu's standpoint, it is said, does not differ materially from that of the Three, and he brings the problem no nearer to its solution. But this was not the opinion of the writer, whether of the whole book or of the Elihu-chapters, if Job's failure to answer means anything. (4) The chapters have so many references (ch. xxxiii. 8, 9, 15, xxxiv. 3, 5, 6, xxxv. 2, 3, 7, &c.) to other parts of the book that the composer of them must have had the rest of the book before him. It does not follow that he was not himself the writer of it. (5) The style of the episode shews it to have been by a different author. To this it is answered that it is intended to be characteristic of the fresh speaker. If the main part of the book was written in character, being, as some say, full of archaic touches due to the poetic art of the writer, where shall we draw the line and say, Thus far extends his creative faculty and no further?

It has been thought on the one hand that the Book of Job is literal history in every part, and on the other that it is a "parable," and Job never existed. The latter opinion is no new one, but is put forward by an eminent rabbi in the course of a discussion in the Babylonian Talmud (Baba Bathra 15 a). The truth must be somewhere between these extremes. Few will see in ch. xxxviii.—xli. a verbatim report of words of the Almighty, nor have the speeches of Job and the Three the character of an ex tempore dialogue. The mention of Job with Noah and Daniel in Ezekiel xiv. 14, 20 requires only that there should have been a tradition about him, which the book embodies, and the literary form of the discussion in the book may be due in great measure to the imagination of the writer. The date of the book may be widely different from the date of Job. It has been held that Moses wrote it, compiling the dialogue from more ancient sources: it is now held by many that it cannot have been written before the Babylonian Captivity. Granted that the scene of the dialogue is laid in the patriarchal age, it is said that the numerous and consistent marks of extreme antiquity which pervade the book are due to consummate art in the author, who however allows occasional allusions to his latter-day surroundings to escape him. Generally, for instance, the speakers, who are not of Israel, use the names of God proper to their supposed age and place, but at times they shew a knowledge of the Tetragrammaton (ch. i. 21, xii. 9). The reference to the worship of the host of heaven in ch. xxxi. 26 is said to imply a knowledge of Deut. iv. 19. Space does not admit of more than a passing word on this topic, but the matter is one which will repay careful study. The chief positive argument for a late date of the book is its religious standpoint. On this too a word must suffice: compare Prov. xiii. 9, "the lamp of the wicked shall be put out," with Job's sceptical question, "How often is the lamp of the wicked put out?" (ch. xxi. 17), and we see that the time has come when the primitive law of temporal retribution has been found not to work uniformly. A later stage of thought had been reached than by the Solomonic age, to which however some great scholars have assigned the book. A later date is suggested by ch. xii. 17-19, "He leadeth counsellors away spoiled, &c.," which may be thought to describe the deportation of the Ten Tribes or of Judah, if the reference be to any event in Biblical history.

The theory that Job is "a parable" is true in the sense that he is a typical character. He does not speak merely as an individual when he says, "Wherefore are we counted as beasts, and reputed vile in your sight?" (ch. xviii. 3. Cf. Psalm xlii. 11). God's perfect and upright servant Job (ch. ii. 3) has traits in common with the servant of the Lord described by Isaiah. The two portra-tures should be carefully compared. In order of thought, if not in date, the Book of Job precedes the latter part of the Book of Isaiah, not rising to the height of the Evangelical Prophet's representation of the Suffering Saviour. But it contributes negatively, and to some extent positively, to larger views than prevailed in earlier times of the divine government of the world. One afflicted by God's permission, it is now seen, may be innocent, and yet it must be somehow demonstrable that God is not unrighteous. The hope of a vision of God after this life is confidently expressed (ch. xix. 25-27) in a sense and words which no one can exactly explain. But the complete solution of the problem of the book is set above human reason alike in the Prologue, which shews the purpose of the Almighty, and in His answers to Job. In its true place in history the book is a landmark in the course of a progressive Revelation, and it "opens the ear to instruction" which the people of God were to receive in the fullness of time. In the Septuagint of ch. ii. 11 the friends of Job are styled Kings. In the New Testament ch. v. 13 is quoted in 1 Cor. iii. 19, and "the patience of Job" is referred to by St James.

The Psalms collectively are called in Hebrew Tehillim or "Praises," but the word mizmor (Sept. psalmos), which denotes a composition set to music, is found in the titles of many of them, and Tehillah in that of Ps. cxlv. only. The book is the first in order of the "Scriptures" (Kethubim) or Hagiographa, which with the Law and the Prophets make up the Hebrew Old Testament. The same three divisions are referred to in St Luke xxiv. 44 as "the law of Moses, the prophets and the psalms," where the Psalms stand for the whole Hagiographa because they stand first in it, as the Book of Genesis is named in Hebrew from its first word "In the beginning." The Davidic writings formed part of Nehemiah's "library" (2 Macc. ii. 13). The Psalms from ix. to cxlvii. are numbered differently in the Hebrew and the Septuagint, two Hebrew psalms being reckoned as one, or one as two, in the Greek in the four cases:

Heb. ix. and x. Sept. ix.
 " cxiv. and cxv. ... " cxiii.
 " cxvi. " cxiv. and cxv.
 " cxlvii. " cxlvi. and cxlvii.

Ps. ii. follows Ps. i. without a break in some Hebrew MSS., and it is cited under the head of Ps. i. in Acts xiii. 33 according to the Codex Bezae and some other authorities.

The Hebrew Psalter is divided into five books, ending with Pss. xli., lxxii., lxxxix., cvi., cl. respectively, each terminal psalm concluding with or being of the nature of a doxology. As Moses gave Israel the five books of the Law, so (says the Midrash) David gave them the Psalms in five books. The Psalms, like the sections of the Pentateuch, may be classed as Jehovistic or Elohist, whatever may be the real significance of that distinction. The following table shews the total number of psalms and the number that are anonymous in each book, and then specifies those ascribed in one sense or other to David, Solomon, Moses, the sons of Korah, Asaph, Ethan, Heman, and Jeduthun, the last being anonymous. After Book II. is written, "The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended," but many later psalms are ascribed to David. The Heman psalm is ascribed also to the sons of Korah, and the Jeduthun psalms two of them to David, and the third to Asaph.

DAVID. Seventy-three of the psalms, including nearly all in the first book, being thus ascribed to David, it was natural that the whole collection should be referred to as his, and that this convenient way of speaking should give rise in time to the popular belief that "the sweet psalmist of Israel" himself wrote all the so-called Psalms of David. Sacred psalmody is ascribed to him in general terms in 1 and 2 Chron., the accompanying instruments also being called "instruments of David," as in Neh. xii. 36 and Am. vi. 5. Jewish and Christian writers have explained away anachronisms such as that of attributing the anonymous captivity psalm, "By the rivers of Babylon" (Ps. cxxxvii.), to David (Sept.) by saying that he wrote it as a prophecy. Compare Ps. xvi., "O sing unto the Lord a new song, &c.," which the LXX. ascribe at once to David and to the occasion of the building of the house of the Lord after the captivity. In some cases in which a psalm is ascribed to David in the Hebrew also it seems that he could not have written it, and it has been concluded that the Hebrew titles are inaccurate and valueless. Before saying this we should be sure what meaning they were intended to convey. A prayer "of" (Hebrew, to or for) a person may be a prayer which he has himself composed and uttered (Hab. iii. 1), but a prayer "of" Moses (Ps. xc.), or "of" David (Pss. xvii., lxxxvi.), or "of" (marg. for) an afflicted one (Ps. ciii.), may none the less be a composition of some later "psalmist of Israel" befitting the character and circumstances of the person to whom it is ascribed. A psalm said to be "of" David may have been written generally in the character of David or with allusion to some particular occasion, as Ps. iii. (Absalom), vii. (Cush), xxx. (Dedication), xxxiv. (Abimelech), li. (Bathsheba), lii. (Doeg), liv. (Ziphim), lvi. (Gath), lvii. and cxlii. (the cave), lix. (when Saul sent), &c. The same preposition is used in assigning a psalm to the chief Musician or Precentor for performance and to David or Solomon on the sabbath day (Pss. iv.—vi., viii., ix., xi.—xiv., lxxii., xcii., &c.). In what sense and with what latitude it is to be taken must be determined in each case. While we have the best authority for regarding David as a psalmist and the chief of psalmists, not a few of the "Psalms of David" are certainly by other authors, and some have been assigned with more or less confidence to so late an age as that of the Maccabees. In special cases, as below, we have external testimony to the authorship and parallel texts of the whole or portions of a psalm.

Ps. xviii., "To the chief Musician, to the servant of the Lord, to David, &c." This psalm is found also in 2 Sam. xxii., where it is attributed to David as author. The two texts differing in places, the question arises, which is the more primitive? Possible clerical errors apart, the priority on the whole seems to rest with the text in Samuel, the psalm in the Psalter having been apparently altered for liturgical use. This result might have been anticipated. Many Christian hymns in Hymnals have been so altered from their original form. The differences between the two texts may be thought to testify to the fact that at a very early period the Jewish scribes were less scrupulously accurate in copying the Holy Scriptures than we know them to have been later; but we must not make too much of this present instance, for it is one thing to transcribe a psalm with variations for concurrent use in the Psalter and quite another to alter it in its original context. In any case, the differences in the two forms of it are not such as to affect the spirit and tenor of the psalm.

Another instance of parallel texts is afforded by 1 Chron. xvi. 8—36, which comprises Ps. cv. 1—15, cxvi., cvii. 1, cvi. 47—8. The occasion is the bringing of the ark of God to its resting-place, when David charges Asaph and his brethren to praise the Lord. Opinions differ as to the relation of the two texts.

Solomon. Ps. lxxii. is entitled "A Psalm for (marg. of) Solomon," and Ps. cxxvii. "A Song of degrees for (marg. of) Solomon." According to the Syriac the latter was spoken by David concerning Haggai (cf. i. 4) and Zechariah, who urged the building of the Temple. There is no conclusive reason to think either psalm Solomon's.

Moses. Ps. xc. is called a prayer "of Moses." The title, as we have shewn, being ambiguous, it is for the commentators to decide on other grounds whether the psalm is Mosaic.

KORAH. According to one view the ascription of certain psalms to the sons of Korah signifies that they wrote them. Another view is that they are designated not as authors but performers, like the "chief Musician." Korahites are mentioned as choristers in 2 Chron. xx. 19; and Heman, a descendant of Korah (Numb. xxvi. 11; 1 Chron. vi. 33), had fourteen sons and three daughters, all of whom "were under the hands of their father for song, &c." (1 Chron. xxv. 1—6). The titles of the Korah psalms leave it an open question to what generation of the "sons of Korah" they are assigned. Ps. lxxxviii. is "for the sons of Korah, to the chief Musician,.... Maschi of Heman the Ezrahite."

ASAPH. The Asaph psalms may have been thought to be written by Asaph, since Hezekiah and the princes gave commandment to praise the Lord "with the words of David and of Asaph the seer" (2 Chron. xxix. 30). But since Asaph was not only a writer of psalms but one of David's chief musicians, some of his sons also being musicians (1 Chron. xv. 19, xxv. 1), it has been argued that "to Asaph" may mean "to the Asaph family," as musicians.

HEMAN. ETHAN. JEDUTHUN. Solomon was wiser than "Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, &c." (1 Kings iv. 31). Jeduthun has been identified with Ethan. The title of Ps. xxxix. might denote that he was "chief Musician." But "on Jeduthun" in Ps. lxxii. and Ps. lxxvii. may mean "after the manner of Jeduthun," or on an instrument so called, or set to the tune of a song so named or commencing.

THE SRETYAGINT. This ascribes several of the anonymous psalms to David. In some MSS. of it most of the Pss. xlii.—xlix. are ascribed both to him and to the sons of Korah. It varies or adds to the titles in other cases, as lxvi. (anastaseos), lxxi. (sons of Jonathan, &c.), lxxvi. and lxxx. (the Assyrian), xcvi. (reb. of temple), cxliv. (Goliath), cxlvi., &c. (Haggai and Zach.). It adds Ps. cii. as spoken by David of his duel with Goliath. Generally it testifies to the titles as we have them in the Hebrew, but fails to explain their difficulties. Some of its readings in them shew critical appreciation of the place of the psalms in history.

The key to the meaning of the Psalter is a right conception of the personality of the psalmist, who at times assumes a character above the level of humanity, and speaks not as the historical Israelite but as the ideal Israel, the blameless or wrongfully suffering Servant of the Lord. Salient events in sacred history and the inspired writer's own surroundings serve as the vehicle of aspirations to be realized only in the Messiah and Messianic times. If he prays for or predicts disaster to his enemies it is because his enemies are the wicked (Ps. xxvii. 2), they and he being transfigured into embodiments of evil and good. His utterances must be interpreted with due allowance for their poetical and spiritual elements, and not with a prosaic literalism. Notice the opinion that the curses of Ps. cix. 6—20 are spoken not by David but by his enemies. This requires that we should read in ver. 5, "And they have rewarded me ... saying," the word saying (not in the Hebrew) being supplied as in Ps. xxii. 7 and elsewhere.

No book of the Old Testament is more Christian in its inner sense or more fully attested as such by the use made of it than the Psalms. Out of a total of 283 direct citations from the Old Testament in the New, 116 have been counted from that one book. The Church by its preference for the Psalms reverses the sentence of the Synagogue, which judged the psalmists' inspiration inferior to that of the prophets, and set Moses on high above them all, so that no prophet might teach any new thing but only what was implicitly contained in the Law. This is not the place to discuss whether the New Testament by its citations determines the meaning or authorship of this or that psalm. The student should first of all endeavour to ascertain the original sense and setting of each as part of the Old Testament, and afterwards coordinate his results with what other data seem to require. The ascription of words to a typical personage like David does not always and necessarily imply that they were spoken by the king "of flesh and blood" of that name, and an argument which seems to rest upon that assumption may prove valid if the words are ideally true as spoken in the character of David.

Titles are added to some of the Psalms, but it is open to question whether these are as old as the words to which they are attached. They mainly refer to the manner in which the words were to be sung or accompanied. Some Psalms were to be accompanied by stringed instruments (Neginah, Neginoth Ps. iv., liv., lv., lxi., lxvii., lxxvi. and Hab. iii. 19), others by wind instruments (Nekûloth Ps. v.); while such titles as 'Set to Alamoth' (Ps. xlv.) = maidens, 'Set to the Sheminith' (Ps. vi., xii.) = the octave, seem to imply that there was singing in parts. Some of the titles appear to be intended to indicate the character of the Psalm, as Maschil = giving instruction (Ps. xxxii., xli., xlv., xlv., lii. - lv., lxxiv., lxxviii., lxxxix. and cxli.), Michtam, rendered by some Golden Psalm (Ps. xvi., lvi. - lx.); while Shiggaion (Ps. vii.) with Shigionoth (Hab. iii. 1) may refer to the irregular erratic style of the compositions, Githith = belonging to Gath (Ps. viii., lxxxi., lxxxiv.) may relate either to the melody or to the instrument used in the performance. The other titles are all most probably names of tunes, well known at the time, to which the Psalms were appointed to be sung. These are

The Book of Proverbs (Sept. paromi) is called in Hebrew from its first word Proverbs of. It was also called Wisdom (ch. i. 2, 20) by early Christian writers, in accordance (as it seems) with Jewish tradition. The epithet all-virtuous (Gr. panaretos) was commonly added. The same title was used of the apocryphal books Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus. The Hebrew word rendered proverb is maschal, a similitude or parable, but the book contains many maxims and sayings not properly so called. In the Midrash the formula "maschal, to what is the matter like?" was used in introducing a parable, with which may be compared the way of speaking in St Matt. xiii. 24, 31, 33. In St Luke iv. 23, "Ye will surely say unto me this parable (A. V. proverb), Physician, heal thyself," there is a comparison to a physician and his work. The proverb is essentially figurative and its typical form parallelistic, as ch. xi. 22, "A jewel of gold in a swine's snout: a fair woman which is without discretion." But the figure is sometimes given without its interpretation, as "Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant" (ch. ix. 17), or "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge" (Ezek. xviii. 2). The transition is easy from the normal form of proverb, "As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more: but the righteous is an everlasting foundation" (ch. x. 25), to the figurative diction of ch. xii. 3, "the root of the righteous shall not be moved," and thence to the bare statement, "There shall no evil happen to the just: but the wicked shall be filled with mischief" (ver. 21), which is no proverb, but a simple "word of understanding" (ch. i. 2). The addresses of Wisdom consist of proverbs within a proverb, for it is "in a figure" (Heb. xi. 19) that she speaks in the character of the virtuous woman, not to mention that she is also "a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her" (ch. iii. 18). Solomon's wisdom is described in 1 Kings iv. 29-34: "He spake three thousand proverbs; and his songs were a thousand and five." It is not said that he wrote down any of his proverbs; and if all in the Book of Proverbs were his, the great majority of the three thousand would still have been lost.

The book, like Ecclesiastes, was criticised, according to the Babylonian Talmud (Shabbath 30 b), where we read that it was sought to make it apocryphal on account of its contradictions, as "Answer not a fool according to his folly... Answer a fool according to his folly" (ch. xxvi. 4, 5). Elsewhere some more serious objections were made to it, for there is much in it which does not rise above the plane of worldly wisdom. But it contains also thoughts which are the germ of the philosophy of revealed religion, Christian and Jewish, and it presupposes everywhere that "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (ch. i. 7, ix. 10). Its use of the most holy name Jehovah would have given it a certain sanctity in Jewish eyes. The least spiritual of the Proverbs are yet invaluable (it has been said) as reminding us that the voice of Divine Inspiration does not disdain to utter homely truths. They teach us that goodness is also wisdom, and wickedness folly.

In Hebrew manuscripts the Hagiographa begins with Psalms, Proverbs, Job, or with Psalms, Job, Proverbs; but St Jerome testifies to the order, Job, David, and then Solomon with his trilogy as in the A.V. The Book of Proverbs itself tells us that it was not put together by Solomon, part of it claiming to have been added by the scribes of king Hezekiah. It subdivides itself as follows.

Chap. i.—ix. Title and contents (ch. i. 1—6) with prologue on Wisdom and Folly. Solomon is named as author of the Proverbs generally, but perhaps not specially of this section. Other parameiasts are recognised in ch. i. 6: "To understand a proverb... the words of the wise, and their dark sayings." The prologue is, in a word, the book of Wisdom, the offspring and agent of God and the teacher of men. "Wisdoms crieth without" (ch. i. 20), the plural denoting all-wisdom. She is Achamoth in the gnostic angelology. There is wisdom and wisdom: a wisdom of the craftsman, "and all manner of cunning (lit. wise) men, &c." (1 Chron. xxii. 15), and a wisdom whose "seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world" (ch. viii. 30). Wisdom in Greek also ranges from technical skill to a "divine philosophy." The lower serves as the vehicle of a higher sense in St Paul's "wise masterbuilder" (1 Cor. iii. 10) and again in Wisd. vii. 22, "For wisdom, which is the worker of all things, taught me." The entire collection down to its most homely counsels is a book of "wisdoms." Some have made this part of Proverbs earlier and some later than the body of the work. Some date it before the verses on wisdom in Job xxviii. and some after. The strange woman's "peace offerings" (ch. vii. 14) point to early times as of the monarchy. With Solomon's choice of wisdom carrying with it riches and honour (2 Chron. i. 12) compare Prov. iii. 16, "Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honour."

Ch. x.—xxii. 16. Proverbs of Solomon. This is the main part of the book, and probably its earliest part on the whole. It consists of an anthology of proverbs and sentences which must be studied in detail. Like the Wisdom section (ch. iii. 18) it allegorizes the tree of life (ch. xi. 30, xiii. 12, xv. 4), and it has sayings, as on the talebearer (ch. xviii. 8) and the brawling woman (ch. xxi. 9), which link it to the Hezekian collection. Compare ch. xv. 11, "Sheol and Abaddon are before the Lord," with Job xxvi. 6.

Ch. xxii. 17—xxiv. 22 and xxiv. 23—34. Words of the Wise. These sections commence without a break in our Bibles, one with, "Incline thine ear, and hear the words of the wise," and the other with, "These also are of the wise." The ascription of the Proverbs to Solomon in ch. i. 1 can only be taken generally. Notice the Deuteronomic precept, "Remove not the ancient landmark" (ch. xxii. 28, xxiii. 10), and compare ch. xxiv. 23 with Levit. xix. 15.

Ch. xxv.—xxix. "These are also proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out." The greater part of the work is older than this appendix by the "men of Hezekiah."

Ch. xxx. The burden of Agur. Compare the mysterious saying in ver. 4, "Who hath ascended up into heaven, &c.," with St John iii. 13 and Eph. iv. 10. If the fourth thing that is "comely in going" is a king "when his army is with him," the word rendered "no rising up" (ver. 31) must be the Arabic word gaum preceded by the article al (or el). Compare the name Almodad in Gen. x. 26 and the "stones of elgubhish" in Ezekiel xiii. 11 and xxxviii. 22; and for the sense compare the processional "goings" in the sanctuary (Ps. lxxviii. 24).

Ch. xxxi. The burden of Lemuel. The description of the virtuous woman may be of different authorship, but the chapter as it stands is a continuous whole. King Lemuel's mother teaches him "Give not thy strength unto women," and the contrasted picture of the ideal wife follows naturally. It is in twenty-two verses, beginning severally with the letters of the alphabet in their present order. As the Jews have an alphabet of confession for the Day of Atonement, Ashamnu, Bagadnu, Gasadnu, &c., and as the all-holy is he who fulfils the law "from Aleph to Tau," so this woman's virtues exhaust the alphabet, and the book fitly closes with an incarnation of the Wisdom that is graced with every virtue and of price above "rubies" (ch. viii. 11, xxxi. 10. Cf. Job xxviii.). The virtuous woman is the one among a thousand whom the Preacher failed to find (ver. 10; Eccl. vii. 28). Psalms cxi., cxii., cxix., &c. and Lam. i.—iv. are alphabetic. Granted that the acrostic style is not primitive, it does not help us to fix a close limit of date.

The Septuagint version of Proverbs abounds in glosses and additions, of which but a few instances must suffice. Ch. iii. 9, "just labours." Ch. iv. 26, 27, cf. Heb. xii. 13. Ch. vi. 8, the bee. Ch. xxvi. 11, cf. 2 Pet. ii. 22. Ch. xxvii. 16 in this version styles Boreas euphemistically epidexios.

In the New Testament the book is quoted some twenty times by St Paul and in the Catholic Epistles, and again in Heb. xii. and Rev. iii., mostly according to the Septuagint, the citation in Rom. xii. 20, "If thine enemy hunger, &c.," the two citations of Prov. x. 12, and the predominant use of ch. iii., being especially noteworthy. Nothing is cited as Solomon's, but we read in the Gospel of his glory and his wisdom. According as Wisdom is to be regarded as a "master workman" or a "nursling" in Prov. viii. 30, we may see an embodiment of the thought in St John i. 3 or 18. Prov. viii. 22 was much contested in the Arian controversy.

Ecclesiastes (Sept.) is in Hebrew Koheleth (Aq. koleteth), a title of somewhat doubtful meaning, although clearly akin to a word meaning assembly. Wiclif explains it as "talker to the puple or togidere clepere." Our rendering Preacher (Luth. Prediger) comes through St Jerome's Concionator. The word being of the feminine form, some think that it denotes Wisdom personified, who harangues the assembled people (Prov. i. 20, viii. 1); but compare the masculine Sophereth in Neh. vii. 57 and Ezra ii. 55. The Midrash explains that Solomon was called Koheleth because "his words were spoken in the assembly" (1 Kings viii. 1, 2). A Jewish commentator of unknown name and date is said by Aben Ezra (1092-1167 A.D.) to have resolved the Preacher into an "assembly" of the disciples of Solomon, who spake "each according to his opinion." Ecclesiastes, like Job, has a Prologue and an Epilogue, the body of the work being made up of reflexions on the primary problems of life as they present themselves to the critical observer. These are all attributed to one and the same "Preacher," whose varying moods have led some to postulate a diversity of thinkers.

Ch. i. 1-11. The Prologue. "The words of the Preacher, the son of David, king in Jerusalem. Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher...all is vanity...there is no new thing under the sun" (ver. 1, 2, 9). He reflects upon the eternal routine of Nature and the transitoriness of men.

Ch. i. 12-xii. 8. "I the Preacher was king over Israel in Jerusalem" (i. 12). He claims to have had greater wisdom and magnificence than all that were before him in Jerusalem (i. 16, ii. 9). He resolves to compare wisdom with "madness and folly," and finds only that "in much wisdom is much grief" (i. 17, 18). Wisdom may excel folly, but the wise and the fool come to the same end: this also is vanity (ii. 13-17). The doctrine of opportuneness in ch. iii. is a salient feature of the book. "To everything there is a season." God saw His work and pronounced it very good: the Preacher saw that He had made everything "beautiful in its season," and had set "the world" in men's heart without their being able to understand His work in its entirety. Their large capacity of enjoyment in their limited sphere is the gift of God (iii. 13, v. 18). Failures of justice "under the sun" raise the hope of a judgement to come in its season. Yet "who knoweth the spirit of man?" (iii. 21). Does it go upward or is it like the spirit of the beasts that perish? This verse is much disputed, but it shews at least that the question of a future life was in the thought of the writer. Perhaps after all the fool who "foldeth his hands" is wiser in his generation than the most successful toiler (iv. 4-8). But there is unwisdom in hasty pronouncements, "for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth" (v. 2), and what is amiss may be the necessary outcome (as we should say) of "second causes," the supreme power not dealing directly with the individual subject (v. 8). In the latter part of the book, while the old threads are taken up from time to time, there is less of sustained speculation and more of simple proverbial philosophy, as ch. vii. 1, "Good is a name [Prov. xxii. 1] more than good oil"—with a play on shem, shemen; ch. viii. 4, of a king, "who may say unto him, What doest thou?" (Job ix. 12); ch. ix. 4, "A living dog is better than a dead lion"; ch. x. 1, "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour"; ch. xi. 1, "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." The section ch. xii. 1-7 teaches, "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth"; and it describes the closing scene of life in a highly poetical passage, which seems to convey a sense by the mere music of its words, although its interpreters are as little in harmony as the expounders of the Song of Songs. The majority, resting upon a Rabbinic tradition, find in the whole a more or less complete anatomy of the human frame. But the recurrent "or ever" (ver. 1, 2, 6) divides it into three subsections, the first literal, the second and third partly figurative: the third, ver. 6, 7, consists of figures and their interpretation, and the parallelism suggests that the second should be divided in like manner, namely, at ver. 3, "In the day when." The same formula marks the transition from a like figure to its interpretation in Isaiah xxx. 26. With the bird, the millstone and other details of this subsection compare Rev. xviii. 2, 22, &c. "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, all is vanity" (ver. 8).

Ch. xii. 9-14. The Epilogue. The Preacher "set in order many proverbs." The conclusion of the whole matter is, "Fear God, and keep his commandments." God will bring everything into judgement, "whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Notwithstanding that the epilogue is uniform in style with the rest of the work, it is sometimes assumed to be by a later writer, either to save the Solomonic authorship, or because it consists of "words of Torah," which do not harmonize with the supposed final conclusion, that "all is vanity." Would the book have been ascribed to its traditional author if this had been its last word?

Although Koheleth has all the features of the historical Solomon—king, man of pleasure, wisest of men, poet and paræmiast, it may be doubted whether the book really claims him as its author. We must agree with Rashbam (1085-1155 A.D.) that the epilogue, which sums up in editorial style, was written of and not by him; and we may think that the Preacher's own announcement that he had been "king over Israel in Jerusalem" (ch. i. 12) bewrays one who looked back after the division of the kingdom to the son of David's reign in the southern metropolis "over all Israel" (1 Kings xi. 42). There are also in the book sayings on the powers that be which would come more naturally from one of the misgoverned than from a ruler; and some things, as his fair trial of "madness and folly" (ch. i. 17), which make it doubtful whether the speaker is intended to be any real person at all. The Babylonian Talmud (Baba Bathra 15 a) says that "Hezekiah and his company [Prov. xxv.

11 wrote Isaiah, Proverbs, Song of Songs, Koheleth."

Ecclesiastes has been assigned to various periods, from Solomon to Herod the Great. The apocryphal Wisdom of Solomon, which has been called Anti-Ecclesiastes, seems to be providing an antidote to its teaching in several places. Compare Eccl. iv. 2, "I praised the dead, &c.": Wisd. i. 12, "Seek not death in the error of your life." Wisd. ii. 1, 2, "For they said, reasoning with themselves, but not aright, &c.": Eccl. iii. 19, "the sons of men are a chance, &c." The son of Sirach, on the contrary, apparently copies and imitates it, and we may infer that he included it in "the rest of the books" (Prologue to Ecclesi., or Hagiographa. Thus it falls somewhere between Ecclesiasticus and Proverbs, to which it probably alludes in ch. xii. 9. In style and language it approximates in some respects to the later Hebrew.

The wise would have made Koheleth an apocryphal book on account of its contradictions, chap. vii. 3 (marg.), 9, &c., but that "its beginning is words of Torah and its end words of Torah" (T. E. Shabbath 30 b). The prologue and the epilogue are the inspired writer's orthodox setting of the negative results of the philosophy of his day, and the thought which crowns the whole is that the fear of God is the end, as Solomon had said that it was the beginning (Prov. i. 7, ix. 10), of wisdom.

The Song of Solomon or Canticles is called in Hebrew the Song of Songs. This title is a superlative, like Heaven of Heavens and Holy of Holies, and denotes a song of supreme excellence, and not a song made up of songs as the Bible of books. The work is indeed a mosaic of poetical speeches in which all eyes do not see the same pattern, but the correspondence of its parts points to unity of design, although the book may now be (as has been said) like a lock whose key has been lost. In what consists its excellence? The answer depends upon the interpretation of the Song. Some make it a parable of singular depth and subtlety, and an apocalypse of the future of the Church to the end of the world. Some see in it only a romance in glorification of true love: a shepherdess loves a shepherd, and is wooed by king Solomon, and withstands the temptation to be faithless to her swain. Rabbi Akiba in the Mishnah (Yadain iii. 5) defends and commends the Song in hyperbolic language, and he lays down, with a play upon the form of its title, that all the Scriptures are Holy (lit. holiness), but the Song of Songs is Holy of Holies. The ascription "to Solomon" seems to mean that he is the real or reputed author rather than the subject of the Song. Its abundance of names of plants and animals is in the manner of the royal poet who "spoke of trees" from the cedar to the hyssop and "spoke also of beasts" (1 Kings iv. 33); and it refers to royalty and its paraphernalia in terms which befit the peaceful and prosperous state of Solomon. Some who deny his authorship date the book a bare half century later than his times, while a few bring it down to the third century B.C. These lay stress on some of its peculiarities of diction, which on the other side are explained as provincialisms appropriate to the scene of action. It is disputed whether there are two or three principal characters in the Song, in addition to the chorus of "daughters of Jerusalem" and some occasional interlocutors. According to the following analysis, which (with variations) many adopt, there are three chief speakers, the Shulamite, the shepherd and the king, and the drama is in five acts, three of which end with the adjuration, "... that ye stir not up nor awaken love until it please" (ch. ii. 7, iii. 5, viii. 4).

Ch. i. 1—ii. 7. A Shulamite maiden is brought to the royal residence and put in charge of the "daughters of Jerusalem" or court ladies. She longs for her shepherd lover and repels the advances of the king. She adjures the court ladies not to tempt her to love another.

Ch. ii. 8—iii. 5. She describes a past visit from the shepherd in her home; and a recent dream that she had sought and found him. She adjures the court ladies as before.

Ch. iii. 6—v. 1. Solomon in all his glory seeks to win the heart of the Shulamite. The shepherd's real or imagined offer to rescue his betrothed from her extreme peril: "Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse... from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards." He praises her charms and her constancy.

Ch. v. 2—viii. 4. Dream of the Shulamite, in which she seeks but fails to find her vanished lover. She describes the person of her beloved. The king flatters her, but all her desire is for the shepherd, whom she calls upon to return with her to their native place. She adjures the court ladies as before.

Ch. viii. 5—14. The return home. The divine flame of love. The reward of constancy.

To all this it has been objected that "Solomon" would not have celebrated his discomfiture by a rustic rival in a "song of songs," and that some words in the Song, the call "from Lebanon" for instance, are more naturally ascribed to the king, himself the accepted suitor, and called by a figure of speech a shepherd, than, as above, to a shepherd distinct from him. Dividing the fourth "act" at ch. vi. 10, we may say that the Song consists of a first part, of 62 verses, with subsections commencing at ch. i. 1, ii. 8, iii. 6, and a second part, of 55 verses, with subsections commencing at ch. v. 2, vi. 10, viii. 5. The first part describes the arrival of Solomon as the bridegroom in his nuptial crown (ch. iii. 11). With the king's call to the Shulamite in this part, "With me from Lebanon [to Jerusalem], &c." (ch. iv. 8), compare hers to him in the second part, "Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field, &c." (ch. vii. 11, viii. 2). His love would raise her to a higher life, "Forget thy people and thy father's house" (Ps. xlv. 10): she would have him condescend to her low estate.

There are many other such correspondences between the two parts which the reader will note for himself or find pointed out in commentaries. If the resemblance of "Shulamith" (Shulamite) to "Shelomith," the feminine of Solomon, was designed, this favours the latter view of the plot; but neither way of distributing the parts is without its difficulties. Some, taking the Song to be an epithalamium on the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter (ch. vii. 3, Sept. Aminadab), divide it into seven parts, corresponding to the supposed seven days of the festivities. Some see in it the three characters, Solomon, the Shulamite, and Pharaoh's daughter.

Much of the obscurity of the book is owing to the impossibility of deciding absolutely to what speakers some things in it are to be assigned. Thus in ch. vi. 13 is it Solomon that says, "Return, return, O Shulamite," or the chorus? According to one opinion, they call her back: she asks what they want to see in her: they say, "A dance of Mahanaim": she dances, and they (not Solomon) describe her from foot to head, ending with "a king is bound in thy tresses" (ch. vii. 5). Then the king speaks down to ver. 9a, and the bride breaks in at the words "best wine": she confesses herself his absolutely—notice the climax ii. 16, vi. 3, vii. 10, and invites him to her home, "Come, my beloved, &c." (ch. vii. 11).

The Song culminates in her apotheosis of love in ch. viii. 6, 7, "...the flashes thereof are flashes of fire, a very flame of the Lord.... if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly condemned." Compare St John's "Love is of God...God is love." A man may give his all and not have love (1 Cor. xiii. 3).

The Church is thought of in Eph. v. 25—27 as the destined bride, "not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." The realism of the picture is remarkable and of a piece with descriptions in the Song, from ch. iv. 7 of which the Apostle may have borrowed his phrase "not having spot." Ch. vii. 11, "Come, my beloved," may be referred to in Rev. xxii. 17, a curious reading of which is mentioned in the Speaker's Commentary on the Song, "Sponsus [ch. iv. 8] et Sponsa [vii. 11] dicunt, Veni."

The numerous interpretations of the Song fall into two classes, according as the love described is regarded as simply human or as a symbol of the love of Jehovah and the congregation of Israel, which in the New Testament becomes the love of Christ and the Church. This theory may of course be held without the extravagances with which so many commentators have invested it. Of literal interpreters some have stigmatized the Song as unworthy of a place among canonical books, while many pronounce its theme a most fit one for the pen of a sacred writer. But, whatever it may have meant to its author, it does not appear that it was eventually enrolled among the books of Holy Scripture on the ground of its literal sense. If those who explained away the objections to it (Aboth de R. N., cap. i.) were of one mind with Rabbi Akiba, they must have seen more in it than a secular "Song of loves" (Ps. xlv. 1). A history of its interpretations in the Synagogue is given by Salfeld in the Magazin für die Wiss. des Judenthums, Jahrg. v. and vi. (1878—79).

THE PROPHETICAL BOOKS. BY THE REV. A. B. DAVIDSON, D.D., PROFESSOR OF HEBREW, NEW COLLEGE, EDINBURGH.

Isaiah, son of Amoz, a prophet of Judah, of whom personally little is known beyond the fact that he lived in the capital, was married (viii. 3) and the father of several children (vii. 3; viii. 1—4; cf. v. 18), prophesied from the last year of Uzziah (vi. 1) at least till the invasion of Sennacherib, a period of 40 years (cf. 740—701), living possibly into the reign of Manasseh (2 Chr. xxvi. 22; xxxii. 32), by whom according to a tradition (in Justin and apocryphal "Ascension of Isaiah") he was "sawn asunder" (cf. Heb. xi. 37). He rose to great influence at the court of Hezekiah (xxxvii. 1 seq.), was the fear of the political parties of his day (xxix. 15; xxx. 1, 2), and, though eschewing all means of influence beyond the word of prophecy, was the most commanding figure in Jewish politics for nearly half-a-century.

The book has two divisions: ch. i.—xxxix., prophecies belonging to a great variety of occasions, and ch. xl.—lxvi., a book in the main homogeneous. The chronological arrangement in i.—xxxix. has been disturbed by throwing the prophecies against foreign nations (xv.—xxiii.) together, as in Jer. and Ezek., with which an oracle against Babylon (xiii., xiv.; cf. xxi. 1—10) and a great prophecy of the general judgement on the world (xxiv.—xxvii.) have been connected, though probably due to later prophets. 1. Ch. vi., inaugural vision. 1, vision of the Lord, the King, God alone, surrounded by servants who serve Him (1—4). 2, reaction of vision on the prophet's mind; his feeling of uncleanness and fear of death; his sin purged (5—7). 3, lifted thus into sympathy with the great King and those around Him, he is sent on a mission to Israel, to announce impending judgements till the people be reduced to a "remnant," which shall become the root of a new nation (8—13). This passage, containing the thought of what Jehovah is, what the people are, and what must be the issue, expresses all the prophet's great conceptions. 11. Ch. ii.—iv., v., prophecies between his call and the outbreak of Syro-Ephraimitic war (739—735), containing allusions to early reign of Ahaz (iii. 12). 1, ii. 1-4, a former prophet has said that Zion shall be the religious centre of the world, and Jehovah God of all men. 2, ch. ii. 5-iv. 1, ere then purifying judgements must fall on Israel, because of their idolatry (ii. 8), pride (ii. 11; iii. 16), and oppressions (iii. 14, 15). The "day of the Lord" shall be on all that is proud and lofty, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day (ii. 11, 17). 3, iv. 2-6, when these judgements are overpast they that remain in Zion shall be holy. Ch. v. may be somewhat later. III. Ch. vii.-ix. 7, ch. xvii., prophecies during Syro-Eph. war, and first operations of the Assyrians, called in by Ahaz. Ch. vii.-ix. 7 contain references to deportation of northern tribes by Tiglath Pileser in 734 (ix. 1, 2), while xvii. is anterior to fall of Damascus (732). Ch. vi. appears as preface to this group, which contains the great Messianic prophecies of Immanuel and the "Son given," the Prince of Peace (with viii. 9, 10 comp. xvii. 12-14). IV. Prophecies of the second Assyrian period (Shalmaneser 727-722, Sargon 722-705), ix. 8-x. 4 after the northern deportation; xxviii. before the fall of Samaria (722); x. 5-xii. and probably xiv. 24-27 after its destruction; xx. when Sargon's army was before Ashdod (711). To this group belongs the Messianic prophecy of the "rod out of the stem of Jesse" (xi.). V. Prophecies of the third Assyrian period, invasion of Sennacherib (704-701); xiv. 28-32 on death of Sargon; xxix.-xxxii. during earlier operations of Senn.; i. ? xlii. xxxiii. xxxvii. somewhat later. To this period probably belong the prophecies against the nations: xv. xvi. revival of an older prophecy against Moab; xviii. Ethiopia; xix. Egypt; xxi. 11-17 Edom and Arab tribes; xxiii. Tyre. These also contain lofty Messianic hopes (xviii. 7; xix. 18-25; xxiii. 15-18). To the book thus composed have been added an oracle against Edom (xxxiv. xxxv.), probably of the Exile period, and the historical appendix on the invasion of Sennacherib (xxxvi.-xxxix. = 2 K. xviii. 13 seq.).

The prophecies of Is. form the most powerful and splendid literature in the Bible, particularly xxviii.-xxxiii., which are unexampled for grandeur, music, and the softness of idyllic peace. Some aspects of his teaching: 1, the God of Israel is Jehovah the King, the holy universal sovereign (vi. 5), the revelation of whose majesty will shake terribly the earth (ii. 19, 21). 2, consequently sin is pride of heart, rebellion that "provokes the eyes of His glory" (iii. 8). He has "a day" against all that is proud, and it shall be brought low (ii. 12-iii. 9; v. 15, 16; cf. iii. 16, the haughty women; ix. 9, Samaria; x. 12, 13, heart of king of Assyria). Idolatry and spiritual deadness are insensibility to His holy majesty (vi. 9, 10; xxix. 9, 12). 3, therefore also true religion is faith in the great and holy King ("if ye will not believe, ye shall not be established," vii. 9; "the Egyptians are men, not God," xxxi. 1-3; cf. viii. 9, 10, 13, 17; x. 20, 21; xvii. 7; xxx. 15). 4, the holy King is a fire which must consume (iv. 4; xxxiii. 13-16); yet the Holy One has become "Holy One of Israel," He dwells in Zion (viii. 18), has founded Zion (xiv. 32), and laid in it a stone (xxviii. 16, symbol of the eternal stability of His kingdom and rule among men), and His judgements will leave a "remnant" which will grow into a new people (i. 3; vi. 13; viii. 18; x. 21; xxx. 18 seq.; xxxii. 15 seq.; xxxiii. 20 seq.). 5, secure in this faith in the "King," the prophet looks across the raging floods of the nations with serenity (viii. 7-10; x. 16-19, 33, 34; xvii. 12-14; xviii. 3-6; xxix. 5-8; xxx. 27-33), and sees the Kingdom of the Lord rising behind, ruled by the "Prince of Peace," "God with us" (ch. vii.; viii. 21-ix. 7; xxxiii. 20 seq.).

Ch. xl.-lxvi. are now usually ascribed to an unknown prophet of the Exile, on the ground that the scene of the prophecies and the great figures of which the prophet speaks, as Cyrus, the Chaldeans, &c., are those of this period (xl. 2; xliii. 14; xlv. 1, 13; xlvii.-xlviii. 5-7; xlviii. 20; xlix. 14 seq.; li. 3; lxii. 4; lxiv. 9-12). The prophecies are in the main from the pen of one author, contemporary with Cyrus (550-538). The great conception of the prophet is that the Kingdom of the Lord-Israel's restoration and the evangelizing of the world-is at hand. The external event with which this conception is connected is the restoration from exile by Cyrus, but this event is but a nucleus around which vast religious anticipations cluster, and it becomes idealized into a restoration of Israel, which is: 1, universal (xliii. 5-7; xlviii. 20-22; xlix. 17 seq.; lii. 1 seq.; lv. 12, &c.); and 2, final and the inauguration of Israel's eternal glory (xl. 10, 11; xlv. 3; xlv. 17; ch. lx.); and 3, which is the immediate means to the evangelizing of all nations (xl. 5; xlii. 9-12; xlv. 1-6; lx.). It is in truth the Lord Himself who brings in His kingdom, which is but the revelation of His glory, His sole Godhead, to all flesh (xl. 5; xlii. 8), and the guarantee of its coming is just His being God alone, a true God and a Saviour (xlv. 5, 6, 18, 21-23), but He uses agents: 1, Cyrus, whose operations facilitate the rise of the kingdom externally, first by destroying Babylon, the idolatrous world, and for ever discrediting the idols (xliii. 14; xlv. 21-xlv. 9, 16); and secondly, by freeing captive Israel and building Jerusalem and the temple (xlv. 23; xlv. 13). And 2, the Servant of the Lord, who brings in the kingdom on its spiritual side, first, by having borne the sins of the people (xl. 2; ch. liii.), one condition of their restoration; secondly, by awakening the faith and spiritual life in the scattered tribes, which is another condition (xlii. 5-8; xlix. 8-12; i. 5-10; lxi. 1-6); and thirdly, in being through Israel, thus restored, the light of the nations (xlii. 1-6; xlix. 1-6; ch. lx.). I. Ch. xl.-xlviii., first sketch of the inbringing of the kingdom, more on its external side: the great agents, Jehovah, God alone (xl. 12-31; ch. li. 7, 21-29; xliii. 8-13, &c.); the Servant (xlii.); Cyrus (xlv.); the downfall of Babylon (xlv.); the redemption of Israel (xlviii. 20-22); the forgiveness of the people's sin (xlii. 26; xlv.

22), and the joy of creation (xlii. 10-12; xlv. 23). II. Ch. xlix.—lxii., a duplicate of xl.—xlviii., describing the same thing more on its internal side; the atoning of the people's sin (liii.), the exaltation of the Servant and restoration of Zion (xlix.) and Zion's final glory (liv.—lx.). III. Ch. lxiii.—lxvi., prophecies more miscellaneous. Opinions differ as to the "Servant," but all are at one in believing that the prophet's conceptions of the Servant's mind and work found fulfilment in Jesus Christ.

Jeremiah, born of a priestly family in Anathoth, now Anata, a small place a little N. of Jerusalem, from ancient times a priestly domain (1 K. ii. 26), and where his family owned land (ch. xxiii. 8), prophesied from the 13th year of Josiah (i. 2) till after the Exile (xxxix.—xlv.), a period of more than 40 years (B.C. 626—586). Called young (i. 6), his reputation rose slowly; though already 5 years in office at the finding of the Book of the Law (2 K. xxii. 8), and the Reform of Josiah (621), he seems to have had no hand in these transactions (ch. xi. is not earlier than Jehoiakim), with regard to which he appears to have cherished no illusions. But from the death of Josiah (608) till his own in Egypt, though wielding only the word of prophecy, he was a prominent figure in all the history of that tragic period. Though not without the occasional sympathy of the Elders (xxvi. 17) and the lower classes (xxxviii. 7), he had to stem almost alone the tide of idolatry and immorality, of self-deception founded on superficial reforms (iii. 4-5; vii. 8-10) and of fanatical confidence in Jehovah's protection, in which all classes were carried away. His life was a continual struggle with the ruling orders and the people, in which he was subjected to cruel and bitter insults by the temple priests (xx. 2) and other officials (xxxvii. 13), and was often in danger of his life from the mob (xxvi. 8, 9), his townsmen and kindred at Anathoth (xi. 19), the frivolous and cruel (xxii. 13; xxxvi. 23; xxvi. 20), king Jehoiakim (xxxvi. 19), and the military of the day (xxxviii. 4). The strife, so alien to his nature, wearied him: he longed for a lodge in the wilderness (ix. 2), mourned the perpetual conflict in which his life was passed (ch. x. 10), cursed the day of his birth (xx. 14), bitterly lamented that he had allowed himself to be enticed to become a prophet (xx. 7; cf. i. 4-10), and resolved to have done with the "word of the Lord"—but in vain. His "word" was in his heart like a fire shut up in his bones, and he must declare it (xx. 9). Though he crossed every inclination and resisted every project of the princes and people, their secret conscience was often on his side (xxvi. 19); Zedekiah was disposed to listen to him (xxi.; xxxviii. 14-28), and did what he could to mitigate his sufferings (xxxvii. 16-21; xxxviii. 10), but was too conscious of being in the hands of stronger men to act according to his own impulse (xxxviii. 5); and the wretched exiles, though they rejected his counsels under the pretext that they were the suggestions of Baruch (xlii.

1-3), insisted on dragging him with them as a kind of fetish to Egypt (xliii. 6), where according to tradition (of little worth however) they ended by stoning him to death.

According to ch. xxxvi. Jer. unable to speak in public (possibly owing to the incidents ch. xix. xx.) dictated to Baruch in 4th year of Jehoiakim (604) the substance of the prophetic discourses of the past 22 years, with directions to read the roll in the hearing of the people. This being done next year, the roll was brought to the king, who after hearing it, cut it in pieces and threw it into the fire. Whereupon Jer. dictated it anew to Baruch, enlarging it with great additions (xxxvi. 32). This 2nd ed. formed the nucleus of our present book, and contained probably ch. i.—xx. in the main, xxv. with parts of xlv.—xlix., perhaps xlv., and the historical sections relating to reign of Jehoiakim, xxvi., xxxvi., if these were written so early. To this were added afterwards prophecies of the reign of Zedekiah, and historical sections relating to the capture of the city and succeeding events. The order of the book is in the main chronological, though this order is disturbed in two ways: some historical sections being disjoined from the discourses to which they refer (xxvi.; xxxvi.), possibly because written later; and some passages, having a common subject, though of different dates, being thrown together (e.g. xxii.: xxiii. relating to rulers). I. Prophecies of reign of Josiah (626—608), ch. i.—vi. II. Prophecies under Jehoiakim (608—597), ch. vii.—xx., though perhaps some parts may be of brief reign of Jehoiachin (597), e.g. xiii. 18 seq. To vii. the historical commentary is xxvi., and xxxvi. should probably be read after xix., xx. Ch. xxxv. narrates an incident probably of the last days of Jehoiakim. III. Prophecies under Zedekiah (597—586), ch. xxi.—xxxviii., divisible into several groups. (a) ch. xxi.—xxiii., on pastors or rulers of the people, with promise of the king Messiah (xxiii. 1-6); ch. xxiv., on exiles carried away with Jehoiachin. (b) ch. xxvi.—xxix., on the false prophets (cf. xxiii. 9 seq.), containing the prophet's letter to the exiles in Babylon, warning against the prophets there (xxix.). (c) ch. xxx.—xxxiii., prophecies of the Restoration of Israel and the New Covenant (xxxi. 31), containing story of the prophet's buying a field, shewing the firmness of his faith in the people's restitution (xxxii.). (d) ch. xxxiv.—xxxviii., narratives of the treatment of the prophet and other events during the last times of the siege. IV. Ch. xxxix.—xlv., the prophet's history and other events after the fall of the city. V. Ch. xlv.—li., prophecies against foreign nations; and finally historical conclusion of the book, ch. lii.—(= 2 K. xxiv. 18—xxv. 30). The present place of xlv.—li. is hardly original; if the book took shape under the hands of Baruch ch. xlv. would naturally close it. Ch. i., li. in their present form at least are later than Jer., and other chapters of the group seem to have been amplified; and probably ch. xlv.—li. formed a distinct collection or whose place in the book fluctuated (in LXX. it stands after ch. xxv. 18).

A chief thought of the prophet is the purely ethical nature of Jehovah, and consequently the inwardness of His relation to the mind of His servants. Illustrations of this are these points: 1, his condemnation of the whole past religious history of the nation; it has been no service of Jehovah (ii. 1; iii. 1; vi. 1). 2, futility of external service, and material symbols, sacrifices, ark, temple (vii. 21-28; vii. 9-11; iii. 16-18). 3, inadequacy of the superficial reforms on which the people prided themselves (ii. 23; iii. 4, 5, 10; vii. 8-11); not reform, but regeneration, is required ("sow not among thorns" iv. 3; cf. references to the "heart," iv. 4, 14; v. 23; xi. 20; xvii. 9; xxxi. 33, &c.). 4, consequent elevation of the individual as the subject of Jehovah's fellowship, and demand for morality (v. 1, 7, 26-28; ix. 1-6; ch. xviii.). 5, hence his conception of prophecy as a "standing in the counsel of the Lord," a relation of mind to mind, and his scorn of the "dreams" of the false prophets (xxiii. 21-32). The verification of prophecy lies in the consciousness of the true prophet, and in the stringent moral nature of the prophecy; it is only prophecies of "peace" that require justification by the event (xxviii. 7-9). 6, hence, finally, the calmness with which Jer. contemplates the ruin of the state, buys a field on the eve of the city's fall (xxiii.), and counsels submission to Babylon (xxi. 9; xxix. 1-7; xxxviii. 17). Though the state falls, Jehovah remains, and religion remains in the life of the individual. And so his view of the nature of the New Covenant: the Lord writes it on the heart of the individual, and prophetic teaching ceases in that new age (xxxii. 33).

The Book of Lamentations or Dirges over the fall of Jerusalem and the nation is one of the 5 Megilloth (rolls) used for special anniversaries, being read on the 9th of Ab, the day of the destruction of the temple. The poems are acrostic, ch. i. ii. iv. having each 22 verses beginning with the successive letters of the alphabet; ch. iii. 66 short verses, every three beginning each with one letter; while ch. v. though not alphabetical has also 22 verses. The dirge measure is a line divided unequally by cesura, the latter or shorter half having an elegiac cadence—

How doth the city sit solitary—that was full of people!

She is become like a widow—that was great among the nations!

The princess among the countries—is made tributary.

(Ch. i., general description of desolation and exile. The poet speaks, vv. 1-11. The once-joyous city sits solitary, weeping all the night, with none to comfort her, for her lovers (allied nations) have turned against her (1, 2); her people have sought refuge among the nations, but find no rest; her enemies are become the head, because of her sin; they have seen her filthiness and despise her; the nations have entered her holy sanctuaries (3-11).

In 12-22 Zion herself appeals to mankind whether any sorrow be like her sorrow which the Lord has brought on her (12-17). He is just; yet her afflictions are unparalleled (18-22). Ch. ii., more particular enumeration of the successive strokes inflicted by the Lord: the ruin of city and temple, and all the habitations of Jacob (1, 2), the fenced cities, the army (3-5), even the place of His own abode, where He has made assembly and sabbath to be forgotten; there is no more prophetic vision (6-10). 2, the poet is overcome when he recalls the terrible days of the siege, when the famished children died in their mothers' bosoms (11, 12); Zion's fate is without a parallel, and due to the unfaithfulness of her prophets (13, 14); she is become a mockery among the nations (15-17). 3, let her present without ceasing before the Lord the unexampled strokes He has inflicted: have women anywhere eaten their own fruit? has the blood of priests been shed in the very sanctuary of the Lord? (18-22). Ch. iii. has greater literary art. The speaker is "the man who has seen affliction by the rod of the Lord's wrath." 1, he narrates the severe divine dealing with him, greatly after the manner of Job (1-19). 2, he falls into a strain of reflective meditation and weighing of considerations, marked by sense of sin and inextinguishable hope in the Lord's mercy, which has hardly a parallel in Scripture, towards the end of which he identifies himself with the people (20-51). 3, he returns to his afflictions, figuratively called "waters" and a "pit," and calls for the requital of his adversaries (62-66). The "man" is no individual person, but the personification either of the people of the Lord, or of the godly among them. Ch. iv., the most graphic and circumstantial of all, is occupied with the last days of the siege. 1, the terrible sufferings of the children and cruel insensibility of parents under the famine (1-6); the blackened, shrivelled forms of the hunger-stricken nobles (7-10)—surely a judgement more awful than that of Sodom. 2, it would have seemed incredible to the nations, but is due to the sins of prophets and priests (11, 12); the scenes of blood and horror enacted by them in the streets of the city (13-16). 3, last days: vain expectation of help from Egypt (17); the enemy's engines command the streets (18); flight and capture of the king (19, 20). Reflection that Zion's sin is expiated; the cup shall pass to Edom (21, 22). Ch. v., condition of the people after the fall of the city; ending with the cry, Will the Lord forget us for ever?

This beautiful little book is very instructive, e.g. in regard to the scenes in the city during the siege and the feelings of the people (ch. iv.); the profound impression made by the destruction of the city and temple, Jehovah's own place of abode, by His own hand, and His withdrawal of all revelation (i. 2); ii. 1-11; iii. 42-44; iv. 12); the feeling of sin awakened by it (i. 8-10, 14, 18; ii. 14; iii. 42; iv. 13); and the deep sense of national humiliation (i. 21; ii. 15-17; iii. 46), reappearing often in Job and Is. xl.-lxvi. The date must be some years after the fall of the city (of which the author was an eyewitness) though anterior to any movements of the nations against Babylon. Little can be urged against the belief that the whole is from one pen: unlike i. ii. iv. ch. iii. does not begin with How!, and the speaker is not Zion as elsewhere. Ch. v. is not alphabetical, has less poetical power, and might be later, though "for ever" (v. 20) cannot be much urged for this (Ps. xiii. 1), nor the ascription of present calamities to the sins of a former generation (v. 7; cf. Ezek. xviii. 2). The tradition of Jeremiah's authorship arose probably from taking "pit" (iii. 53) literally, then assuming him to be the speaker in ch. iii., and finally ascribing the whole to him. Against his authorship is: 1, ref. to failure of prophecy (ii. 9); 2, the term "breath of our nostrils" applied to Zedekiah, and the hope of living under him in exile (iv. 20)—altogether unlike his attitude (xxi. 9; xxxviii. 17); 3, the hope of help from Egypt (iv. 17)—contrary to his conviction (xxxviii. 7–10); 4, the condition of ch. v. does not reflect the treatment of Jer. by the Chaldeans (xl. 4). 5, the language is unique and quite different from that of Jeremiah.

Ezekiel, son of Buzi, a priest of the family of Zadok, was one of the captives carried away by Nebuchadnezzar along with Jehoiachin (597). With his compatriots he was settled at Tel Abib on the Chebar, probably some affluent of the Euphrates in Babylonia, not the Chabor at Circesium. Here he had a house (viii. 1), and was possibly married (xxiv. 18). He prophesied from the 5th (i. 2) at least to the 27th year of Jehoiachin's captivity (xxix. 17), a period of 22 years (592–570), though few details of his life are furnished. The book has three great divisions: first, ch. i.–xxiv., prophecies of judgement against Jerusalem and the nation, foreshewing their inevitable ruin; second, ch. xxv.–xxxix., prophecies of restoration, in two parts: ch. xxv.–xxxii., against the nations, Israel's enemies, and ch. xxxiii.–xxxix., special prophecies of the people's restitution; third, ch. xl.–xlviii., an appendix, virtually falling under second division, being visions of the reconstruction of the temple, the worship and the nation. Ch. i.–xxxix. are similar in manner and contents to other prophetic literature; ch. xl.–xlviii. are unique in prophecy.

First part, ch. i.–xxiv. I. ch. i.–iii., the prophet's call. 1, vision of his God who sends him (i.). 2, his mission to Israel as a prophet (ii. 1–7); act of eating a book, symbol of his inspiration (ii. 8–iii. 9); he goes to the exiles, receiving a clearer view of his mission, viz. to be a watchman to warn every individual soul (iii. 10–21). 3, command to abstain for a time (cf. xxiv. 27; xxxiii. 22) from public preaching (iii. 22–27). II. Ch. iv.–vii., symbols of destruction of city and nation. 1, ch. iv., symbols of siege, famine, and bearing of iniquity in exile (for 390 days, v. 5, LXX. reads 190). 2, ch. v., against the inhabitants. 3, ch. vi., against the whole idolatrous land. 4, ch. vii., dirge over the nation's downfall. III. Ch. viii.–xi., more precise predictions and symbols of the destruction of the city at the Lord's hand, because of the idolatrous pollution of His house. 1, ch. viii., the multiplied idolatries in the temple. 2, ch. ix., divine agents slay the inhabitants. 3, ch. x., fire from God falls upon the city. 4, ch. xi., the Lord's withdrawal from the place of His abode. IV. Ch. xii.–xix., the same theme of the nation's ruin, partly in the form of answers to objections that unbelief might raise. 1, ch. xii. 1–20, symbol of the king's secret flight and capture. 2, ch. xii. 21–28, the popular delusion that prophecies failed or referred to the distant future shall receive a speedy and terrible refutation. 3, ch. xiii., xiv., those vain hopes are fostered by the false prophets, who shall perish along with those whom they deceive. 4, ch. xv., shall the Lord destroy the nation of Israel? Israel among the nations is like the vine-branch among the trees; what is it good for? Above all, what is it good for now when half-burnt in the fire? Only to be flung into the fire and utterly consumed. 5, ch. xvi., the Lord's unchanging grace, and Jerusalem's persistent ingratitude and unfaithfulness. 6, ch. xvii., Zedekiah's perfidy against the king of Babylon shall be punished. 7, ch. xviii., not for the sins of the fathers, but for their own shall the people perish; the righteous shall live in his righteousness, and the sinner die in his sin; let each soul repent and live. 8, ch. xix., dirge over Judah and her royal house. V. Ch. xx.–xxiv. 1, ch. xx., not for Israel's sake, but for His name's sake, that He might be known by the nations to be God, has the Lord spared Israel all through her history. 2, ch. xxi., the sword of the Lord whetted against Jerusalem. 3, ch. xxii., Jerusalem's aggravated sins. 4, ch. xxiii., the life-history of the two adulterous women, Oholah and Oholibah (Samaria and Jerusalem). 5, ch. xxiv., a rusted caldron set on the coals—final symbol of Jerusalem's destruction and purification.

Second part, ch. xxv.–xxxix., prophecies of restitution. I. Ch. xxv.–xxxii., against the nations, Israel's adversaries. 1, the small nations around Israel, who have helped and rejoiced in her destruction (xxv.). 2, Tyre and Sidon, which shall no more be a thorn (xxvi.–xxviii.); 3, Egypt, which shall no longer be a delusive stay (xxix.–xxxii.). II. Ch. xxxiii.–xxxix., strict prophecies of restoration. 1, the prophet's place in the restoration: he is a watchman to warn each soul, that by repentance and righteousness it may live, and thus a new nation arise (xxxiii.). 2, a new ruler, "my servant David" (Messiah), shall take the place of the former evil shepherds, and feed the flock for ever (xxxiv.). 3, the land, rescued from the grasp of Edom and the nations who have usurped it, shall be Israel's for ever; it shall be luxuriant in fertility and teem with people (xxxv.–xxxvi.). 4, the people, scattered among all nations and dead, like dry bones in the valley, shall be reawakened into life and restored; Ephraim and Judah, no more divided, shall have one King for ever (xxxvii.). 5, it shall be inviolable; final attack of the distant nations, Gog and his followers, upon the restored community; their destruction by the Lord, who shall be recognised by the world to be God alone (xxxviii.—xxxix.).

Third part, ch. xl.—xlviii., visions (seen in the year 572) of the reconstructed temple (xl.—xlii.); the return of the Lord to His house (xliii. 1—12); the altar (v. 13—27). The prince, priests and Levites, with their revenues and duties (xlv.—xlvii.); the boundaries of the land and settlement of the tribes (xlvii., xlviii.). Some have concluded from the differences between Ezek. and the Levitical legislation that the latter is more recent. The distinction between priests and Levites, and the limitation of the latter to subordinate services, receive a historical explanation—the Levites are the former priests of the high-places degraded for their idolatries (xlv. 9—14).

The orderly plan of the book suggests that it was finally put together at a late period, though reposing on oral discourses delivered from time to time (viii. 1; xi. 25; xiv. 1), the tone of i.—xxiv., in which Israel is a "rebellious house," differing from that in xxv. seq., in which the Lord speaks of Isr. as "my people," "my flock." The prevailing symbolism of the book is of two kinds: ideal symbols, always gigantic and often beautiful, as Tyre under the figure of a gallant ship; Egypt as the crocodile; Babylon as a great speckled eagle; Judah and her royal dynasty as a mother lioness with whelps; Samaria and Jerusalem as unfaithful women doting on lovers; and secondly, symbolical actions (iv. v.; xii., &c.). Many of the latter can hardly have been actually performed (iv. 4; v. 1; xxi. 19; cf. xx. 49; xxiv. 3); and the ecstasies and visions to which Ezek. was subject have received much amplification and literary adornment (i. xl. seq.). Ezek. adopts and expands many of the thoughts of Jer., as was natural in one who had heard the latter prophet from a child. 1, he differs from Jer. and older prophets (Jer. ii. 2, 3; Hos. ix. 10; Is. i. 21) in pushing Israel's idolatries back into the wilderness, and even into Egypt (xx. 7, 8; xxiii. 3, 8). 2, he amplifies Jer.'s doctrine of the individual's responsibility and freedom, in answer to a feeling of the people that they suffered for the sins of their fathers, and were under a ban which no repentance or righteousness of their own could break (xviii. 2; xxxiii. 10). (1) the individual soul in relation to God is not involved in the sins of the fathers or others; nor (2) is it under a destiny forged by its own past; it possesses a freedom which can morally break with the past (xviii.; xxxiii.). 3, his conception of the consciousness of Jehovah, God alone, and yet, historically and in the eyes of the nations, God of Israel, suggests to him a remarkable philosophy of history (ch. xx.; xvi.; xxiii.; xxxviii.; xxxix.).

xxxvi. 6, 10), rose to eminence among the wise men of Chaldaea (i.; ii.), was made governor of Babylon (ii. 48), and flourished at the court of the Chaldean and Persian kings till 3rd year of Cyrus (x. 1; 605—535). Ezek. commemorates between Noah and Job a Daniel renowned for piety (xiv. 14) and wisdom (xxviii. 3), and among the exiles who returned under Ezra a Daniel is named (Ezra. vii. 2). The book has two divisions: ch. i.—vi., narratives regarding Dan. and his three companions; and ch. vii.—xii., prophetic visions, seen by Dan. and reported in his own name. Ch. ii. 4—vii. 28 is written in Aramaic, and the rest in Heb. Opinions differ as to the nature of the book. 1, the traditional view is that it is historical, and that Dan. of the time of the captivity is the author. 2, others consider it to be of the Maccabean age (after b.c. 170), and to have a practical religious aim, the narratives and visions being free literary forms adopted in order the better to convey the instruction (as Job, Eccles.); 3, while others, though referring its present form to the Macc. age (ch. xi.), suppose it to rest on earlier documents. The book evidently owes its origin to a time when heathenism was pressing hard on Israel, not only by fiery trials, but also by the seductions of its life and thought; and, generally, the book may be said to be a reflection of the mind of pious Israel in its reaction against the heathen world. 1, as to the present—the God of Israel is the true and only wise God, who enlightens and elevates His servants above all men (i.; ii.; iv. v.); who has all power, and both can and will protect those who cleave to Him against nations and kings, even the most powerful (iii. v.; vii.). And 2, as to the future—the advent of His kingdom is assured; preceded by a brief time of great tribulation, it will rise on the ruins of the kingdoms of the world and be universal, all things under the whole heavens being given to the people of the saints of the Most High (ii.; vii.—xii.).

The lessons of i.—vi. are the same, whether they be strict history or free literary creations, as for example, the merit and blessing of keeping oneself pure from the seductive delights of heathenism (i.); the greatness of the God of Israel, God only wise, who gives wisdom to His servants, and whose wonders the heathen have only to know to acknowledge Him (ii. 47); the duty of being true to the God of the fathers at all cost, His power to deliver and the assurance that He will, and the susceptibility of the heathen mind to the impression of the greatness of the God of Israel, to whom homage will be done when His redemption of His servants is seen (iii.), &c. Such lessons, though fitting the Exile, are equally suitable to the trying times of Antiochus Epiphanes (comp. the acts of that tyrant, vii. 20; viii. 9—12, 23—25; ix. 26, 27; xi. 21, 31—33, 38 seq.). The tone of friendliness adopted by the author towards the Chaldean and Persian monarchies (in contrast to the Seleucids) is remarkable (ch. iv.; vi. 13, 18—23).

The prophetic visions, vii.—xii. with ch. ii. These all present under different forms the same idea of a succession of world-monarchies (four in all), of which the last towards its end will severely persecute the saints (i.e. Israel), but shall be brought to an end by the Judgement of God and the advent of His kingdom. Ch. viii., though incomplete, is simplest, and gives the key to the rest. 1, vv. 1—4, a ram with two horns (Medo-Persian dynasty, v. 20), the greater horn coming up last (Cyrus), 2, vv. 5—8, a he-goat with a great horn (Alexander, v. 21), eventually broken and replaced by four others (his four generals, v. 22). 3, vv. 9—12, out of one of them (Syro-Greek, or, Seleucid dynasty) arose a "little horn" which persecuted the saints, abolished sacrifice and profaned the sanctuary (Antiochus Epiphanes). Here the Medo-Persian is one kingdom, the "little horn" is Antiochus, and the tribulation caused by him marks "the time of the end" (viii. 19). Ch. vii. presents the same succession under the symbolism of wild beasts, but completes it at the beginning by naming the first kingdom (Nebuchadnezzar, v. 4), and shews how at the end the world-kingsdoms give place to the kingdom of God (vv. 9—14). The judgement was set and one like a son of man was brought to the Ancient of days, and a dominion universal and eternal was given to Him. The "son of man" here may be a symbol for the people of the saints in contrast to the brute world-kingsdoms (v. 22, 26, 27), it was certainly afterwards interpreted of the personal Messiah. In ch. ii. the colossal man with head of gold, but deteriorating into silver, brass and iron towards the extremities (a brilliant conception, well ascribed to the great mind of Neb.), represents the same fourfold succession. The colossus is smitten and scattered as dust to the winds by a stone cut out without hands (the kingdom of God), which becomes a great mountain and fills the earth. Ch. x.—xii. pursue the same line of thought; the tribulation caused by Antiochus (xi. 21—45) is brought to an end by the salvation of God, accompanied by the Resurrection of the dead (xii. 1—4). In all the visions the perfect kingdom of God rises close behind the great tribulation of Antiochus (as in Is. vii.—ix., xi. the Messiah appears just on the back of the Assyrian devastations), and it is probable that the difficult ch. ix. has the same terminus. The 70 years of Jer. (xxv. 11, 12) are regarded as 70 weeks of years (490 years), divisible into 7, 62 and 1. The second half of the 1 or last 7 (the 3½ years, "time, times and half a time") is the period of tribulation, which immediately precedes the bringing in of "everlasting righteousness." The point from which the computation starts is uncertain, and perhaps strict chronological accuracy is hardly to be sought, as the prophet may operate partly with round numbers.—The book is full of beauty and power, and fitted to console and confirm the people of God under trial, whether from the persecutions or the blandishments of the world.

Hosea, son of Beeri, is the only prophet of the Northern Kingdom who has left written prophecies. Though of unknown birth-place he was certainly a native of the north, from his language ("our king," vii. 5), his familiarity with the country (iv. 15; v. 1; vi. 8; xii. 11), his acquaintance with the morals of the people (ch. ii.; iv. 2; vii. 1; xii. 7), the state of parties (vii. 6; viii. 9; xii. 11), and from the more distant allusions to Judah (iv. 15; v. 5; vi. 11). Part of his prophetic career preceded the death of Jeroboam II. (i. 4), and part fell amidst the revolutionary struggles following his death (749). He probably did not live beyond the accession of Pekah (736), as he makes no allusion to the Syro-Ephraimite war, nor to the deportation of the northern tribes by Tiglath Pileser two years later. Gilead and Mizpah beyond the Jordan are still integral parts of the kingdom (v. 1; vi. 8; xii. 11). Shalman (x. 14), if a king of Assyria, may be Shalmaneser III.; the title "Jareb" given to the king of Assyria is still obscure (v. 13; x. 6).

The book has two parts, ch. i.—iii., and iv.—xiv. Ch. i., iii., with the exposition ch. ii., sketch by means of symbols the future destiny of Israel. Hosea, bidden to take a wife of whoredoms, took Gomer, who bare a son, to be named Jezreel. The name merely recalls the bloody act of Jehu (2 K. x.), and sounds the knell of his house (i. 2—5). Then a daughter was born, Lo-Ruhamah, "Unpitied," meaning that the Lord's mind was alienated from His people (i. 6, 7); and finally a son, Lo-ammi, "not my people," intimating the exile of Israel, and their ceasing for a time to be the people of the Lord (i. 8, 9). This last with the restoration (i. 10—ii. 1) is more fully thrown into symbol, ch. iii. Hosea is bidden "again go love a woman, beloved of a paramour and an adulteress." The woman is the same Gomer, to whom he returns in love, though not for a time in union. The Lord's love shall return to His people, whom He shall keep in long restraint and discipline in exile, to be again redeemed and His people for ever. Ch. ii. is the exposition of this symbolical history: Israel's whoredoms with the Baals (the calf images, no gods, viii. 6), ii. 2—5; her perplexities when "unpitied," 6—13; her exile and discipline in the wilderness, 14—18; the new espousals and obtaining of mercy for ever, 19—23. Ch. iv.—xiv., though belonging to different periods, cannot be dated in particulars. They contain complaints of—1. The immorality and violence everywhere prevailing: adultery and excess in wine (iv. 2; vii. 4, 5), treachery and robbery, in which even the priests engaged (vii. 6; vi. 8), a secular spirit and moral shallowness on which no impression could be made (xii. 7; vii. 2; vi. 1—4). 2. The debased religious conceptions and worship, called "whoredom" and service of Baal, i.e. worship of the calves, with Canaanite rites and conceptions of Jehovah more befitting a nature-god like Baal (ii. 2, 5, 7—13; iv. 13; v. 3). Gross immoralities accompanied this service, in which even the young women took part (iv. 14). The conception of Deity was wholly false, there was no "knowledge of God" in the land (iv. 1); the service was mere sacrifice of flesh and heathenish merry-making (viii. 13; ix. 1); Jehovah desired "goodness" not sacrifices (vi. 6). 3. The foolish political alliances of the day, called also "hiring loves," rival parties dragging the country alternately to Egypt and Assyria (v. 13; vii. 11, 12; viii. 9, 10). The rise of the Northern Kingdom itself was a fatal error (viii. 4; xiii. 10), bringing with it the false worship (viii. 4, 5); an error that shall be retrieved in the latter day, when the people shall seek Jehovah their God and David their king (i. 11; iii. 5).

Hosea's fundamental idea is the "love" of the Lord to the community. In love He redeemed them from Egypt (xi. 1); their history has been but an illustration of His love (xi. 4, ch. xi.—xiii.); even the greatest of His chastisements, casting the people out into the wilderness, is inflicted in love (ii. 14; ch. iii.); and their restoration shall be due to His love (ii. 19; xiv. 4). Over against this moral Being, who is love, the prophet creates another moral person, the Community of Israel, with a personal identity all through her history, but characterized always by want of affection, treachery, infidelity. Her idolatries, alliances abroad, the political schism at home, are but revelations of a state of mind, always unsatisfied and untrue. This idealism of Israel as a moral Person affects the prophet's view of the future. No distinction is drawn between classes, as in Amos; Israel's calamities reveal to her the meaning of her conduct and her history, and she returns to her first husband (ii. 7); the whole people, the ideal Person, is converted and restored (ii. 19). With this conception is connected the question of the prophet's marriage (ch. i., iii.). It has been held: 1, that he literally married a woman already known as a sinner—which is repulsive and contrary to the idea of Israel's early purity (ix. 10; xi. 1; Jer. ii. 2); 2, that the whole is an allegory; 3, that there is a basis of reality in the story, though it is embellished in order the better to exhibit the truth. Gomer became unfaithful, and he saw in his relations with her the relation of Jehovah to His people, and thus received his great prophetic conception (i. 2). That conception is, that the love of the Lord to His people is unquenchable; that love is stronger than custom or law or even than moral repugnance (ch. iii.; Jer. iii. 1). The profound thought and pathos of this prophet of the north have deeply influenced succeeding writers (Jer. ii., iii.; Ez. xvi., xxiii.; Is. xl.—lxv.). The new betrothal of Israel to the Lord (ii. 19) anticipates Jeremiah's new covenant (xxxi. 31).

Joel, the son of Pethuel, was a prophet of Judah, familiar with Jerusalem and the temple service, hence by some supposed to have been a priest. The prophecy, occasioned apparently by lengthened visitations of drought and locusts—plagues so severe that they seemed the heralds of the great "day of the Lord"—falls into two parts; ch. i. 1—ii. 17, and ch. ii. 18—iii. 21 (iv. 21 in Heb.). The first part consists of two prophetic discourses (ch. i. and ii. 1—17), each of which, beginning with a graphic description of a plague (ch. i. drought and locusts; ii. 1—17, the army of locusts), leads up to an exhortation to repentance (i. 15 seq.; ii. 12—17). The second part contains promises from Jehovah: 1, promise of temporal blessings, removal of the plagues, abundance of ruin, and plenty for man and beast (ii. 18—27); 2, promise that afterwards the Spirit shall be poured out on all flesh, and the knowledge of the Lord be universal; and then shall come the terrible day of the Lord. They that call on the name of the Lord shall be saved, and in Mount Zion shall be those that escape (ii. 28—32; iii. 1—5 in Heb.). Though embraced in the day of the Lord, a separate picture is given of the fate of the heathen world. The "nations" are gathered together into the valley of Jehoshaphat ("Jehovah judges") to be judged. The scene is a great conflict, the mowing of a harvest, the treading of a winepress; the issue reveals the heathen world a "desolation," but Judah shall dwell for ever (ch. iii.; iv. in Heb.).

Three modes of interpretation have been followed: the literal, the allegorical, and the apocalyptic. The first considers the "locusts" real; the second as figures for enemies of God's people, the four successive swarms pointing to repeated invasions, as by the four world-monarchies of Daniel; and the third regards them as supernatural agencies or beings belonging to the manifestations of the time of the end (Rev. ix.). Such passages as ii. 4, 7, where the locusts are compared to horsemen, are against the allegorical view; and such as ii. 21—25 decidedly in favour of the literal interpretation, although so severe was the calamity that the prophet saw in it tokens of the nearness of God's judgement and His great day. The age of the prophecy is also uncertain. There is no reference to Assyria or Babylon, and it might be anterior to these empires; no king is mentioned, power being in the hands of the "priests" (i. 14; ii. 15), and hence it has been placed in the minority of Joash (before 850). On the other hand, the great monarchies might have passed away, and the prophecy be of the time of the return from exile, when the priests were the actual rulers of the community. Several things rather favour a late date: 1, no allusion is made to Northern Israel, the people of God is Judah (ii. 1, 32; iii. 1, 12, 17, 20). 2, no allusion is made to the conflict with idolatry, which fills the pages of the earlier prophets; false worship appears overcome. 3, the devotion of the prophet to the ritual (i. 9; ii. 14) has no parallel before Ezekiel. 4, the antithesis between Judah and "all nations" might be the generalization of a later time, earlier prophets usually referring to some one nation as the foe of Israel.—Religious truths prominent in the prophecy are: the day of the Lord (Is. ii. 12; xiii. 6; Zeph. i. 14; Am. v. 18); the escaped "remnant" (ii. 32; Is. vi. 13; x. 21); the saving faith which "calls" on the Lord, and on the other side the Lord's

"call" (ii. 32). The prophecy of the "Spirit," the characteristic of the new dispensation (Acts ii. 17), is fuller than elsewhere (Is. xxxii. 15; Jer. xxxi. 33; Zech. xii. 10). The imagery has greatly influenced later scripture: the locusts (ii. with Rev. ix.), the day of the Lord (i. 15; ii. 11, 31; Matt. xxiv. 29; Rev. vi. 12), the harvest of judgement (iii. 13; Rev. xiv. 15), and the fountain (iii. 18; Rev. xxii. 1; cf. Ezek. xlvi. 1).

Amos prophesied in the days of Uzziah king of Judah and Jeroboam, the son of Joash, king of Israel, two years before the earthquake (i. 1; cf. Zech. xiv. 5). Jeroboam probably died about 750, and Uzziah about 740. The prophet's mission, apparently not of long duration, belongs to the first half of the eighth century; if the heading of the book be from his own hand it was not compiled till two years after the prophecies were spoken. Amos was a native of Tekoa, 12 miles S. of Jerusalem, the ruins of which still remain. Here he was a shepherd (i. 1; vii. 14). He disclaims being one of the "sons of the prophets" (vii. 14), though with no disparagement of these societies, much less of the prophetic office (ii. 11). Nothing is known of the causes, if there were any secondary causes, which led to his prophesying against the Northern Kingdom, nor anything of his subsequent history.

The book contains these sections: I. Ch. i.—ii., a view of the sins of all the nations, with threats of the universal judgement of Jehovah. The cloud of judgement laden with disaster trails round the whole horizon, discharging itself upon the nations in succession, Judah included, till it settles at last over Israel. They that have the Law are judged by the Law, and those without law by the law of the human mind common to all men, which the nations have transgressed in their inhuman treatment of one another. II. Ch. iii.—iv. 3, threats of judgement upon the people of Israel because of their injustice to one another and the oppression of the poor by the privileged classes. III. Ch. iv. 4—v., threats of judgement because of the false worship of the people and their vain conceptions of the nature of Jehovah. Their ritual service was only sinning, for the conception of the God to whom they offered it in no way corresponded to Jehovah (iv. 4); He bids them seek Him and not seek to Beth-el (v. 4—6). IV. Ch. vi., a threat of judgement because of the luxury of the ruling classes, their national pride and religious indifference and blindness to the operations of Jehovah. V. Ch. vii.—ix. contain the same idea of the destruction of the nation, but expressed in symbols and visions, e.g. the application of the plumbline (ch. vii.), the ripe summer fruit (viii.), and the smiting of the temple at Beth-el, that it fall on the heads of the worshippers (ix.). The prophet's great religious conception is that of the purely moral character of Jehovah, the righteous ruler of all nations and men. This universalism is expressed by the name "God of hosts," "God of Israel" being avoided; while false gods are not referred to except in the obscure passage, v. 25—27. Sin alone displeases Jehovah. His service is a righteous life, sacrifices of flesh have no meaning to Him (v. 21 seq.), hence the sinful nation must inevitably perish (ix. 8). The people's hopes that they could appease Him with offerings, that being their God He would save them, were a delusion; it was because He was their God that He would visit their iniquity upon them (iii. 2; ix. 7); the "day-of the Lord" which they longed for would be darkness, and not light, as if a man fled from a lion and a bear met him (v. 18, 19). Yet Israel cannot be utterly destroyed (ix. 8); sifted among all nations not a true grain will fall to the ground (ix. 9). The sinners of the people shall be destroyed, but the Lord will raise up again the tabernacle of David. The kingdom shall return to its ancient glory when undivided, and the world (as the prophet conceived it) shall be subject to it (ix. 11 seq.).

Obadiah prophesied against Edom: 1, Edom though building high in the rock shall be brought down to the ground by Jehovah and his treasures rifed, v. 1—9; 2, this because of his violence to Judah, his malicious joy over its calamity, and his participation with its destroyers in holding riot on God's holy mountain, 10—16; 3, but in Zion shall be the remnant, which shall be holy. Israel restored shall possess its ancient heritages and absorb all its foes, Edom, the Philistines and Phenicia, and the kingdom shall be the Lord's, 17—21.—Nothing is known of the prophet. The terms in which he describes the "calamity" of Jerusalem (10—16) can hardly refer to anything but its capture by the Chaldeans (586). For the part Edom took in this against his brother (v. 10) he incurred the abiding hatred of Israel (Jer. xlix.; Ezek. xxv. 12; xxxv. 4; Lam. iv. 21; Ps. cxxxvii. 7). The relations of Edom to Israel were changeful. Subdued by David it shook off the yoke under Jehoram (2 K. viii. 20). Reconquered by Amaziah and Uzziah (2 K. xiv. 7, 22) it rebelled under Ahaz (2 K. xvi. 6; 2 Chr. xxviii. 17); but in the narratives of these events no mention is made of any part taken by Edom in a capture of Jerusalem. On the other hand, when Ob. 1—6, 8 is compared with Jer. xlix. 14—16, 9, 10, 7 (in this order) they appear dependent on one another. The prophecies of Jeremiah against the nations are preexilic and dependent on earlier writings. Hence some have referred Obadiah to the time of Jehoram's defeat by the Arabians (2 Chr. xxi. 16), in which it is assumed Edom took part; while others have supposed both Obadiah and Jeremiah dependent on an earlier prophecy. The problems connected with the prophecies of Jeremiah against the nations are still unsolved, while the reference of Obadiah to the fall of Jerusalem seems clear. Obadiah has many affinities with Joel.

Jonah, son of Amittai, of Gath-hepher in Zebulun, lived under Jeroboam II., whose success in restoring the ancient boundaries of Israel he predicted (2 K. xiv. 25). This prophecy was probably never written, the opinion of some authors that it is to be identified with Is. xv., xvi. resting on no solid foundation. The present Book of Jonah does not assume to be from the hand of the prophet, but has the form of a narrative by a later writer of an episode in his life. It is disputed how far the narrative reposes on actual historical events, and also whether the tradition may not have assumed some shape orally before the present writer adopted it, or whether the details be the free creation of his own mind. At all events the historical elements, if they existed, have been amplified and embellished by the author so as to make them more graphically convey the moral lessons which it is his object to teach. In this respect the book presents a parallel to the Book of Job. (The key to the book is probably to be found in ch. iii. 10–iv. 1 seq., the reasons the prophet gives for his flight and unwillingness to preach to Nineveh. It is a repudiation of a narrow-hearted particularism which would confine to Israel a salvation of which the very nature of God and the susceptibilities of the human conscience everywhere prophesy the universality. 1. Jehovah is God alone, over all, the sea and the dry land (i. 9). The winds obey Him, and the monsters of the deep. The men of Nineveh as well as Israel are the work of His hand, and His compassions are over all His works (iv. 2, 10, 11). 2. Everywhere the mind of men, even the heathen world, is susceptible to the sense of sin and the Godhead of Jehovah (i. 16; iii. 7 seq.; cf. Ezek. iii. 6, and often in Dan., e.g. ii. 47; iii. 28; iv. 37; vi. 26). Jehovah's operations have only to be known for all men to believe in Him. 3. The conclusion, which the prophet sought to evade, hardly needs to be drawn. Israel's mission and the destiny of mankind are both plain. The book is a beautiful poem, whether it paints the humanity of the heathen sailors, or the mourning of the prophet over the decay of the grass of the field, or more particularly the divine tenderness in ministering to the diseased mind of the prophet with his imperfect conceptions, or in pitying the little children of Nineveh. It is not necessary to suppose that the book, which is late, was written with the view of counteracting a tendency of any particular time. Its teaching is a spontaneous outcome of the religion of Israel, the corollary, often drawn before, from the doctrine of Jehovah, God alone. What is new in it is not this, but the author's love of mankind, his kindly appreciation of that which is good and beautiful in men everywhere. This is the support from another side of his teaching. Men and God are both transfigured. Would that men knew the Lord, as they shall do!

Micah, a native of Moresheth Gath in the plain country of Judah (i. 1, 14), prophesied under Hezekiah (iii. 12; Jer. xxvi. 18), partly at least before the fall of Samaria in 722 (i. 6). The book has three divisions: 1. Ch. i.–iii. prophecies of judgement and ruin on the State. II. Ch. iv., v. prophecies of restoration, with brilliant Messianic promises.

III. Ch. vi., vii. prophecies of a mixed character, breathing a different spirit and belonging probably to a later period. First part: 1, a theophany of the Lord in judgement (i. 1–4), which lights first on Samaria, which shall become heaps (5–7), and then moves southward towards the "gate of my people, even Jerusalem";—graphic picture of the panic and flight of the inhabitants before the Assyrian (8–16). 2, the cause of this judgement is the idolatry at the high places (i. 5–7), but also the oppressions of the upper classes (ii. 1, 2). Micah, a native of the country, had ample opportunities of seeing how the poorer cultivators were dispossessed, "flayed and chopped in pieces" by the more powerful owners and creditors, their wives and children driven out and stripped naked (ii. 8–10; iii. 1–4). Added to this cruelty was the usual sensuality (ii. 11) and indifference to religion or even active opposition to the prophets who censured them (ii. 6). 3, therefore judgement shall be on the false prophets who encouraged such evils (iii. 5–8) and on the people—Zion shall be ploughed like a field (iii. 9–12). Second part: 1, ch. iv., prediction of the restoration of the former kingdom to Jerusalem, introduced by the beautiful prophecy of the time when Zion shall be the religious centre of the world (found also Is. iil.). 2, ch. v., prophecy of the birth of the new king of the house of David (2–4), and the universal peace of his reign (5, 10–15). Third part: 1, a remonstrance of the Lord with His people, in which He recounts His past goodness to them (vi. 1–5). The touched conscience of the community seeks to know, How He would be served? The answer is that He desires justice, goodness, and humility before God—an answer which sums up Amos, Hosea and Isaiah in three words (6–8). Because the opposite of these things prevails desolating judgement must be looked for (9–16). 2, new and terrible picture of the treacherous and anarchic state of society (vii. 1–7). 3, finally, the judgement seems to have fallen, and Zion sitting in darkness comforts herself with the hope that she shall yet see light, for who is God like unto Jehovah who pardoneth iniquity? (7–20). The connexion is obscure in several parts of the book. Ch. ii. 12, 13 cannot be meant as a specimen of the false prophets' style; it seems however to disturb the connexion. Ch. iv. 9, 10 suggest a different situation from iv. 11 seq.; while vii. 7–20 breathes the spirit and situation of Lam. iii. 25 seq. Ch. vi., vii. have an elegiac tone unlike the other chapters.

—Nahum was probably a native of Elkosh in Galilee (cf. Capernaum, the village of Nahum); a late Christian tradition refers to Alkush near Mosul, the ancient Nineveh. The prophecy is altogether against Nineveh. Starting, as all the prophets do, from a conception of Jehovah, a God of vengeance to His enemies but longsuffering (i. 2, 3), the prophet presents a theophany of this God for the purpose of executing judgement once for all on the oppressor of His people and delivering them (3–15). Ch. ii., a more particular picture of the same subject, containing brilliant sketches of the city's fall—the besiegers (ii. 3, 4), the besieged, the capture, and dispersion of the inhabitants (5–10), with a taunting proverb over the harrying of the ancient den of lions (11–13). Ch. iii., the same theme under other figures, as that of a harlot and enchantress intoxicating the nations with the cup of her sorceries, i.e. her political influences and mercantile enterprises. The harlot shall be stripped and exposed in the eyes of all whom she enchanted (iii. 1–7). She shall share the fate of No Amon, and all her traders shall flee from her, as the locusts strip off their shreds and fly away (8–19). The prophecy has great literary brilliancy, with strong patriotic feeling (i. 13; ii. 1), but more rarely enters the deeper moral sphere (iii. 19; i. 2, 3). Its composition lies between two ascertained points, the fall of Nineveh (606), and that of No Amon or Thebes in Upper Egypt, taken by Assurbanipal about 660. The prophets do not usually pursue abstract themes; their revelations, though going beyond immediate movements, are usually suggested by them. The occasion of the prophecy may have been some recent aggression of Assyria, or more probably some powerful coalition against Nineveh, either that before which it actually fell or some earlier one, which prompted the prophet to express his certainty of the city's doom (ii. 1; iii. 12).

Habakkuk, of whom nothing is known, prophesied in Judah during the last years of the Kingdom. The book has two parts: ch. i., ii. the prophecy, and ch. iii. a lyrical hymn. This very remarkable writing looks like a passage of the Wisdom rather than of Prophecy, being occupied almost entirely with the moral problem of evil and oppression, whether in Israel or in the world, under the eyes of the just and almighty God. 1. The prophet complains that his outcries against the evil, the injustice and lawlessness in Judah remain unheard by Jehovah, who calmly beholds it (i. 1–4). 2. He receives the reply that the Lord is raising up that bitter and hasty nation the Chaldeans to chastise the wrongdoers (5–11). 3. The answer aggravates the evil, making it as wide as mankind while before confined to Israel. The character of the Chaldeans fills the prophet's mind, their pride and selfishness, their brutal levity and inhumanity and their godlessness, and withal their irresistible success, and the moral problem is only enveloped in deeper darkness (12–17). 4. Baffled and exhausted the prophet betakes himself to his watch-tower to await the answer of the Lord. It comes in the shape of a moral distinction: "his soul is not upright in him; but, the righteous shall live in his faithfulness" (his steadfast adherence to the truth and to Jehovah). The distinction carries in it its final verification in events, though this may not come at once (ii. 1–5). 5. It is, however, certain; and the downfall of the Chaldean is celebrated in a hymn of triumph, so instinct with moral feeling that not only men (6–8), but inanimate things (v. 11) are endowed with a conscience that rises against the selfishness and barbarous inhumanity of the conqueror (6–20). The moral breadth of the prophet is comparable only to some parts of Job (vii. 1 seq.; ix. 24; ch. xxi., xxiv.), while his faith in the necessary triumph of the religion of Jehovah in contrast with idolatry has risen up to be a principle based on reflection (ii. 14, 20), as in the last chapters of Isaiah. The brilliant hymn, ch. iii., is a lyrical expression of the same conceptions. Though fashioned on older models (Deut. xxxiii.; Judg. v.; cf. Ps. lxviii.), the hymn is a powerful delineation of the manifestation of Jehovah to judge the earth and deliver His people. However greatly longed for this revelation of the Judge fills even those that look for Him with terror (iii. 16), but no convulsions or desolations will shake the prophet's faith in Jehovah and the victory of the righteous (iii. 17; cf. Ps. xlv.). Ch. i. 5 might imply that the Chaldean had not yet come upon the stage, at least in western Asia, but i. 7–17 seems inconsistent with this, unless indeed the Assyrian had been made to sit for the portrait of the Chaldean. Not prophetic outlook but historical experience seems manifest in these verses, and so "the violence done to Lebanon" (ii. 17) must reflect history (cf. Is. xiv.).

Zephaniah, whose ancestry is carried back four degrees to a Hizkiah, supposed by some to be King Hezekiah, prophesied in the time of Josiah (639–608). The book is a sort of prophetic compend, speaking first of universal judgement, ch. i.–iii. 8, and then of universal salvation in the knowledge of Jehovah, ch. iii. 9–20. This judgement or "day of the Lord" is the pouring out of His wrath on all created things (i. 1–3); in particular on men: on Judah (i. 4–ii. 3), then on all the nations (ii. 4–15). It falls on Judah for her idolatries (i. 4–7), on the royal house for their foreign affectations and violence (8, 9), on the merchant classes (10, 11), on all ungodly and indifferent, who say, the Lord will not do good or do evil—the day of the Lord shall be on all, a day of blood and darkness (12–18). Let men turn that they may be hid in this terrible day (ii. 1–3). It falls too on the nations round about, the Philistines on the west, Moab and Ammon on the east, Cush on the south, and Assyria on the north (ii. 4–15). Ch. iii. 1–8 repeats the threat of universal judgement more compendiously; then follows the promise that the knowledge of the Lord shall be given to all nations (iii. 9); Jerusalem shall no more be proud, but humble (iii. 11, 12; Ezek. xvi. 63), her captives shall be restored, and the Lord her King shall rule for ever in the midst of her (iii. 10–20). The prophecy dates before the fall of Nineveh, 606 (ii. 13); ch. i. 4 "remnant of Baal" is hardly evidence for time after Josiah's reformation (621), nor i. 5, iii. 4 for time before it. The great conception of the prophecy is "the day of the Lord," the time of the Lord's final interposition to judge evil and introduce His universal kingdom. This "day" was a general conception of the prophets, but the presentiment that it was near was awakened in two ways: 1, by the moral condition of men, Israel or the world. This many times seemed so corrupt or violent that the feeling could not be repressed that the Judge must speedily intervene (Is. ii. 12). Or 2, by great convulsions (Is. xiii. 6) or calamities (Joel i. 15; ii. 1) desolating the earth at the time. Jehovah was visibly present in these disasters; He was so near that men felt He was about to reveal Himself in His fulness in that great and terrible day. There seems a reference to some visible instrument in God's hand when the prophet speaks of the Lord's guests, bidden to His sacrifice (i. 7),—possibly the Scythians, who broke into western Asia about this time. The expressions, "I am, and there is none else," ii. 15, again Is. xlviii. 8; and "proudly exulting ones," ii. 11, again Is. xiii. 3.

Haggai prophesied in the 2nd year of Darius Hystaspes (520, i. 1). His short book, which reflects the depressed condition of the small community of the Restoration, naturally occupied with the care of providing for their own subsistence more than with zeal for the public service of their God, contains four brief oracles. 1. Ch. i., complaint of the people's absorption in their own material interests to the neglect of God's house; a picture of their abject condition, due to their religious indifference; and an exhortation to put their hand forthwith to the work of raising the temple. The exhortation had the effect desired (i. 14, 15). 2. ii. 1–9, an oracle designed to comfort those who had seen the former house and could not but consider the present one pitiful and mean in comparison (cf. the touching narrative Ezra iii. 11–13). A glory shall belong to the present house to which the former never attained, for the great "shaking" of the day of the Lord is near, and all nations shall come to it dedicating their "desirable (precious) things," their silver and gold to the Lord (ii. 7–9; cf. Is. lx. 5), and His glory shall fill it (Is. lx. 13). Possibly Haggai himself may have remembered the former house. 3. Ch. ii. 10–19, a parable: Does holy flesh sanctify that which it touches? No, but the touch of the unclean pollutes all about it. So the secular spirit of the people has hitherto brought a curse on their labour and increase; but from henceforth the Lord will bless them. 4. Ch. ii. 20–23, a dim outlook into the future with presentiments of vast changes in the world at the hand of the Lord, when the kingdoms of the nations shall decay and crumble before the kingdom of the Lord (Dan. ii. 44), but the descendant of the house of David shall be near to the Lord as a seal ring (Jer. xxii. 24). The whole prophecy, though homely in style and chiefly occupied with the humble community of that day, has an undertone of far-reaching hopes, somewhat vaguely expressed, and presentiments of a great work about to be performed by the Lord among the nations, and of the glorious future lying before that which the community, however depressed, still contained within itself.

Zechariah, son of Berechiah, son of

Iddo (Neh. xii. 4, 16), a contemporary of Haggai (Ezra v. 1; vi. 14), prophesied from 2nd to 4th year of Darius I. (520–518). The book has two great divisions: ch. i.–viii., a series of visions sketching the future of the people of God, and ch. ix.–xiv., prophecies of an obscure kind, belonging to a different situation. Two things characterize the visions: first, the prophetic revelation, formerly a thing internal to the prophet's mind, is here made external, and analysed into two elements,—visions, and an interpreting angel who explains them. Secondly, so Jehovah Himself is externally manifested in the angel of the Lord, and His power and efficiency in His operations are personified in the shape of horsemen and the like. The Visions: i. 1–6, introduction: warning to hear and repent, by the example of the fathers, who refused to hear, and were overtaken by God's judgments, justly as they acknowledged. 1 Vis., i. 7–17, riders on horses of various colours, which go over all the earth to report on the state of the nations in the interests of Jerusalem. 4 Meaning: the Lord is jealous for Jerusalem, and wroth with the nations at ease; He returns to Zion, where His house shall be built, and His city peopled. 2 Vis., i. 18–21, four horns—all the agencies that have scattered Israel; and four craftsmen—the divine agencies that shall counteract and destroy them. 3 Vis., ch. ii., a man with a measuring line to measure Jerusalem. The city shall be immeasurable and overflow with people: the Lord shall be a wall of fire around her, and many nations shall be joined to her in that day. 4 Vis., ch. iii., Joshua, the high priest, in filthy garments, standing before the angel of the Lord, with Satan at his right hand to accuse him (cf. Job i. 6–11). Satan is rebuked; the Lord who has chosen Jerusalem has plucked the brand from the burning. The beautiful vision might be a reflection of the feeling of the people, their abject condition awakening a sense of their sin and the fear that the Lord had not returned to them in truth. They are comforted with the assurance that His favour and forgiveness are with them, dispensed through the ministries among them; these ministries are but types of a more perfect one, when through the Branch (Messiah, Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15) the Lord will remove the iniquity of the land in one day. 5 Vis., ch. iv., a lamp-stand surmounted by a bowl of oil, which feeds by tubes the seven burning lamps of the lamp-stand, two olive trees on either side supplying the bowl with oil. The lamps might represent the light shed by the people or that shed among them. The oil is the symbol of the Spirit, through whom, and not by might or power, all Israel's work and destiny shall be accomplished. This Spirit is dispensed through the two anointed ones ("sons of oil"), representing the priestly and royal rule (Joshua and Zerubbabel). 6 Vis., v. 1–4, a symbol of the curse that shall light on sin in the land. 7 Vis., 5–11, symbol of the removing of the sin of the people to Shinar, the land of their foes (Lev. xvi. 21). 8 Vis., vi. 1–8, horsemen, called also "winds"

(Rev. vii. 1), going to all quarters of the earth—symbols of agencies by which God shall subdue the nations, foes of His people. Ch. vi. 9–15, symbolical action to teach that the Branch (Messiah), who shall truly build the temple of the Lord, shall be a Crowned Priest. Ch. vii., viii., reply to a question about fasting: the Lord is indifferent whether men fast or eat; He desires that they execute judgement and shew mercy (vii. 8–10). The fasts shall be turned into festivals of joy (viii. 19). Ch. i.–viii. are of profoundly spiritual meaning.

Ch. ix.–xi. 1. An invasion from the North sweeps over Damascus, Tyre and the Philistines; the last are incorporated in Israel (ix. 1–7). Zion is saved; her King comes to her righteous and victorious, meek and prince of peace (8–10). Her captives are restored, and Judah and Ephraim, miraculously strengthened of God, are victorious over the Greeks; and shall no more seek to diviners, but to the Lord (ix. 11–x. 2). 2. A similar theme. Good shepherds displace the evil ones; Judah miraculously strengthened, with Ephraim fully restored, shall humble the pride of Assyria and Egypt (x. 3–12). 3. Invasion of Lebanon and the Jordan-land (xi. 1–3). The prophet is commissioned to feed the flock destined for slaughter (4–8); renounces the thankless task (9–14); the flock falls into the hands of an evil shepherd (15–17). Ch. xii.–xiv. 1. Final war of the nations against Jerusalem, and their defeat (xii. 1–9). 2. The Spirit poured out on Jerusalem, and a fountain opened for sin and uncleanness (xii. 10–xiii. 6). 3. Ch. xiv. appears a duplicate of xiii., with the difference that Jerusalem falls for a time into the hands of the nations before the Lord appears for her salvation. These prophecies are enigmatical and of uncertain date. To some writers ch. ix.–xi. appear of date anterior to the fall of Samaria, because of reference to Ephraim (ix. 10–15; x. 7; xi. 14), to diviners and teraphim (x. 2), Assyria (x. 10), a king of Gaza (ix. 5), and to the Messiah (ix. 9; cf. Is. lxii. 11); while ch. xii.–xiv., though posterior to the death of Josiah (referred to xii. 11), must be pre-exilic, because of reference to idols and false prophets (xiii. 2–6). Others consider ch. ix.–xiv. the work of one writer, living not long after Alexander, because of reference to the Greeks (ix. 13), and the exile (ix. 11; x. 6, 9, 10); the prominence of the priesthood (xii. 13), and the final war of the nations against Jerusalem, which reflects Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix. "Assyria," "Egypt," &c. would be ancient names used for Syria and the kingdom of the Ptolemies.

Malachi. It is not certain whether Malachi ("my messenger," iii. 1, or contraction of Malachiah, "messenger of the Lord") be a proper name or a title of honour given to an anonymous prophet. The exact date of the prophecy is also uncertain. The temple has been completed (i. 10), the ritual though neglected is in operation; but the condition of the people remains depressed, leading to murmuring against God (ii. 17). The practices stigmatized, mixed marriages and cruel divorces (ii. 10 seq.), with neglect of the tithes (iii. 8), are those reproved by Nehemiah (xiii. 23; xiii. 10). They may, however, have prevailed for long, and the reference to the governor (i. 8; cf. Neh. v. 14) suggests that he was a foreigner at the time. The prophecy may belong to second half of fifth century. Two parts: i. 1–ii. 9, and ii. 10–iv. 6 (iii. 24 in Heb.), the first directed more to the priesthood, and the second more to the practices and mind of the people. 1. The introduction (i. 1–5) recalls to mind the love of the Lord to the people, illustrated in the histories of Israel and Esau. The latter had been made a desolation, while Israel had been restored and would be blessed. 2. Ungratefulness of Israel and dishonour they do to Him who is their "father" and "master" in neglecting His service and bringing the blemished and the blind to His table. It were better that the doors of the temple were closed! (6–14). 3. Such evils are due to the secularity of the priesthood. How unlike is the degenerate Levi of to-day to the ideal Levi of former times (ii. 1–9). The second part has two main points: 1. The mixed marriages and repudiation of native wives (ii. 10–16). Have not all children of Israel one God for father? Did not one God create them a people? (Is. xliii. 1, &c.). Why should they mix with the heathen, and cruelly wrong their wives of the daughters of Israel? The instance of Abraham is of another kind (ii. 15). 2. The people's murmuring over their lot, complaint that God makes no discrimination in His rule between the good and the wicked, and impatient desire for His coming (ii. 17–iv. 6). Answer: The Lord's coming is nigh. He will send His messenger to prepare His way (Elijah, iv. 5; cf. Is. xl. 3); the Lord will come to His temple, and the angel of the covenant whom they desire (the angel of the covenant differs from the Lord only in this that He is the Lord in visible manifestation, Zech. i. 11; iii. 1). Who shall abide His coming? for He shall sit as one refining silver (ii. 17–iii. 6; cf. iii. 13–18; iv. 1–3). Even now their wretchedness is not due to any moral slackness on the part of God, but to their own hereditary evil. They rob God of that due to Him. Let them return unto the Lord, and He will return unto them! (iii. 7–12).

2. THE SEVERAL BOOKS OF THE APOCRYPHA.

BY THE REV. PROFESSOR RYLE, B.D.

The First Book of Esdras. The character of this book is best understood from an analysis of its contents, shewing the passages in which it is dependent upon Canonical Books of Scripture. (a) Chap. i.: Josiah's religious reforms, and the subsequent history down to the destruction of the Temple in 588 (=2 Chron. xxxv., xxxvi.). (b) Chap. ii. 1-15: the Decree of Cyrus and the return of the Exiles (=Ezra i.). (c) Chap. ii. 16-30. Artaxerxes in consequence of complaints against the Jews causes the building of the walls to be stopped (=Ezra iv. 7-24). (d) Chap. iii.-v. 6. Zerubbabel by his wisdom as a page of Darius wins the favour of the king and obtains permission to restore the captive Jews to their own country. This section is independent of the Canonical Scriptures. (e) Chap. v. 7-73, the list of the Jews that returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon, the commencement of the Temple and the interruption of the work (=Ezra ii. 1-iv. 5). (f) Chap. vi., vii., the resumption of the work and the dedication of the Temple (=Ezra v., vi.). (g) Chap. viii.-ix. 36, Ezra's return from Babylon and his work in Jerusalem (=Ezra vii.-x.). (h) Chap. ix. 37-55, Ezra's public reading of the Law (Neh. vii. 73-viii. 13).

Thus the only original portion of the book is chap. iii.-v. 6, which has all the appearance of a fable. The contest of wits in the praise of wine, monarchy, woman and truth has been introduced from the diffuse didactic literature which gathered round the chief personages of Jewish history. It is quite in the character of Alexandrian Jewish legend to attribute Zerubbabel's return to the impression produced by the preeminence of Jewish wisdom.

That the compilation of the work was not based on historical knowledge of any special accuracy is shewn by (a) the treatment of Ezra iv. 7-24, and (b) the position assigned to the Episode, iii.-v. 6. The compiler of Esdras by placing Ezra iv. 7-24 before the description of Zerubbabel's arrival (ii. 16-30) indicates that the difficulty of the passage was felt even at his time; but his attempt to rearrange the order of events has only added to the confusion. The Episode (iii.-v. 6), accounting for the royal commission to Zerubbabel, transfers us suddenly to the reign of Darius, so that the order of mention of the Persian kings is Cyrus (ii. 1-15), Artaxerxes (ii. 16-30), Darius (iii.-v. 6), Cyrus (v. 7-73); and the return of Zerubbabel is described in chap. iv. as well as in chap. v. and possibly in chap. ii. 12, 15 (Sabbassar=Zerubbabel).

Although it adds nothing to our historical knowledge, the book is an interesting example of the freedom with which Jewish writers dealt with their national Scripture.

The divergencies of the text from the parallel passages in Chron., Ezra and Nehemiah are not considerable. In some few instances they may help towards the determination of the correct reading.

It is a disputed point, whether the book in the borrowed portions gives a revision of the Alexandrine Version or a translation from the Hebrew original of the Canonical books. The former is the more probable alternative; and the fact that the distinctive section iii.-v. 6 has all the appearance of having been composed in Greek favours this view.

Of the date of its compilation we know nothing save that its contents were known to Josephus.

Its title appears in different forms. In the MSS. of the LXX. it appears as the 1st Book of Ezra; owing probably to the fact that it opens with events chronologically prior to anything recorded in Ezra and Nehemiah. By Jerome and in the Vulgate it was reckoned as the Third Book of Ezra, Nehemiah being regarded as the Second. In some early editions of the Vulgate which reckon Ezra and Nehemiah as one book, this book appears as 2 Esdras. In the English Bible the name Esdras is reserved for the two Apocryphal books bearing Ezra's name; and of these the historical is called the First, the apocalyptic the Second, Book of Esdras. It should be observed that 1 Esdras was not included in the Tridentine Catalogue of the books contained in the Vulgate. In the official copies of that version it appears in the Appendix to the New Testament.

The Second Book of Esdras. This book of 16 chapters consists of three different writings, (a) chap. i., ii.; (b) iii.-xiv.; (c) xv., xvi., so distinct from one another that in one MS. (Amiens) they appear as 3, 4 and 5 Esdras respectively. In Bibles where Ezra and Nehemiah are treated as one book, this work appears as the 3rd of Esdras; in other copies, where Ezra and Nehemiah are separated, it is known as the 4th of Esdras. The greater part of the book consists of an Apocalyptic writing iii.-xiv., which from early times was known and quoted in the Christian Church. It is, however, of distinctly Jewish and non-Christian origin. It contains seven visions, which divide the work as follows, (1) iii. 1-v. 20. (2) v. 21-vi. 34. (3) vi. 35-ix. 25. (4) ix. 26-x. 59. (5) xi. 1-xii. 51. (6) xiii. 1-58. (7) xiv. 1-48. The visions are revelations made to Ezra, who is represented as grieving over the afflictions of his people and perplexed at the triumph of Gentile sinners. It was evidently written only a short time after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; and in all probability its date is to be assigned to the reign of Domitian (81-96 A.D.). This explains its characteristic tone of deep melancholy. The only note of consolation is presented in the thought of the retribution that is to fall upon the heads of the Gentiles that have crushed the Jews. The references to the Messiah (vii. 28, 29, xii. 32, xiii. 32, 37, 52), and especially to His death (vii. 29), deserve especial notice. The fifth vision contains allusions in an enigmatical form to the contemporary power of Rome. Chap. xiv. records the tradition that Ezra was inspired to write out the lost Scriptures. The resemblance of this Apocalypse to the Apocalypse of Baruch is so close that it undoubtedly springs from the same period of composition, possibly from the same hand. The other portions of the book, chaps. i., ii., xv., xvi., are of later date and are either of Christian origin or contain extensive Christian interpolation.

The whole work is extant in a Latin translation. It was most probably originally composed in Greek, but no Greek version has as yet been found. A fragment that had long been missing at chap. vii. 35 was only recently restored by a happy discovery of Prof. Bensly in the year 1875.

The Book of Tobit contains an agreeably written Jewish work of fiction. The story is briefly as follows: Tobit is a Jew of the tribe of Naphtali, living in Nineveh, a pious God-fearing man and very strict in the observance of the Jewish law. Trouble comes upon him, and he loses his eyesight. He sends his son Tobias to fetch 10 talents of silver, which he had left in the hands of his kinsman Gabael who dwelt at Rages in Media. Tobias takes a travelling companion with him, who is in reality the angel Raphael. On the way they stop at Ecbatana and lodge at the house of one Raguel, whose daughter Sara has through the evil spirit Asmodeus been seven times deprived of husbands on the night of wedlock. Tobias on the ground of kinship claims her in marriage; and her parents grant consent. By magical means, with which Raphael had supplied him, he is enabled to expel the demon Asmodeus. During the marriage festivities the angel journeys to Rages and obtains the money from Gabael. Tobias and his wife then return to Nineveh; and by further application of magical means Tobias is enabled to restore his father's sight. Raphael having revealed his true nature disappears. Tobit breaks forth into a song of thanksgiving. He and his family end their days in prosperity.

The story is doubtless fictitious. The details of its chronology and geography can make no claim to accuracy; and its general character seems to shew that the work is one of imagination written in praise of a life spent in devout consistency with the Jewish Law, even in a strange land. The Episode of Tobias' marriage with Sara is perhaps introduced for the purpose of urging Jews to contract marriages only with members of their own race.

The prominence given to the angel Raphael, the mention of the evil spirit Asmo-deus, and the efficacy ascribed to the magic charms, constitute a peculiar feature in the story, to be explained however rather by comparison with the curiosities of Rabbinic teaching than, as some have thought, by the influence of Persian thought.

The date of its composition is probably about 100 B.C. From the character of its teaching it cannot be much older, and there is good reason for the view that the allusion to the Temple in xiv. 5 must have been written before the Herodian restoration.

Its praise of "almsgiving," e.g. iv. 7-11, was very frequently quoted in the Early Church.

The discovery has recently been made of an Aramaic text; and it is most probable that the work was originally written either in Hebrew or in Aramaic.

The Book of Judith purports to describe a romantic event in the history of the Jews. Nebuchadnezzar has sent his general Holofernes to punish the Jews for rebellion. The march of the Assyrian army upon Jerusalem is stayed by the resistance of a city called Betulia. Holofernes lays siege to Betulia, which is reduced to great extremities. Judith, one of the inhabitants, a rich and beautiful widow, obtains permission to leave the city with one attendant and repair to the camp of the Assyrians. There she is able by her beauty to excite the favour of Holofernes; and, seizing her opportunity, she drugs him with wine, cuts off his head, and returns with it to her city. The Jews, exultant at the sight, rush out and massacre the panic-stricken Assyrians. Judith ends her days the object of her country's affection and regard for her courage and holiness.

The historical contradictions in the story, as well as its general character, leave us no reason to doubt that it is a work of fiction, in which perhaps some traditional deed of heroism in early days has been worked up.

The date of its composition is in all probability the Maccabean period. Its object is apparently to encourage Jewish readers in their heroic resistance to the rule of the foreigner, and in their strict devotion to the observances of the Law. The heroine's deed, like that of Jael, was an act of savage treachery. But the story of hatred to Israel's foreign foe, combined with a punctilious adherence to the ceremonial requirements of the Law, faithfully characterizes the spirit of the Maccabean age.

The story of Judith is first referred to in the Epistle of Clement to Corinth. It was probably originally written in Hebrew.

The rest of the Chapters of the Book of Esther. The Apocryphal additions to the Canonical Book of Esther contain (1) the dream of Mordecai (ch. x., xi.); (2) the conspiracy of the eunuchs Gabatha and Tharra against the king (ch. xii.); the letter of Artaxerxes for the destruction of the Jews (ch. xiii. 1-7); (4) the prayer of Mordecai in their behalf (ch. xiii. 8-18); (5) the prayer of Esther for herself and her people (ch. xiv.); (6) the queen's petition to the king (ch. xv.); (7) the king's letter revoking his former edict, and commanding that the 13th day of Adar should be celebrated as a festival (ch. xvi.).

These chapters merely expand in greater detail the narrative of the Canonical Book. In all probability written originally in Greek, they illustrate the process of amplification which favourite narratives received from popular Jewish tradition at Alexandria. The purpose is apparently to embellish the Scriptural story with further details, and to illustrate the hearing of prayer and the deliverances from the Gentiles which God wrought for His people the Jews. A postscript to the LXX. version states that the Greek is from the hand of Lysimachus, the son of Ptolemy, a man of Jerusalem, and that the book was brought to Egypt in the fourth year of king Ptolemy and his wife Cleopatra by the hand of the priest Dositheus. But as four kings of the dynasty of Ptolemy had wives of the name Cleopatra, this note does not assist us.

The additions were known and used by Josephus; they were possibly composed in the 1st or 2nd century A.C., and took their rise in the Jewish community resident in Egypt.

The Book of the Wisdom of Solomon. This is one of the most remarkable extant specimens of Jewish "Sapiential" literature.

The book is hortatory in character, and is written in praise of the Jewish conception of "Wisdom" and in condemnation of those who wilfully rejected her. It purports to be addressed by the Israelite king Solomon to the kings and rulers of the earth (cf. i. 1, vi. 1, ix. 7). Its claim, however, to Solomonic authorship is a literary fiction. There can be no doubt that it was written in Greek by an Alexandrian Jew shortly before, or after, the Christian era. This is shown partly by the style of the Greek, partly by the general approach in thought and expression to the teaching of Philo, partly by the traces of the influence of Greek philosophy upon the writer. Under this last head attention should particularly be drawn to the terms in which "Wisdom" is described as a divine emanation permeating the world (vii. 22 ff., viii. 1), to the mention of the four cardinal virtues (viii. 7), and to the description of the body as a mere "earthly tabernacle" of the pre-existent soul (viii. 20, ix. 15).

The book falls into three main divisions: i. (ch. i.—v.). The contrast of the righteous and the ungodly; the blessedness of the former in spite of their apparent failures and sorrows, the misery of the latter in spite of their apparent greatness and prosperity.

ii. (ch. vi.—ix.). The praises of Wisdom: Solomon urges the princes of the world to seek Wisdom as he himself has done (vii. 7 ff.); in elaborate and poetical language the origin and divine qualities of this Wisdom are described; and the section closes with a prayer for the possession of this Wisdom (ch. ix.).

iii. (ch. x.—xix.). An appeal to history: (a) the deliverance wrought by Wisdom for the patriarchs and for the Israelites in Egypt (ch. x.); (b) a justification of the punishment administered to the Egyptians and the Canaanites (ch. xi., xii.); (c) a diffuse denunciation of idolatry (ch. xiii.—xv.); (d) the plagues of Egypt interpreted as a visitation for sin and idolatry (ch. xvi.—xix.).

The style is forcible and poetical in the first half of the book. In the concluding section the language becomes laboured and involved. The contrast between the various portions is so marked that some scholars have assigned them to different authors. It must be admitted that the third section has very little coherence with the first two, and that in it the claim to Solomonic authorship altogether disappears.

The most famous passages are those containing the description of "the righteous man" (iv. 7—18) and the picture of "Wisdom" (ch. vii.—ix.). Christian interpretation in the early centuries of the Church's history used to regard the former as a prophecy of the death of Christ, and the latter as an illustration of the doctrine of the Logos.

The object of the book is doubtless to warn Alexandrian Jews against abandoning the religion of their fathers. The "Wisdom" of the Book of Proverbs, "the fear of the Lord," is asserted to be the basis of all true happiness. Wisdom is personified in imitation, on an expanded scale, of Prov. viii. The use made of Greek philosophical terms is intended perhaps to shew that the Jewish faith, so far from being rendered obsolete by Greek philosophy, originally contained that which was best in it.

The long diatribe against idolatry and the detailed reference to the plagues of Egypt, coupled with the opening description of "the righteous man's" sufferings, give some ground for the conjecture that the work was written or compiled shortly after some popular outbreak of the Egyptian mob against the Jews on account of the Jewish abhorrence of idols.

The Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus. This is the only book in the Apocrypha to which the name of the author can be assigned. In ch. i. 27 he speaks of himself as "Jesus the son of Sirach of Jerusalem." Various conjectures have been made about him, but as a matter of fact we know nothing of him beyond what is told us in the Greek Prologue to the book.

He wrote originally in Hebrew; and his work has come down to us in the Greek translation made by his grandson, who prefixed to it a Preface, from which we obtain approximately the date of the original composition and of the translation. According to the probable interpretation this grandson went to Egypt in the 38th year of the king Euergetes (B.C. 132), i.e. Ptolemy VIII. Physcon, and the translation was issued a little later. Jesus the son of Sirach when speaking of Simon the High-priest (chap. i. 21), with great detail of description, would then be drawing from his own recollection of Simon II., whose High-priesthood ended about the year 199.

The identification of these dates is however disputed. Some scholars prefer to suppose that the mention of the 38th year relates to the age of the translator, that the Euergetes mentioned is Ptolemy III. Euergetes (247—222), and that the High-priest Simon is Simon I. the Just (310—290).

In style and character the book resembles the canonical Book of Proverbs, in imitation of which it was probably composed. It is for the most part a collection of gnomic sayings, which the writer welded together and doubtless enriched with the results of his own experience and reflections. Its structure, therefore, although roughly following a general plan, is wanting in arrangement.

The book falls into two unequal divisions, (A) (i.—xlii. 14), the Sayings of the Wise, which are introduced (chap. i.) by a panegyric on Wisdom, and close with the Praises of Nature (xlii. 15—xliii. 33). (B) xlii.—l. 21, the Praises of the Mighty Men, to which is appended the Epilogue (l. 22—29), and a final Song of Praise (li.).

The greater portion of the book is occupied with questions of practical morality, treated of in the style characteristic of the Palestinian Khokmah (Wisdom). Some of the subjects thus discussed are "friendship," "old age," "women," "avarice," "health," "wisdom," "anger," "servants." Many of the sayings preserved are little more than popular proverbs. Many express sentiments which to our ears are repulsive and coarse. But for the most part the collection is full of interest, and the very fact that the sayings are drawn from ordinary life accounts for the introduction of a less elevated element, and lends a special interest to the book as a picture of contemporary Jewish society.

The Song of Praise of the works of Creation (xlii. 15—xliii. 33) is a very powerful and beautiful composition, and the eulogy of the nation's great men runs over the whole roll of the O. T. heroes, the omission however of Ezra, Daniel and Mordecai being remarkable. The passing hit at the hated Samaritan community (l. 25, 26) merits observation as an expression of the contemporary Jewish feeling.

The Prologue by the translator deserves especial notice for its reference to the Jewish Scriptures under the threefold title of "the Law, the Prophets, and the rest of the writings."

The name "Ecclesiasticus" dates from the time of Cyrian, and has been in common use in the Western Church. It has no connexion with Ecclesiastes, but was so called from its being extensively used for public reading in the Church.

The Book of Baruch. This book is so called because it purports to contain a work written by Baruch, the prophet, in Babylon, in the 5th year after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, which having been read in the ears of king Jechonias and all the captives who dwelt "by the river Sud" was sent on to Jerusalem.

There is no doubt however that this is a pseudepigraphic title, and the few historical statements which it makes are irreconcilable with the Scriptural narrative.

The book falls into two main divisions, distinct from each other both in language and subject-matter:

A. i. 1—iii. 8. (a) i. 1—14, the historical introduction; (b) i. 15—iii. 8, the prayer and confession of Israel in captivity.

B. iii. 9—v. 9. (a) iii. 9—iv. 4, the praise of Wisdom; (b) iv. 5—v. 9, a psalm of return from exile.

The two portions of the book have no connexion with one another: and there can be little doubt that having been composed at very different times they were joined together by a compiler, who also prefixed the Preface attributing the completed work to Baruch.

The first portion was, possibly, originally written in Hebrew; the latter has the appearance of having been written from the first in Greek.

The date of the composition of these two fragments is very uncertain. The references to the capture of Jerusalem may, according to some writers, be allusions to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; but bearing in mind the analogous use of the Chaldean capture in the Apocalypses of Esdras and Baruch we may possibly be right in accepting the theory that the former fragment refers to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. In the latter portion, chap. v. presents a verbal similarity to Ps. Sol. xi.; and as this latter work is the more coherent, terse and compact of the two, Baruch is probably an expansion of Ps. Sol. xi., and therefore not to be placed earlier than the Christian era.

If this be so, the compilation of Baruch can hardly be earlier than the last decade of the 1st cent. A.D. It is noteworthy that the book seems never to have found acceptance with the Jews.

It is first quoted by Athenagoras and then by Irenæus who cites chap. v. After the 2nd cent. the fathers constantly quote iii. 37 as a prediction of the Incarnation.

Attached to the Book of Baruch (as chap. vi. in A.V.) is the so-called Epistle of Jeremy, purporting to be a letter written by the prophet Jeremiah to the Jews that were being carried away captive to Babylon. This again is a pseudepigraphic work. It is a monotonous denunciation of idolatry, destitute of any power or originality. It was probably the work of a Jew of Alexandria who wrote in the last century B.C.

The Book of Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremy are generally grouped with the writings of Jeremiah in the MSS. of the LXX.; the order being Jeremiah, Baruch, Lamentations, Ep. of Jeremy.

The Song of the Three Holy Children. The Song in the Greek Bible follows upon Dan. iii. 23, and is followed by Dan. iii. 24. It purports to be the Song sung by Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-Nego (Ananias, Azarias and Misael of verse 66) in the midst of the burning fiery furnace (vv. 29—68), but it is preceded by the prayer of Azarias (vv. 3—22) and a description of their preservation in the flames which consumed the Chaldean servants (vv. 23-27).

There is no proof that this fragment ever existed in Hebrew. The prayer of Azariah is a prayer of repentance on behalf of the people composed in imitation of Dan. ix. and Ezra ix. The Song of the Three Children is a Song of Thanksgiving addressed to the works of Creation, but only in one verse are its contents applicable to the situation of the Three Children; and this verse has doubtless been inserted for the purpose. The greater portion of the Song, 35-68, is familiar in the services of the Church as the "Benedicite." Its composition is to be explained as an expansion of canonical Psalms of thanksgiving (e.g. Ps. cxlviii.).

The History of Susanna. This story describes how Daniel as a young man procured the vindication of Susanna from a shameful charge, and the condemnation of the two elders who had borne false witness against her. It is probably an example of a large class of anecdotes which popular tradition associated with the names of bygone heroes. According to some the story was aimed at the abuse of authority by Jewish elders. According to others it is a play on the name of Daniel, and was intended to illustrate his skill in judgement.

The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon. In this fragment we have two more anecdotes related of Daniel. In the first, Daniel discovers to the king Cyrus the frauds practised by the priests of Bel in connexion with the pretended banquets of that idol. In the second he bursts the sacred dragon that was worshipped at Babylon; and having been on that account cast for six days by the Babylonians into the lions' den, he is not touched by the lions; the prophet Habakkuk is transported from Judea by the angel of the Lord to fetch him food; and on the seventh day the king releases Daniel and puts to death his enemies.

The character of these stories is trifling and childish. They were composed apparently for the purpose of bringing idolatry into ridicule. The career of Daniel lent itself for adaptation and exaggeration into tales, which for the most part seem to have originated in Alexandria.

The Prayer of Manasses, king of Judah. There is very little reason for giving this title to the penitential prayer called after the name of the King of Judah. Except the statement that the speaker is "bowed down with many iron bands" there is no ground for the traditional identification; which is in all probability the guess of some ingenious copyist. The prayer itself is for the most part built up of sentences and phrases taken from the Canonical Scriptures. It is not in the LXX.

The First Book of the Maccabees. The importance of this work for our knowledge of Jewish history in the 2nd cent. B.C. can hardly be surpassed. It recounts with great minuteness the whole narrative of the Maccabean movement from the accession of Antiochus Epiphanes (175) to the death of Simon (135). The persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes and the national rising led by the aged priest Mattathias (i., ii.), the heroic war of independence under the lead of Judas the Maccabee (iii.-ix. 22), the recovery of religious freedom and political independence under Jonathan (160-143) and Simon (143-135) (ix. 23-xv.), mark the chief divisions of the stirring period which the book chronicles.

The author speaks of his acquaintance with "the acts of John" (Hyrcanus) and "the chronicles of his priesthood" (xvi. 23, 24). He therefore writes either at the close of the reign of John Hyrcanus (+ 105) or very shortly after.

For the remarkable accuracy of his history he was probably indebted to some special means of access to contemporary chronicles as well as to acquaintance with those who had taken part in the great struggle. He wrote in Hebrew or Aramaic; the Greek text in which the book has survived is an admirable example of translation.

One feature of excellence which occurs here for the first time in Jewish literature, is his accurate method of determining dates by means of a recognised era, that of the Seleucidæ (312). The general style is simple and clear. There is a conspicuous absence of exaggeration and legend, the chief exception being noticeable in connexion with the numbers of the Syrian troops engaged with the Jewish forces.

The writer was evidently a strong partisan of the Asmonean house, and ascribes the glory of the great national deliverance solely to the prowess of the three brothers, Judas, Jonathan and Simon. His references to the worship, the sacred books, and religious usages of his people shew that he was a devout Jew. It has been observed that he shrinks from the use of the divine name, and makes no reference to the doctrine of the resurrection. There can be little doubt that of the two rising parties among the Jews he was to be found among the ranks of the Sadducees.

The Second Book of the Maccabees. The historical contents of this book commence at ch. ii. 19. It is not an original work, but represents an abridgment of a history in five volumes written by Jason of Cyrene (ii. 23). It deals with the history of the Jews during fifteen years (175-160), and therefore goes over part of the period described in 1 Macc. Its inferiority both in simplicity and accuracy is very obvious; but its narrative supplies valuable confirmation of the facts of this period, more especially as there is no doubt that the two books are quite independent of one another.

The style is diffuse and rhetorical; and the element of legend and exaggeration is introduced with great freedom. The stories of Heliodorus' sacrilegious attempt (ch. iii.), of the martyrdom of Eleazar and the seven brethren (chs. vi., vii.), of the death of Antiochus Epiphanes (ch. ix.), and of Judas' dream (ch. xv.), offer examples of this characteristic.

The history breaks off at the description of the defeat and death of Nicanor, and it may be doubted whether the work of abridgment was concluded.

The book was clearly written originally in Greek, and at a time late enough for legends to have grown up around the events described. The epitomizer in all probability was an Egyptian Jew of the 1st cent. a.c. The admixture of religious comment and miraculous incident indicates that the object of the work was religious edification based upon the wonders wrought by the Lord rather than the formation of an accurate chronicle of events. As compared with 1 Macc., it will be observed that the Asmonean heroes are regarded with honour but only in the light of instruments for effecting the divine deliverance of the people; and further that the doctrine of the resurrection is strongly affirmed. The writer was probably an adherent of the Pharisaic party.

The two Epistles prefixed to the Epitome (i.—ii. 18) have no connexion with the history. They purport to have been written by the Jews of Jerusalem to the Jews in Egypt, with the view of urging them to observe the feasts of the sacred year. They are of no historical value, but contain some strange legends, notably those respecting Jeremiah and Nehemiah.

3. INTRODUCTIONS TO THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, WITH ANALYSES OF THEIR CONTENTS.

By THE REV. J. O. F. MURRAY, M.A.

The books of the New Testament fall into two main divisions: those that contain the Gospel, i.e. the life and words of Jesus Christ, and those that contain the history and writings of the earliest leaders of the Church.

Characteristics of the Gospels.

The Gospel is contained in four books, two called after apostles, two after companions of the apostles. The same Person is brought before us, in the main the same story is told, four times over. But there is no mere repetition, for each writer sees the life he is describing from his own point of view, and no two of them were writing for the same class of readers. Thus St Matthew's interest lay in the past, and he wrote to shew his own countrymen, the Jews, how the life of Jesus had fulfilled all that was written in the Law and the Prophets concerning the Christ. St Mark lives in the present. He writes for Romans and gives them a living picture of a living man. St Luke looks forward to the day when all flesh shall see the salvation of God, and writing in the first instance for his own countrymen, the Greeks, brings before them one who was fitted to be the Saviour of all nations in every age. St John, writing long after the other three for the instruction of the Christian Church, gazes on the eternal mysteries which had been brought to light by the Incarnation of the Word.

Corresponding to these differences between the writers of the Gospels and between the classes of readers to which they were originally addressed, there is a difference between the features in the character of the Lord which stand out most prominently in each. Thus the first three help us to see in Jesus the perfect Son of man, St John shews us the same Jesus as the perfect Son of God.

Again, St Matthew brings before us the King and the Judge of Israel. The characteristics of his portrait are authority and tenderness.

St Mark brings before us the Prophet, the Man of God mighty in word and deed. Energy and humility are the characteristics of his portrait.

St Luke, whose Gospel ends, as it begins, in the Temple, brings before us our great High Priest, instant in prayer to God and of perfect sympathy with men.

St John's Gospel reveals the glory of the only-begotten of the Father in a life of absolute obedience.

Growth of the Written Gospels.

The facts on which the apostles laid most stress in the earliest public teaching were the Death and Resurrection of the Lord. But we learn from Acts i. 22 that it was regarded as essential that an apostle should have personal knowledge of the life and teaching of Jesus during the whole period between the Baptism of St John and the Ascension: and it is this period which was embraced in the earliest form of the written Gospel. St Mark traces "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ" from the advent of the Baptist; and we may well believe that, had the close of his book been preserved to us, it would have carried on the narrative beyond the Resurrection.

But it soon became necessary to prefix to this some account of the Nativity, and other events connected with it: and such accounts we have in the Gospels of St Matthew and St Luke.

The outline of the Gospel story was now complete. It remained for St John to supply important details which were omitted by the Synoptists, to throw new light on the progress of the revelation of Christ's Person, and generally to present His life and teaching in a theological aspect to meet the growing needs of the Church.

It is not easy to determine whether, or to what extent, the writers of the different gospels were independent of each other. An examination of passages found in St Mark in common with St Matthew, and in some cases with St Luke, gives the impression that in very many instances St Mark presents us with the earliest form of the narrative; and we may feel confident that in these instances the words which St Mark gives us lay before the other Synoptists, each of whom has modified them from his own standpoint, sometimes by compressing the story and sometimes by adding further detail from other sources of his own. Similarly, when certain passages common to St Matthew and St Luke are compared, another early basis seems to come into view.

Whether these early bases lay before the evangelists as written documents, or only as an oral tradition the words of which had gradually become fixed through constant repetition, is open to question. But the terseness of the narratives and the general absence of comments such as would naturally fall from a teacher's lips, point rather in the direction of a written record.

St Matthew. The genealogy brings before us in outline the whole past history of Israel. The closing words of the Gospel point onward to the end of the world, but the main subject of the book is the life of our Lord from His birth at Bethlehem to His appearance in Galilee after His resurrection.

It may be divided into four parts:—

I. The first (i.—iv. 16) forms an introduction to the ministry, emphasizing the relation of the Nativity to history and prophecy (i., ii.), and narrating as its immediate preparation the work of the Baptist, and the Temptation (iii.—iv. 11). It closes with the removal from Nazareth to Capernaum.

II. The second (iv. 17.—xvi. 20) describes the ministry in Galilee, working out in six stages the history of the growth of faith in the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, culminating in St Peter's confession (xvi. 16), the central point of the whole Gospel.

1. The first stage (iv. 17.—23) describes the call of the earliest disciples and the rousing of popular attention.

2. The second (v.—vii.), in the Sermon on the Mount (see p. 184), brings under one view the main points of the new teaching. In it Jesus claims to perfect what Moses had begun, and on His own authority declares the laws of the Kingdom of Heaven.

3. The third (viii.—xi. 1) describes ten mighty works by which the powers of the Kingdom were revealed, and tells of the selection and the commissioning of the twelve.

4. The fourth (xi. 2.—xii.) shews our Lord's attitude to those who questioned His claims. The doubt of the Baptist and the answer to it lead up to a stern rebuke of the towns of Galilee and to one more tender invitation (xi. 2—30); then come three great controversies with the Pharisees with respect to the Sabbath (xii. 1—21), the source of His authority over evil spirits (22—37), and the demand for a sign from Heaven (38—45). The section closes with a declaration of the true ground of spiritual kinship (46—50).

5. The fifth (xiii.) contains seven parables in which our Lord revealed the secrets of the Kingdom to those who could hear, and closes with His rejection at Nazareth.

6. The sixth (xiv.—xvi. 20) begins with the story of the death of the Baptist (xiv. 1—12). Then follows the feeding of the 5000 and other miracles (13—36), rousing the enthusiasm of the people, which is checked by the return from Jerusalem of the Pharisees, who openly challenge Jesus on a question of tradition (xv. 1—20). Then follows a journey northwards outside the limits of the Holy Land (21—39), a return to the lake and a fresh conflict (xvi. 1—12), after which He again retires northwards, and the Galilean ministry is crowned by the confession of His Messiahship by St Peter (13—20).

III. The third division (xvi. 21.—xxv.) leads up to the public assertion of Messiahship. Throughout it our thoughts are turned towards Jerusalem; the events of humiliation and of triumph that are to happen there are the main subject of the teaching. The journey to claim the Messiahship openly at the capital is the main subject of the narrative. It contains three parts:—

1. The first (xvi. 21.—xx. 16) consists of scenes on the road to Jerusalem, beginning with the first prophecy of the Passion which followed immediately on the great confession at Caesarea Philippi (21—23), and the Transfiguration so closely connected with both (xvii. 1—21). Then comes a scene at Capernaum (22.—xviii. 35) containing a second prophecy of the Passion, the miracle of the tribute money, and a series of teachings on humility, discipline, and forgiveness, for the guidance of the leaders of the Church. It is closed by a scene in Perea (xix. 1.—xx. 16) which includes teaching on marriage, and reveals the conditions of spiritual blessing in answer to the questions 'What shall I do?' 'What shall we have?'

2. The second (xx. 17.—xxiii.), after a third prophecy of the Passion and a second lesson to the disciples on humility (xx. 17—23), contains the triumphal entry into Jerusalem (29.—xxi. 11), the cleansing of the Temple and the controversy to which that act gave rise (12.—xxii. 46), and a solemn denunciation of the Pharisees (xxiii.).

3. In the third (xxiv., xxv.) the Lord instructs His disciples concerning the judgement which was coming on the rebellious city and on all the nations of the earth.

IV. The last division (xxvi.—xxviii.) contains the story of the death and of the resurrection, bringing out especially the national guilt in the Crucifixion and the national evasion of the evidence for the Resurrection. The closing scene takes us back to Galilee. The closing words declare that the King has received a worldwide dominion, and that the promise of Emmanuel is fulfilled for His servants to the end of time.

St Mark. The Gospel of St Mark, as tradition and internal evidence agree in assuring us, contains reminiscences of St Peter's preaching. It begins with a twofold reference to prophecy introducing a short notice of the work of the Baptist (i. 1-8). Then Jesus Himself appears, and is baptized with water and the Spirit; and in the power of the Spirit meets the tempter (9-13). Then come the opening of the Galilean ministry (14-39), the first preaching (14, 15), the call of the first disciples (16-20), and a full account of one day's work in Capernaum (21-39).

So far we have had popular excitement but no opposition. The next section (i. 40-iii. 6) defines our Lord's relation to the Pharisees, shewing His loyalty to Moses even in touching a leper (40-45) and the ground of His authority to forgive sins (ii. 1-12), and again, the disregard of traditional notions of propriety (13-22) and of traditional rules of Sabbath observance (23-iii. 6), which brought upon Him the deadly opposition of the religious leaders.

The next section (iii. 7-vi. 6) defines our Lord's relation to the people. It shews how true disciples were sifted out from the crowd, and describes the appointment and training of the twelve from their selection to their first independent commission. It begins with the appointment of the twelve (iii. 7-19). Then Jesus declares the source of His authority over evil spirits, and the ground of spiritual kinship (20-35). He illustrates in parables the conditions for the reception of truth (iv. 1-20), responsibility for the spread of it (21-25), and its own inherent power of growth (26-32). The section closes with three examples of His work among the people and of their attitude towards Him, first among the Gerasenes (iv. 35-v. 20), next on the way to, and within, the house of Jairus (v. 21-43), and lastly at Nazareth (vi. 1-6).

From this point until the final crisis at Jerusalem (vi. 6-x. 31) the narrative illustrates stages in the training of the twelve. The section begins with an account of their first practical experience of the work (6-13) and with the example of the end of a prophet in Israel (14-29). On their return they share with their Master in one of His most wonderful works (30-44), and learn that He is watching over them even from afar (45-52). The controversy with the Pharisees touching purification (vii. 1-23), and the work which He did for aliens on alien land (24-viii. 10), taught them that no kind of meat and no race of men was unclean in the sight of God. Then, after a rebuke for their dullness (11-21) and a miracle which is remarkable as being the one instance of a gradual cure, and which in consequence supplies a natural illustration of the slow development of their spiritual sight (22-26), their faith is brought to the test of open confession (27-30) and disciplined by the prophecy of the coming Passion (31-ix. 1); then follows the Transfiguration (2-13), giving 'a surer hold on the prophetic word,' and the cure of the demoniac boy (14-29), illustrating the conditions of success in mighty works.

The rest of the section (ix. 30-x. 31) records the teaching on the way to Jerusalem. First (ix. 30-50) at Capernaum He teaches the twelve to be humble and tolerant and self-disciplined. Then in Persea (x. 1-31) He explains the doctrine of marriage to the Pharisees and to His own followers (1-12). By blessing the little children, and by His answers to the young ruler and to Peter, He teaches that a childlike heart and detachment from worldly things are conditions of entrance into the Kingdom.

The crisis at Jerusalem (x. 32-xiii.) turns on the question of authority. The character of the authority is made clear in the answer to the sons of Zebedee (x. 32-45). Then publicly accepting the title of the Son of David, first from Bartimeus and then from the multitude, He enters Jerusalem to claim His true position (x. 46-xi. 11). He exercises the authority so claimed in a miracle of judgement and in the cleansing of the Temple (12-26). His claim is challenged and justified (27-xii. 12), and tested by cunning questions (13-37), after which He takes leave of the people with a parting warning against their leaders (38-40) and a gracious recognition of a very humble act of devotion (41-44). Chapter xiii. contains His last teachings for His disciples on the signs of His return.

The story of the Passion is contained in chapters xiv. and xv. The Gospel breaks off abruptly in the middle of the story of the Resurrection (xvi. 8). A later hand has added a short compendium of the appearances after the Resurrection, apparently drawn for the most part from the other Gospels.

St Luke. In his Preface (i. 1-4) St Luke pleads the example of many predecessors for the attempt he is about to make and promises on the ground of careful investigation an orderly and accurate account of the traditions of the Gospel narrative received from eyewitnesses.

He then begins with an account of the Birth, Infancy, and Boyhood, of the Baptist and of the Saviour (i., ii.), bringing into prominence throughout the action of the Holy Spirit, the work of women, the adoration of the poor, and the anticipation of a coming deliverer. He sketches next the ministry of the Baptist (iii. 1-20), noting its place in the history of the world, and the lessons it contains for Gentile as well as for Jew. Then the account of the Saviour's ministry begins (iii. 21). He comes forward as one of the chosen people to John's baptism. After the baptism the Spirit descends upon Him, and the voice of the Father claims Him as His Son. He is now of full age, a true son, as the genealogy shews, of Adam, the son of God. Led by the Spirit into the wilderness He meets and foils the devil (iv. 1-13) and returns in the power of the Spirit to commence His work in Galilee (14, 15). At His old home the largeness of His mission is made the ground of His rejection.

tion (16-30). At Capernaum, after a day of healing, He has to leave those who would try to keep His works of power to themselves (31-44).

At this point, clearly out of strict chronological sequence, St Luke introduces his account of the call of the first four disciples (v. 1-11) after a miraculous draught of fishes. Then follow, in close connexion as in the first two Gospels, the healing of the leper (12-16) and of the paralytic (17-26), the call of the publican and the feast at his house (27-39), and two conflicts with the Pharisees touching the Sabbath (vi. 1-11); a group well fitted to illustrate characteristic aspects of the work He had come to do.

The settled opposition of the Pharisees creates the necessity for a new organization. So He chooses twelve apostles to be more directly associated with Him in His work (12-19). The ministry under these new conditions opens with a sermon (20-49), in great part identical with the Sermon on the Mount recorded by St Matthew, unfolding a new conception of happiness and duty, and laying down the privileges and conditions of discipleship. Then He shews the power of His word by healing a centurion's servant, and calling back the widow's son to life (vii. 1-17).

Then in answer to the Baptist He leaves His work to be its own witness (vii. 18-23), and warns the people that none but the children of wisdom can understand her ways (24-35). An example of His meaning is supplied by the scene in the house of Simon the Pharisee (36-50), where He vindicates His prophetic character by reading the hearts of men, and the sinful woman is saved by her faith in Him.

Turning now to those who are willing to listen, He utters and expounds the parable of the sower, and declares the true ground of kinship with Himself (viii. 1-21). Then a group of four mighty works—the stilling of the storm, and the cure of the demoniac, followed by the healing of the issue and the raising of Jairus' daughter—reveals here, as in the first two Gospels, His power to control the natural and spiritual forces of the universe, and to restore health and even life itself in answer to the faith of men (22-56).

After these lessons the Twelve are sent out on their first independent commission (ix. 1-6), and on their return take part in the feeding of the 5000 (10-17). St Luke then passes on at once to the scene in which their faith is brought to the test of open confession, and they are first told of the coming Passion (18-27). Then follow the Transfiguration (28-36) and the healing of the demoniac boy at the foot of the Mount (37-42). Then in view of the work which they will have to do after He has gone, He calls on His chosen to pay heed to His teaching (43-45), to be humble one towards another (46-48), sympathetic towards all workers in the same cause (49, 50), and patient even under provocation (51-56).

His face is now set towards Jerusalem, and He has need of more fellow-workers. So

St Luke brings before us three typical applicants for discipleship (ix. 57-62), and then describes the mission of the Seventy, with its strange blending of sadness and joy (x. 1-24). It was a last appeal to the cities and villages of Palestine, and its rejection would seal their doom; at the same time it was in itself an evidence that the work had not been in vain—the Father had revealed His secret unto babes.

Then come the parable of the Good Samaritan (25-37) and the story of Martha and Mary (38-42), revealing the double aspect of the disciple's duty, in active benevolence towards every fellow-creature and in patient hearkening to the Master's word, and crowned by a lesson in prayer (xi. 1-13).

At this point our thoughts are turned from the disciples to the people at large. The appeal made to them had hitherto met with merely passive resistance. Men heard, and refused to repent or to obey. Henceforward He meets active opposition by warnings of coming judgement. The first stage in controversy deals with the evidence for the Saviour's mission. In connexion with His power over evil spirits and the people's demand for a sign from heaven, He declares that His work is its own evidence, but bids them beware lest the good He is doing should prove the occasion of a worse evil (xi. 14-26); and by examples taken from Gentile lands in less favoured generations He warns them to be faithful to the light that they still possess, lest it should be taken away (29-36).

The next stage contains a deliberate attack on the religious leaders of the people, shewing how the Pharisees, by fixing their attention on outward rather than inward purity, had lost all sense of proportion in duty, and while making an idol of popularity had become a source of pollution instead of purification for the people (xi. 37-44), and how the lawyers, having lost all sympathy with the people, were on the point of crowning the guilt of their fathers, and were barring the gate which they had been commissioned to open (45-52). From the leaders He turns to the people, and warns them first against the hypocrisy which springs from fear of men and forgetfulness of God (xii. 1-12); then against a false estimate of the value of riches (13-21), and against anxiety about the supply of earthly needs (22-34), bidding His disciples rather lay up heavenly treasure in expectation of His coming (35-40), using and not abusing the powers entrusted to them (41-48), and not flinching even under fiery trial (49-53). Turning back to the multitude, He closes with an earnest appeal for timely repentance (54-59). The warning with which this chapter closes is carried on into the next. Lessons drawn from incidents of the time are enforced by a parable declaring that the last year of grace has begun (xiii. 1-9). The opposition of a ruler of the synagogue to a miracle on the Sabbath illustrates once more the contrast between the rival claimants for the leadership of the people (10-17). Two parables picture the universality of the Kingdom (18-21), and the people are warned that the privileges they have enjoyed will not of themselves prevent their exclusion from it (22-30). And then, in answer to the Pharisees, the Lord prophesies the consummation of the guilt and the doom of Jerusalem (31-35).

In the next section (xiv.-xvii. 10) the contrast between the Saviour and the Pharisees is still further developed, and the Gospel is offered freely to the outcast. It begins with yet another cure worked on the Sabbath in the presence of the Pharisees (xiv. 1-6). Then in conversation at a feast He brings out the laws of courtesy among guests and of true hospitality (7-14), and hints that these laws apply to the heavenly banquet by a parable (15-24) which foretells the exclusion of the self-satisfied, and the admission of the needy. The offer of salvation is thus thrown open to all. But they are warned to count the cost of discipleship before closing with it (25-35). Even so it proved attractive to the most degraded (xv. 1, 2), and the Saviour, in the parables of the Lost Sheep, the Lost Coin, and the Lost Son, entreats the Pharisees to share with Him the joy of this return of the lost (3-32). Then turning to His disciples, He warns them in the parable of the Steward of their responsibility to God for the powers intrusted to them, and bids them win eternal friendship by their use of their earthly possessions (xvi. 1-13). As this teaching only moved the Pharisees to sneer, He denounces their self-righteousness and their misunderstanding of the Law (14-18). Then in the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus He illustrates the spiritual dangers arising from earthly possessions (19-31). The section closes with lessons to the disciples on the duty of avoiding offences (xvii. 1, 2), and of untiring forgiveness, on the power of faith, and on the impossibility of merit (3-10).

In the last stage of the journey to Jerusalem, after blessing the faith of the grateful Samaritan leper (11-19), Jesus develops the doctrine of the Kingdom (xvii. 20-xix. 48). He shews first how, when, and where the Kingdom is to be expected (xvii. 20-37); then the need of importunate prayer for its manifestation (xviii. 1-8), hinting that the coldness of the Church was the real cause of the delay, and shewing, by the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican, the condition of an acceptable approach to God (9-14). At this point St Luke comes back to the regular current of the Synoptic narrative, which he left in ix. 51; and by a group of narratives containing the blessing of the children, the answer to the rich young ruler, and Peter's question, 'What shall we have?' he teaches, as do St Matthew and St Mark, that a child-like heart is a condition of entrance to the Kingdom (15-17): clinging to wealth excludes from, while sacrifice opens, the gate to eternal life (18-30). Then he adds to the prophecy of the Passion (31-34) and to the healing of the blind man already connected with Jericho (35-43), the repentance of Zac-chæus (xix. 1-10) and the parable of the Pounds by which Jesus tried to teach His disciples not to expect the Kingdom till His return (11-27). Then he describes the entry into Jerusalem (28-48), catching an echo of the angels' song in the Hosannas of the crowd, and recording the tears which the sight of the doomed city drew from its King even in the moment of His triumph. His description of the trial by cunning questions follows, with one omission, the same lines as that in St Mark. First the authority of Jesus is challenged by the rulers; in His reply He makes them confess their incompetence to judge any teacher's credentials (xx. 1-8) and lays bare the grounds of their opposition to His Father's messengers (9-18). Then he solves the difficult question of the lawfulness of paying tribute to Cæsar (19-26), and meets the doubts of the Sadducees touching the Resurrection (27-40); and after a counter question, by which He sought to lead them back to the Scriptures for a full prophetic description of the Person of the Messiah (41-44), He takes leave of the people with a warning against the ostentation of the scribes (45-47) and a gracious recognition of the poor widow's sacrifice (xxi. 1-4). His last public utterance described the signs which should precede, the distress which should accompany, and the redemption which should follow the fall of Jerusalem (5-28), closing with an exhortation to sober watchfulness (29-36).

The narrative of the Passion and Resurrection (xxii.-xxiv.) begins with an account of the preparations of the enemy (xxii. 1-6), followed by the Last Supper, and the Lord's last teachings, promises, and warnings, to His disciples (7-38). Then after His prayer (39-46), He is arrested as if He were a dangerous malefactor (47-53), denied by His chief apostle (54-62), insulted by the high priest's servants (63-65), condemned by the Sanhedrin (66-71), and at last, in spite of an acquittal both by Pilate and by Herod (xxiii. 1-12), is sentenced to be crucified (13-25). The story of the Cross begins with a warning to the daughters of Jerusalem (26-31); then from the Cross itself He made intercession for the transgressors and accepted the robber's penitence, and refusing to save Himself, committed His Spirit into His Father's hands (32-49).

We then read how He was laid in the grave by Joseph of Arimathæa as the Sabbath drew on (50-56), and how faithful women came at dawn on the third day and found the grave empty, and heard from angels that He was alive (xxiv. 1-12). Then He Himself appears to two sorrowing disciples (13-32), and to the assembled brethren (33-49), calming their excitement (36-39), assuring them of the reality of His resurrection body (40-43), explaining to them the prophecies of His sufferings, and bidding them proclaim to all nations the forgiveness He had won for them, as soon as they had received the promised Spirit (44-49). The Gospel closes with the Ascension (50-53).

St John. The object of this Gospel is to produce faith, and life through faith, in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God (xx. 31). It begins with a description of Him who is to be the subject throughout—the Word (i. 1–18), who in the beginning was with God, the source of life in all creation and of light in each man, who had become flesh, and as God Only-begotten had made the Father known.

This manifestation was attested by the Baptist and by chosen witnesses who had seen its glory and felt its power. The Baptist disclaims for himself any office but that of a herald (19–28), and points to Jesus as the Lamb of God, anointed with the Spirit with which He will baptize the world (29–34).

The next day the experience of the chosen witnesses begins. Intercourse with Him reveals His insight into, and His power over, the hearts of men (35–51). Returning home with six companions He works His first sign at a marriage-feast (ii. 1–11). The first stage of His revelation is now complete. He has shewn Himself to His friends as the Light of men and the Life of creation.

His first public act is the cleansing of the Temple. The act recalls to the disciples a feature in the Messianic portrait, but it only raises the question of authority in the minds of the Jews, who are told that they are powerless to destroy the outward symbol of God's presence among men (13–22). The people did not remain as coldly critical as their leaders. But Jesus refused to trust Himself to their undisciplined enthusiasm (23–25). And the reason for this reserve is brought out in the conversation with Nicodemus (iii. 1–15). He accepts Jesus as a teacher sent from God, and comes to Him for an exposition of His doctrine, expecting to understand it clearly, as soon as it is put before him. He learns that this is impossible. No one can see or enter the kingdom of God without the new birth to which both John and Jesus testified. Nor can one who has not himself come from heaven reveal its secrets. Still the Son of Man has come from heaven. And believers shall find life in Him when He has been crucified. For the gift of life was the object of His mission and not judgement, though judgement was inseparably connected with His coming (16–21). With this the account of the first stage in the public ministry closes. It contains a call in act and teaching to repentance and faith as the conditions of entrance into His kingdom.

Next comes the account of a brief ministry of baptism on the part of Jesus' disciples in Judea, leading to an answer given by John to his disciples explaining his own relation to Jesus (22–30), and to a declaration (31–36) of the source and character of the teaching of the Son of God, and of the consequence of disobeying Him. Retiring to Galilee, Jesus passes through Samaria, and in conversation with a Samaritan woman by Jacob's well (iv. 1–26) lays claim to the power of bestowing on man a gift of living water. Then after awaking in her the consciousness of His prophetic power, He declares the advent of a revelation of God as Father which shall set worship free from local limitations and so render obsolete the distinction between Samaritan and Jew. Then He explains to His disciples the sustaining power of obedience to the Father's will (27–38) and the law of the spiritual harvest-field which, transcending the limitations of time, unites the sowers and reapers of every age in a common joy. Meanwhile the woman's report brings out her townsfolk to hear for themselves, and to confess their faith in the Saviour of the world (39–42). Leaving Samaria, Jesus establishes Himself in Galilee (43–45), and a second sign (46–54) crowns a faith that was independent of sight.

Though Galilee thus becomes the regular scene of His ministry, He did not neglect Jerusalem. The healing of an impotent man there (v. 1–9) led to an important public statement of what He claimed to be and do. A charge of Sabbath-breaking arose out of the cure. Jesus met the charge by pleading His Father's example (10–17). The claim to divine Sonship involved in this plea led to a second charge (18), which Jesus met by disclaiming any power independent of His Father, while He repeated and expanded the claim to include the power of raising the dead and of judgement, declaring that His voice had a quickening power for those who heard it, and that His judgement, based on His obedience, was just (19–30). He then summarizes the evidence in support of His claim—the witness of the Baptist, of the works given Him by His Father, and of the Scripture—and shews why His self-abnegation was unintelligible to them (31–47).

The next scene brings us back to Galilee and contains two signs: the feeding of the five thousand (vi. 1–14) and the walking on the water (15–21). The first of these led to a long public discussion; the second was kept secret from the multitude. Jesus begins the discussion of the first sign with an appeal to men to come to Him for the satisfaction of their highest needs. To attain this they must surrender themselves in faith to Him. Such surrender requires evidence in support of His claim. This is supplied by the nature of the gift that God had given to the world in Him, the true manna, the bread of life. It requires also an action of their own will—they must come. This also is the Father's gift (22–40). Murmuring against this teaching is met by a further exposition of the Father's working in the hearts of men (41–46) and of the gift of His own Flesh for the life of the world (47–51). Cavils against the possibility of such a gift are met by a statement of the necessity and of the effect of participating in it (52–59). This teaching caused a secession even of disciples, and led to Simon Peter's confession and to the declaration of the presence of a traitor in the twelve (60–71).

These two chapters contain a complete statement of our Lord's public teaching about His own nature and the work that He came to do for men, and about the conditions and the necessity of faith in Him.

The next six chapters contain the controversy with the Jews at Jerusalem. Jesus, who has hitherto revealed Himself chiefly as the source and stay of the Life of men, reveals Himself now as their true Light. The revelation begins at a Feast of Tabernacles (vii.—x. 21). Jesus, having refused to go up publicly to the Feast (vii. 1—9), appears suddenly when it is at its height, and finds a division of opinion among the people about Him (10—13). He declares first (14—24) that knowledge of the source of His teaching would come through obedience to it, and not through murderous attacks upon Him for a supposed violation of the Law of Moses; that they did not know as yet His true origin (25—31); and that ere long He would return whence He came and be out of their reach (32—36). Then (37—52) He promises to believers refreshment and the power to refresh. This teaching rekindles the controversy about Him in the crowd, and questionings arise even in the Sanhedrin. His next claim is to be the Light of the world (viii. 12—20), because He alone knows whence He came and has the Father with Him in judgement and in testimony. He then points out the way to truth and freedom (21—59). Only by faith in Him could they find deliverance from their sins (21—23). But they must wait for proof of the truth of His claim till by their own act He had been raised on high (24—30). Meanwhile, abiding in His word would bring a freedom from slavery which none but the Son could give (31—36) and which they needed, for, as their conduct shewed, they were true sons neither of Abraham nor of God, but of the devil (37—47). This teaching seemed to them like the raving of a demoniac (48), but it is reasserted—He is the Son and honours his Father, and His word has promise of immortality: He knows the Father and 'is' before Abraham was born (49—59). Then (ix. 1—7), after teaching His disciples to spend their time in helping and not in judging their brothers, Jesus works a sign to illustrate His claim to be the Light of the world. The sign attracts the attention of the Pharisees (8—12). The fact being undeniable, they try to browbeat the man who had been cured into an admission that the author of his cure was a sinner. Failing in this, they excommunicate him (13—34). Jesus seeks him out, reveals Himself to him, and passes sentence on the Jews for their conduct (35—41). Then working out the contrast between true leadership and false, He shews that the true shepherd enters by the door and is recognised by the porter and by His sheep (x. 1—6). In contrast with thieves who aim only at self-aggrandizement or at wanton destruction, He claims to be the door through which the sheep pass to find rest and food (7—10). In contrast with hirelings He claims to be the Good Shepherd who knows His sheep and will lay down His life for them, that He may unite them into one and prove worthy of His Father's love (11—18). This teaching brings out once more the divisions of the people and the old charge of 'possession' (19—21).

At the Feast of the Dedication He is once more pressed to declare Himself, and replies that He has already declared Himself in word and deed, but that only His sheep understand Him and are safe in His, that is, His Father's keeping (22—31). This claim to divine power is called blasphemy. But Jesus supports it by reference to the titles conferred on the judges of Israel in the Old Testament, and by the works which His Father wrought through Him (32—39), and then He retires beyond Jordan (40—42). The death of a friend calls Jesus out of His retirement even at the risk of His life (xi. 1—16). He first reveals Himself to Martha as the Resurrection and the Life, and then goes with her and with her sister weeping to the tomb (17—38) and calls Lazarus back from the grave (39—44). This is the last sign before His own Resurrection, and it brings the conflict with the Jewish authorities to a head. The Pharisees combine with the chief priests in decreeing His death as the only way of saving the nation (45—53). Jesus meanwhile waits at Ephraim until it is time to go up to the Passover (54—57). Six days before the feast He returns to Bethany, and is anointed as for His burial by Mary, the sister of Lazarus, though Judas protests against the waste (xii. 1—11). The next day He enters Jerusalem in triumph (12—19). The request of certain Greeks to see Him leads to His last public teaching on the fruitfulness and necessity of sacrifice, by suggesting the thought of the harvest which the Gentile world would yield (20—26). The shadows of His coming Passion then gather round His soul, and He prays aloud for the glory of His Father's Name. A Voice from heaven answers Him, and then He proclaims the judgement of the world, the casting out of its prince and the drawing of all men to Himself through the Cross (27—33). These words suggest a difficulty. (Can the Lamp of the Anointed be put out? It is met by a solemn warning. Men may shut out the light from themselves (34—41). So the public ministry closes with a last declaration of the consequences of faith and unbelief (42—50).

The teaching contained in chapters xiii.—xvii. was addressed to disciples, to prepare them for the new relation with Himself which His death would introduce; to teach them the work which they would have to do for Him after He had left the world, and the power of prayer in His Name; and to make them long for the coming of the Paraclete who would unite them to their Lord and make them strong to work for Him. It begins with the cleansing of the company, first by a symbolic washing (xiii. 1—20), and then by the dismissal of the traitor (21—30). Being now left alone with the faithful, He gives them the new commandment to keep for His sake, and after His example (31—35):

He warns Peter that the strength in which he was trusting would that night prove weakness (36-38). He then explains the purpose of the coming separation, and tells them that they know the way to follow Him (xiv. 1-4); for He is the Way to the Father (5-7), who has already been revealed in the Son (8-14). Then coming back to His commandments, He consecrates them as means by which His disciples can shew their love to Him and receive the gift of the Spirit, marking their distinction from the world, and completing their illumination (15-26). Meanwhile He gives them His peace, and bids them rejoice with Him in His return home (27-31). At this point the company seem to have left the upper room and to have gone together for a last visit to the Temple courts. There, under the figure of the vine, the consecrated symbol of God's chosen people, He explains to His disciples the fruitfulness which His Father expected from the branches, and the method by which it might be secured (xv. 1-10). He then reminds them of His own claim on them for fruitfulness (11-16), and bids them love one another, bearing the world's hatred as He had borne it (17-25), and sharing with the Spirit in witnessing for Him before men (26, 27). The world's enmity might mean even death, but the Advocate would plead their cause against the world (xvi. 1-11), and would lead them into all the truth (12-15). Even the separation from Himself was only for a time, and the pain of it would prove fruitful in abiding joy and prevailing prayer (16-24). His last words promise yet closer intercourse in the time to come, both with the Father and the Son (25-28). The self-confident expression of faith with which these words are greeted calls out a renewed warning of coming failure, but the warning fades away into an assurance of ultimate and perfected victory in Him (29-33). Turning now from intercourse with men, He pleads with His Father for the restoration of His eternal glory (xvii. 1-5). Then He pleads for those who have believed in Him, that the Father would keep them in unity (6-11), taking up the work which He Himself must now relinquish (12, 13), and that He would sanctify them in the truth for which they would be His accredited representatives in the world (14-19). Then the horizon of the prayer extends till it includes all whom their labours would gather out of the world (20-24). It ends with an adoring acknowledgment of the Name which the world knew not, but which the Son had made known and would make known to men till the Father's love had found a resting-place in their hearts (25, 26).

Leaving the Temple courts the little band cross the Kidron to Gethsemane. There Jesus surrenders Himself to the soldiers who come, led by Judas, to arrest Him (xviii. 1-11). The only stage in the trial before the Jews recorded by St John is the preliminary examination before Annas (12-27). When Jesus is brought before Pilate, he refuses to condemn Him at Jewish dictation, and draws from Him a description of the kingdom which He claims. He then offers the people a chance of delivering their king, but they choose Barabbas (28-40). After this Jesus is scourged at Pilate's orders, and mocked by the soldiers. The Jewish rulers however will be satisfied with nothing less than crucifixion in expiation of the blasphemy of His claim to be the Son of God. This new charge leads to a fresh examination of the prisoner, by which the judge is taught the source of his own authority. He dares not however face a charge of disloyalty to the emperor, so he prostitutes justice to the threats of those who disclaim any king but Cæsar (xix. 1-16). The sentence is pronounced, and the King is crucified under His royal title, in spite of the protests of the Jews (17-22). At the foot of the cross the soldiers fulfil prophecy by their division of the prisoner's raiment (23, 24); and Jesus commits His mother to the keeping of the disciple whom He loved (25-27). This done, after one more utterance perfecting the Scripture, He pronounces His work finished and gives up the ghost (28-30). The necessity for haste caused by the approach of the Sabbath leads to the piercing of His side (31-37), and to burial in the rich man's tomb (38-42). Early on the first day of the week Mary Magdalene finds the tomb empty, and brings the news to Peter and John (xx. 1, 2). They verify the fact for themselves, and one of them understands its meaning (3-10). Mary stays by the tomb, and the Lord Himself appears to her and sends her with a message to His brethren (11-18). That same night He appears to the disciples and gives them a commission to the world (19-23). A week later, He appears to them once more, and after drawing from the doubter a most explicit confession of faith in His divinity, He pronounces a blessing on those who had believed without seeing (26-29), and the Evangelist records it as his purpose in writing his Gospel to produce such faith (30, 31). The last chapter records a third appearance to a group of disciples on the lake, accompanied by a miraculous draught of fishes and a mysterious breakfast on the shore (xxi. 1-14). After the meal, Simon Peter receives a special commission to shepherd his Master's flock, in recognition of his real, and now no longer self-reliant, affection (15-17). Then he is taught what to expect in his old age, but no direct answer is given to his question touching St John (18-23). The Gospel is closed with an attestation of the truth of the author (24), added apparently when the work was done, by the members of the little group of early disciples at whose instigation, according to an early tradition, St John composed his record.

The Acts of the Apostles. This book, as its opening words imply, is the 'Second Part' of the Gospel according to St Luke, completing the account given in that work of the things which Jesus began to do and teach between His Incarnation and His Ascension by an account of His administration of His Kingdom through the Spirit from His Throne in Heaven.

A full analysis of the book need not be attempted here. It is supplied sufficiently in the sketch of the History of the Apostolic Age (pp. 186-192). The unity of authorship throughout the book is sustained by strong linguistic evidence; and the author claims to have been an eyewitness of some of the events that he narrates. Thus it will be noticed that he marks his own accession to St Paul's company at Troas (xvi. 10), and drops the use of the first person when St Paul leaves Philippi (xvii. 1). About seven years later the narrative once more brings St Paul to Philippi. The author rejoins him and goes with him to Jerusalem (xx. 16-xxi. 17). We have no hint of his movements during the two years of St Paul's imprisonment at Cæsarea. But he embarks with St Paul for Rome, and is still at his side when he enters the Imperial city (xxvii. 1-xxviii. 15).

Analysis. The simplest outline of the book is supplied by our Lord's words in i. 8, "Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem (i. -v.), and in all Judæa and Samaria (vi.-ix. 31), and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (ix. 32-xxviii.).

I. The witness in Jerusalem begins, after a prelude containing the story of the Ascension (i. 1-14) and of the election of Matthias (15-26), on the day of Pentecost, with the fulfilment of the promise of the Father in the outpouring of the Spirit (ii. 1-13) and with Peter's explanation of the meaning of the sign (14-36), followed by the gathering and training of the first band of converts (37-47). We are then shewn how on two critical occasions the Sanhedrin deliberately refused to accept the apostolic witness. The first occasion arose out of the arrest of Peter and John for preaching in the Temple after the healing of the impotent man (iii. 1-iv. 4), and issued in a threat on the part of the rulers (5-22), answered by increased earnestness in prayer and work on the part of the Church (23-31), even though the leaven of hypocrisy which appeared in Ananias and Sapphira threatened her purity and called for a startling judgement to cast it out (32-v. 11). The second occasion arose out of the development of popular enthusiasm (12-16) and issued in a formal condemnation of the apostolic doctrine (17-42).

II. The witness in all Judæa and Samaria (vi.-ix. 31) is recorded in three stages, after the account of the appointment of the seven deacons (vi. 1-7). The first gives the occasion of the dispersion in the account of the martyrdom of Stephen (vi. 8-viii. 3). The second contains the work of Philip (viii. 4-40), including the evangelization of Samaria, where his work is supplemented by Peter and John (14-25), and the baptism of the Ethiopian eunuch (26-40). The third describes the conversion and the early preaching of Saul of Tarsus at Damascus and in Jerusalem (ix. 1-31).

III. The account of the spread of the witness to the end of the world falls into three subdivisions. The first (ix. 32-xi. 26) contains the opening of the door for the world-wide extension of the Gospel by the baptism of Cornelius (x. 1-xi. 18), and the establishment of the Church in Antioch (xi. 19-26). The second (xi. 27-xv. 35) describes the activity of the Church of Antioch through its accredited representatives Barnabas and Saul, including (a) the alms sent by their hands to Jerusalem at the time of the famine and Herod's persecution (xi. 27-xii.); (b) the solemn commission given them to evangelize, which issued in the establishment of Churches in Cyprus, at Antioch in Pisidia, at Iconium, at Lystra, and at Derbe (xiii., xiv.); and (c) the successful protest which they raised against the claim put forward by some members of the Church of Jerusalem to impose circumcision on all converts from heathenism (xv. 1-35). The third (xv. 36-xxviii.) contains in two stages an account of the independent missionary activity of Paul, the first culminating in the establishment of the Church in Ephesus (xix. 20); the second in two years' undisturbed preaching at Rome (xxviii. 30, 31). In the first of these we read how Paul, after his separation from Barnabas (xv. 36-xvi. 5), was led on step by step to Macedonia, where in face of bitter opposition he preached with great success (xvi. 6-xvii. 15) before passing on to Athens (xvii. 16-34) and to Corinth (xviii. 1-17). Leaving Corinth after nearly two years he revisits Jerusalem and Antioch (xviii. 18-23) and finally settles down for three years' work at Ephesus (xviii. 24-xix. 20). The preaching at Rome was in like manner the goal of a long course of providential leadings (xix. 21-xxviii. 30). His stay at Ephesus was closed abruptly by a riot (21-41); he passed thence through Macedonia to Corinth, and then pressed on to Jerusalem in spite of constant warnings of the danger that awaited him, only pausing at Miletus to bid farewell to the elders of the Ephesian Church (xx. 1-xxi. 16). After arriving at Jerusalem he had hardly time to greet the Church (xxi. 17-36) before he was seized by a Jewish mob, and was called upon to defend himself before the people (xxi. 37-xxii. 29) and before the Sanhedrin (xxii. 30-xxiii. 10); then after escaping from a plot against his life (11-35) he defended himself before Felix (xxiv.), before Festus (xxv. 1-12), and before Agrippa (xxv. 13-xxvi.); and finally, after an eventful voyage, was carried a prisoner to Rome (xxvii. 1-xxviii. 16). On his arrival he makes a solemn appeal to his fellow-countrymen and then turns to work among the Gentiles.

INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLES OF ST PAUL.

Grouping of the Epistles. St Paul's Ministry, dating from his Conversion, lasted about 30 years. All his extant letters belong to the last half of this period, and may be divided into four groups, separated from one another by a marked interval of time and to a certain extent by peculiarities of language and of doctrine.

1. 1 and 2 Thessalonians, A. D. 52, 53.
2. 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Romans, A. D. 57, 58.
3. Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, Philemon, A. D. 62, 63.
4. Titus, 1 and 2 Timothy, A. D. 66, 67 (?).

THE FIRST GROUP.

The first group (1 and 2 Thessalonians) was written from Corinth during St Paul's first visit to Europe. Thessalonica was the most important city in Macedonia, politically and commercially. It was a seaport, and it commanded by land all the traffic which went Romewards by the Via Egnatia. It contained also a large colony of Jews. The community to which the letters were addressed was in its infancy. Very few months can have elapsed since St Paul's first appearance among them (Acts xvii. 1), and he had been driven from the town before he had had time to consolidate his work. Still at least one enduring result had been secured. His heart had been knit into one with theirs, and he found the trial of absence hard to bear. Once and again (1 Thess. ii. 18) he had made plans to return to them, but in vain. Still, he had been able to send Timothy to cheer them, and to bring him word how they fared.

The first Epistle is the outcome of his thankfulness on Timothy's return.

I. Thessalonians. Analysis. After the salutation (i. 1), St Paul begins with thanksgiving (2-10) for the certainty of their election, and for the effect produced on others by the example of their conversion. He recalls (ii. 1-12) the memories of his stay among them, reminding them, perhaps in self-defence against Jewish slanders, of the courage and sincerity, the tenderness and self-devotion, with which he had exhorted them to walk worthily of the God who was calling them to His Kingdom. This thought gives rise to a fresh thanksgiving (13-16) for the power of God's Word in their hearts, and for the persecutions in which they were sharing with the Churches in Judæa, and with God's messengers in every age.

Then coming back to his own personal relations with them (ii. 17-iii. 13), he tells them of the pain (ii. 17-20) which separation from them had caused him, of his object (iii. 1-5) in sending Timothy on his late visit, of his gratitude to God (6-8) for their constancy, and of his prayers (9, 10) for another sight of them. The section closes with a solemn prayer (11-13) for his own restoration to them, and for their sanctification. Personal intercourse being for the present denied, written admonitions and instructions (iv., v.) must take its place. So he exhorts them to growth in grace (iv. 1, 2) by personal chastity (3-8), love of the brethren (9, 10), and unobtrusive diligence (10-12). He instructs them in the true relation of the doctrine of the Second Advent (iv. 13-v. 11) to the consolation of the bereaved (iv. 13-18), and to the warning (v. 1-6) and edification (7-11) of survivors.

He adds in conclusion short, far-reaching exhortations (12-24) to the laity (12, 13), the clergy (14, 15), and to the whole Church (16-22), culminating in a prayer and a promise (23, 24). Salutations, instructions, and the Grace (25-28) bring the letter to a close.

II. Thessalonians. In the interval that separated the Second Epistle from the First, the Church suffered severely from persecution (i. 4), and the prospect of an immediate return of the Lord fostered an unhealthy excitement (ii. 2) and seemed to countenance improvident idleness (iii. 6). Traditions of the Apostle's teaching, his first letter, or at least a letter purporting to be his (iii. 17, cf. ii. 2), had been used to fan the excitement.

Analysis. After the salutation (i. 1, 2), he gives thanks (3-10) for their steadfastness under persecution, and for the certainty of righteous retribution in the day of the Lord. Thanksgiving then passes into prayer (11, 12) for their perfecting. In the main body of the letter (ii. 1-12) he restates the doctrine of the day of the Lord, to guard against misrepresentation and to allay their excitement (1, 2). Before that day could come the revelation of evil must be perfected (3, 4), and the existing check on that revelation must be removed (5-7). When it did come it would bring with it a decisive manifestation of the judgement which was already at work (8-12).

The thought of judgement leads once more to thanksgiving for God's favour towards them (13, 14), to an appeal to them to stand firm (15), and to a prayer (16, 17) for their consolation. The Epistle concludes (iii.) with a request for their intercessions (iii. 1, 2), a declaration of faith in, and a prayer to, the Lord of the hearts of men (3-5), and finally with an emphatic assertion of the duty (6-16) of subordination and of work.

vv. 17, 18 contain the apostle's signature, the Grace.

Characteristics of the First Group.

The special aspect of doctrine prominent in this group illustrates the first stage of the apostolic preaching, as it is brought before us in the Acts. We see there (xvii. 16-34) that St Paul began his work in a heathen city by a call to repentance, in the name of the living God, and in preparation for the coming of Christ in judgement on the world. We find him here, in his letters to a newly-constituted Church, recalling constantly the thought of the Presence of God (1 Thess. i. 3, 9, [ii. 19], iii. 9, [13]), and drawing lessons of warning and comfort and hope from the certainty of the appearing of the Judge and Saviour.

His doctrine had been misunderstood, and some had disregarded his commands, but his authority in the Church was unchallenged. The enemies of the Gospel are as yet outside the fold.

THE SECOND GROUP.

1, 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Romans.

All the Epistles in the second group were written between Easter 57 and Easter 58--

1 Cor. towards the end of St Paul's three years' stay at Ephesus, 2 Cor. and probably Gal. during his journey through Macedonia, and Romans from Corinth.

Introduction to the Epistles to the Corinthians. St Paul's first visit to Corinth had lasted nearly two years. Corinth was the centre of all that was left of purely Greek life, and it was the meeting-place of many nationalities because the main current of the trade between Asia and Western Europe passed through its harbours. St Paul's converts came mainly from among the Greeks, men gifted by race with a keen sense of the joys of physical existence, with a passion for individual freedom, and a genius for rhetoric and dialectics; but trained in the midst of the grossest moral corruption, undisciplined and self-conceited.

Some time before the first of these letters was written he paid them a second visit (2 Cor. xii. 14, xiii. 1) to check some rising disorder (2 Cor. ii. 1, xiii. 2), and wrote them a letter, now lost (1 Cor. v. 9). They had also been visited by Apollos (Acts xviii. 27), perhaps by St Peter (1 Cor. i. 12), and by some Jewish Christians who brought with them letters of commendation from Jerusalem, and claimed allegiance as personal disciples of Christ (1 Cor. i. 12; 2 Cor. iii. 1, v. 16, xi. 23).

The First Epistle to the Corinthians. The immediate occasion of this letter was the departure of Timothy on a mission which was meant to extend to Corinth (1 Cor. iv. 17, xvi. 10; Acts xix. 22), the arrival of visitors from Corinth bringing news (1 Cor. i. 11, xvi. 17), and a letter from the Corinthian Church asking for St Paul's advice on various matters (1 Cor. vii. 1, 25, viii. 1, xi. 2).

It takes up one after another the different topics suggested by the news or the letter, and derives such unity as it possesses from the unity of the correspondents and not from logical connexion between its successive themes.

Analysis. The Epistle opens with a salutation (i. 1-3) reminding them of their union with fellow-worshippers throughout the world in consecration to a common Lord, and a thanksgiving (4-9) for their faith in the past, for God's gifts of utterance and knowledge to them in the present, and for His faithfulness as a sure ground of hope for them in the future.

St Paul then grapples at once with the twin spirits of partisanship and insubordination that threatened the unity of the Church and his authority among them (i. 10-iv. 21). He first lays bare the evil, and brings it face to face with the absolute claims of Christ (i. 10-17). Then, because the evil sprang from forgetting how teachers and learners were related to one another and to God, he reminds them that the story of the Cross owed nothing of its power in their hearts to his eloquence (18-25), to philosophic culture or to earthly position (26-31).

It seemed impotent and foolish to the world, but through it the Spirit revealed God's power to their faith (ii. 1-5) and God's wisdom (6-16) to those who had eyes to see it. But the Corinthians were still carnal, if not babes (iii. 1-4). Their partisanship proved them blind to the truth (5-17) that no teacher is more than an instrument in God's hands (5-9), set to his own task and rewarded for his own toil, but working with his fellows on one building (10-15), which it is woe for any man to destroy (16, 17). He has thus shewn them that the power of the message (i. 18-31), insight into its depths (ii.), and its fruitfulness (iii. 1-17), come entirely from God. Let them not look for light to their own wit or to their teachers'. They are Christ's (18-23), and their teachers too are His, out of reach of their criticism, and accountable to Him alone (iv. 1-5). Did they still take pride in partisanship? The lot of God's apostles was abject humiliation (6-13). Did they resent the sting of this rebuke? They must bear with a father's pleading (14-17), and, if need be, submit to his scourge (18-21).

The subject of the next section (v.-vii.) is chastity. In it St Paul deals first with a grievous scandal, and then with questions concerning marriage raised by the Corinthian letter. He first passes judgement on the offender, and on them for their toleration of him (v. 1-8), explaining by the way the duty of the Church to exercise discipline over the members of her own body (9-13), and suggesting the establishment of Church courts for the settlement of the disputes, which to their shame still arose between believers (vi. 1-11).

The obligation to chastity rests on the redemption and consecration of the body (12-20). There is no doubt a beauty in the celibate ideal, but those that have not a special gift of continence had far better marry (vii. 1-9). The marriage bond must not be broken. When separation is inevitable, the way of reconciliation must not be closed by a fresh marriage. This is the Lord's express command (10, 11). Further difficulties St Paul meets on his own authority. In cases where only the husband or the wife had accepted Christianity, he recommends the Christian neither to seek nor to refuse separation (12-16), on the general principle that a Christian should stay in that state in which God's call had found him (17-24). On the same principle, virgins in the present crisis had better not marry (28-31). The anxieties of wedded life hinder service (32-35). Still marriage is not forbidden (36-38). In like manner a widow may marry again, but she had better not (39, 40).

The next section (viii.-xi.) treats of 'meats offered to idols' and of the order of Christian worship. St Paul first justifies the doctrinal position of the 'stronger brethren.' It should matter nothing to a healthy conscience whether a piece of meat had formed part of a sacrificial victim or not (viii. 1-6). But the force of association was too strong for many. And what Christian could assert his freedom at the risk of leading a brother into sin (7-13)?

ix.-x. 13 contains an episode on Christian self-denial. The practice is illustrated by reference to St Paul's refusal of maintenance at the hands of the Corinthian Church. He, if any one (ix. 1, 2), might claim support from them (3-14). But for his own satisfaction he forbore (15-18). On principle he met each man on his own ground, for the Gospel's sake (19-23). And self-denial was a regular part of his Christian training (24-27). This leads him to enforce the necessity for watchful self-discipline by warnings drawn from the history of Israel in the wilderness (x. 1-13). So he returns to the subject of idolatry, giving the reason why they must by all means keep clear of it. The statue of the god and the meat of the victim might be innocent in themselves, yet they were sacraments of dæmoniack communion (14-22). So in practice they must be careful neither to confound liberty with license (23, 24), nor care with scrupulosity (25-30). God's glory and man's good supply a sure guide to conduct in every case (31-33).

In treating of public worship (xi. 2-34) he first enforces the rule that women should not appear unveiled in the assembly (2-16). Then he rebukes the partisanship and the disorder that disgraced even their sacred feasts (17-22), reminding them of the story of the institution of the Eucharist, and its direct relation to the death of the Lord and to their hopes of His return (23-27), and bidding them take heed to God's protest against the irreverence which would treat the Sacrament of their corporate Unity as an occasion for emphasizing divisions (28-34).

The next section (xii.-xiv.) expounds the relative importance, and regulates the use, of the gifts that accompanied the outpouring of the Spirit in the earliest days of the Church. The Corinthians needed a test of inspiration. The earliest creed supplied it (xii. 1-3). Genuine spiritual gifts were diverse, but one Spirit gave each his portion for the good of all (4-11), and the variety was necessary to the completeness of the body. So the weak must not envy the strong (12-20), nor the strong despise the weak (21-27). The Church had need of every kind, and each might aspire after the best (28-31).

But aspiration without love is ambition and destructive of the unity of the body, so he reminds them that all gifts are worthless without love (xiii. 1-3), sketches love in action (4-7), and shews that love in contrast with intellectual endowments is by nature eternal (8-13). Then coming back to 'the gifts' (xiv.) he brings out the claims of prophecy to the first place in their esteem in contrast with the more popular 'speaking with tongues,' on the ground that 'prophecy' was directly edifying to the congregation, while an ecstatic utterance in a tongue was useless without an interpreter (1-19), and that a tongue would repel, while prophecy would convert an unbeliever (20-25).

Then follow regulations for the use of these gifts in public (26-33), and the silence of women in the church (34-36), concluding with a strong assertion of the authority at the back of these regulations (37-40).

In ch. xv. St Paul argues with the opponents of the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. He begins by an appeal to history (1-11). His preaching and their faith had rested from the first on the historical fact of a resurrection (12-34). To one who believed the Apostles, and was conscious of the working in his own heart of the powers of the age to come, this one instance was enough to shew that the resurrection of the dead was neither impossible (12-15) nor 'contrary to experience' (16-19). In fact the resurrection of all men was as directly involved in Christ's resurrection as their death had been in Adam's fall. It would only be worked out stage by stage, but at last God should be all in all (23-28). Meanwhile, in this hope men seek baptism for the dead, endure a living martyrdom, and nerve themselves to moral effort (29-34).

Passing now from the fact to the manner of the resurrection (35-58), he first points out that the life in each seed passes through death into a new body (35-38), then that appropriate bodies are found even now for very different kinds of life on earth and in heaven (39-41), and then, in the light of these analogies, declares that the life of a man passes into a new and glorious embodiment even through the corruption of the grave (42-44). Our present bodies are made, as Adam's was, out of earthly materials to be the organs of our earthly life. Bodies fit to be the organs of our risen life must be made, as the last Adam's is, out of heavenly materials (44-49). Earthly frames are out of place in the new order, so whether with or without death they must be transformed, that mortality may be swallowed up in life, and death and sin be vanquished by the grace of God. In this hope we can work (50-58).

The letter closes (xvi.) with directions about the collection for the Christian poor at Jerusalem (1-4), an account of St Paul's plans (5-9), Timothy's (10, 11), Apollos' (12), final exhortations (13-18) and salutation (19-24).

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians. Shortly after writing the first letter St Paul was driven from Ephesus by a riot (Acts xix.). After staying but a short time in Troas his deep anxiety to learn what reception his letter had met with hurries him on into Macedonia, and there at last Titus meets him (vii. 6). The news on the main point was altogether good. His messenger had been well received (vii. 13), the Church had eagerly cleared herself of all complicity in the great offence (vii. 7-11), and had excommunicated the offender (ii. 5-11). So the strain is relaxed and the Apostle's heart overflows with thanksgiving. But a root of evil still remained among them, and even while he gives thanks he warns them of dangers (vi. 14) and of punishment in store for the impenitent on his arrival (xiii. 2). But this is not all. He had gained his point; but to do it he had had to strain the bond that united him to his converts almost to bursting, and he felt that a personal coolness had sprung up between them (vii. 2, xii. 15) which his unscrupulous opponents had been turning to their own account. So though almost at their doors he cannot come to them till he has poured out his whole heart toward them, telling them all his hopes and fears, and with tremendous irony picking up, for a contest in boasting, the gauntlet which his calumniators had thrown down.

Analysis. After the salutation (i. 1, 2) the Epistle opens with a thanksgiving for the consolation which attends Christian suffering (3-7) arising out of his own experience in the terrible crisis through which he had just passed in Ephesus, and of the confidence in God's protection which that crisis had been sent to deepen (8-11), a confidence grounded on a conscience void of offence towards God and towards them (12-14). He had indeed disappointed them of the double visit he had led them to expect. But he had not acted out of mere fickleness; as the herald of God's faithfulness to His promises he could not so trifle with his word (15-22). His change of plan came, as his letter had done, out of his desire to spare them a second painful interview (23-ii. 4). The chief offender had suffered enough now; it would be well to forgive him (5-11). Returning from this digression he describes his journey northwards to Troas and the restlessness which hurried him on, in spite of promising openings for work, into Macedonia to meet Titus (12, 13). And then he breaks off once more into thanksgiving to God for leading His ministers in triumph in Christ, and for the power for life or for death of the word faithfully spoken as in His sight (14-17).

These words form the starting-point of a long digression on the characteristics of the Christian ministry (iii. 1-vi. 10), as exemplified by the true apostles. Their converts are their credentials (iii. 1-3) written on their hearts by the Spirit of God, open for all the world to read. Awful as is the responsibility of the work, God gives strength to fulfil it. Its true function is to impart life (4-6). The glory that invests it transcends that which shone on the face of Moses (7-11) and needs no veil to hide its fading. Its ministers never leave the presence of the Lord, and reflect with increasing power the glory on which they gaze (12-18). The veil that hides the glory from some lies on their own blinded hearts, and not on the message delivered in all honesty by men entirely devoted to the service of the Lord (iv. 1-6). In themselves they are but mortal men, dying continually after the pattern of Jesus. But the fear of death could not silence men who believed in the God who had raised Jesus (7-15) and who had already given them an earnest in the Spirit of an eternal vesture, which would satisfy all their present yearnings (16-v. 5), making them long to be at home with their Lord, and watchful from moment to moment to be pleasing to Him, before whom they must one day give an account of the use made of their bodies (6-10). The secret of their devotion lies in the love of Christ which they are commissioned to proclaim (11-15). The reconciliation which they minister comes from God. Its home is in Christ (16-19). In His name they plead the fact of the atonement (20, 21), and witness to the reality of the power of present deliverance (vi. 1, 2), proving by their demeanour in all the circumstances of their ministry that their commission comes from God (3-10).

Coming back from this digression to face the actual dangers that threatened the Corinthian Church, he pleads with them for a return of perfect confidence (11-13) and for resolute consecration in view of the dangers of pollution from intercourse with the heathen world (14-vii. 1). But the most pressing danger is of estrangement from him, and so he turns to plead with them by his intense affection for them and his confidence in them (2-4). This confidence had been signally justified by the news brought by Titus, which had caused him joy even though it told of their sorrow. For that sorrow had been according to God, and gave proof of real zeal for the apostle (5-12), justifying his confidence, and inspiring affection in the heart of Titus (13-16).

From this record of the past he passes to subjects connected with his approaching visit; first to the collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem, which it was important that he should find completed on his arrival (viii., ix.). He tells them first of the noble example set by Macedonia (viii. 1-7) and pleads with them by the example of Christ (8, 9), illustrating the limits of generosity from the account of the gathering of the manna (10-15). He introduces his commissioners to them (16-24) and explains the necessity for their visit, to prevent any chance of the failure of his boasting on their behalf (ix. 1-5), concluding with an exposition of the law, and the source, and the fruits of liberality (6-15). This was a difficult subject to handle, because St Paul was more anxious about the spirit than the amount of the collection. The next subject was even more delicate. A violent personal attack had been made on him by certain rival teachers. He begins by pleading with them not to drive him to take strong measures (x. 1, 2). He has the power (3-6). His authority is undeniably derived from the Lord Himself, and he is prepared to be as strong in act as in his written word (7-11). In contrast with rivals who puffed themselves, and were acting out of their proper sphere, the bounds of his jurisdiction certainly included them, and the Lord gave him his credentials (12-18). His anxiety for them betrayed him into folly. O that they would be as patient with him as with the false doctrine of his rivals. His claims were at least as great as theirs (xi. 1-6). No doubt he had refused to let them support him (7-11). Let his rivals shew their sincerity by following his example. A pretended zeal for righteousness was no sign that they were not ministers of Satan (12-15). At this point 'the folly' that he had tried to restrain bursts out. If others boast, so will he. They will bear with him (16-20). He can match his rivals in their claims to Jewish distinctions. He can leave them far behind in the long roll of the sufferings which marked him as a minister of Christ (21-33). He had had his visions, but he would speak rather of his thorn, and what the Lord had told him about that (xii. 1-9). From that they could learn the secret of this extraordinary boasting (10).

Coming back once more to them, and the approaching visit, he apologizes for this outburst, begging their pardon for refusing support from them for himself (11-13). He will not change his method (14, 15). Neither directly nor by others has he made a profit out of them (16-18). This is no apology. It is only an effort to save himself the humiliation of having to put the unrepentant to shame (19-21). Let them be warned in time. If driven to it he will use the power of the Risen Christ (xiii. 1-4). But their repentance would be far better than any opportunity for the demonstration of his power (5-10).

The Epistle closes with a few parting exhortations to love and peace, ending with the Grace (11-14).

The Epistle to the Galatians. Galatia was evangelized (Acts xvi. 6) by St Paul c. 51 A.D., and revisited (Acts xviii. 23) c. 54 A.D.

The warmhearted Celts gave him an enthusiastic welcome on his first appearance among them (Gal. iv. 15). But even before his second visit signs of serious moral danger had begun to shew themselves (Gal. v. 21). And this letter (c. 57 A.D.) is wrung out of St Paul by the news of a wholesale defection from the truth of the Gospel in favour of a return to the bondage of the Jewish Law. The objects and the methods of the teachers who brought about this result may be learnt best from the Analysis of the Epistle. It was probably written after 2 Corinthians and before the Epistle to the Romans, perhaps from Macedonia.

Analysis. After a salutation which helps to prepare us for what is coming by an emphatic statement of the apostle's authority, and of the redemption wrought by Jesus Christ (i. 1-5), St Paul indignantly rebukes the Galatians for the lightness with which they had parted with the gospel he had delivered to them (6-9). Then, as the attack on his teaching was bound up with an attack on his authority, he proves, step by step, his independence of the original apostles in his gospel (10-12) by the historical fact of his life as a persecutor (13, 14), his conversion (15-17), and his first short visit to Jerusalem (18-24), telling them how he had resisted the pressure which would have forced circumcision on Titus (ii. 1-5) and how his special sphere of work among the Gentiles had received cordial recognition (6-10), and, lastly, how he had been forced to rebuke even St Peter for his time-serving at Antioch (11-14). In giving the grounds for this rebuke he passes from the defence of himself to his theology. Jewish Christians had acknowledged their inability to work out their own salvation through the Law. They had taken their stand as sinners by the side of the Gentiles that they might be justified by faith in Christ (15, 16). This step must not be retracted (17, 18). The New Life did not, could not, come from the Law, else Christ had died for no purpose (19-21).

He then turns directly to the Galatians and argues out the whole theological position with them. He appeals to the memory of their own conversion. They had not earned their new life, nor the gifts by which it had been accompanied, by legal obedience; they had grasped them by faith, as Abraham had done (iii. 1-6). The true child of Abraham is known by his faith (7-9). Those who take their stand on legal obedience are subject to the curse of the Law for their failures. The redemption from that curse in Christ brings the blessing of Abraham within reach of the Gentiles (10-14). The Law had no power to affect the conditions of the promise already made to Abraham and his seed (15-18). Its object was to make men feel the slavery of sin and so prepare them for the fulfilment of the promise (19-22). This transitory function has been abolished by the appearance of Christ (23-25). Jew and Gentile alike are now sons of God in Christ (26-29). God has Himself declared our minority at an end (iv. 1-5), giving us the Spirit of His Son (6, 7).

Such is the position from which the Galatians are in danger of falling back (8-11). So the apostle pleads with them by the memory of all that they had been to each other to remain true to him and his gospel (12-20), and gives them yet another illustration of the superiority of the Gospel to the Law drawn from the allegory latent in the story of the two sons of Abraham (21-31).

Passing now from argument to command he tells them plainly that they were forfeiting Christ by going back to the Law (v. 1-6) in deference to false guides (7-12). Let them beware however of supposing that they were set free by the Gospel to please themselves. The love of the Gospel was the fulfilment of the Law. Surrender to the Spirit brought with it freedom not only from the dominion of the Law but also from the lusts of the flesh (13-26). Sympathy must be the mark of the Christian in all his relations (vi. 1-6). We reap according to our sowing (7-10).

Then, taking the pen into his own hand, he adds in a postscript yet one more warning against their deceivers (11-13); one more declaration of the power of the Cross (14-16); one more personal appeal (17); and then closes with the Grace.

The Epistle to the Romans. This Epistle was written from Corinth towards the end of the stay recorded in Acts xx. 3. St Paul was at the moment contemplating a visit to Jerusalem fraught with imminent peril to himself (Rom. xv. 31). He hoped if he escaped with his life to visit Rome. This letter was meant in part to prepare the Church there to receive him when he came.

It was meant also as a permanent record of the doctrinal results which St Paul felt that he had attained as the fruit of the fierce conflict with Judaizing Christians through which he had just passed.

For this purpose the Church that was slowly gathering as the result of isolated and casual efforts in the capital of the world was both by its position and its constitution an eminently suitable correspondent.

Analysis. In the salutation (i. 1-7) St Paul declares his commission to preach the Gospel of the fulfilment of God's promises in His Son to all the Gentiles, and so to the Romans. He then thanks God for their faith, and expresses his longing to visit them (8-13) and preach to them the potent Gospel of the Righteousness of God (14-17).

This Gospel met the crying need of the whole world, for God's wrath against sin was only too evident (18-32). He had revealed Himself in Creation, but men had refused to acknowledge Him (18-23). So He had left them to be the prey of unnatural lusts (24-27), and to their own perverted judgement of right and wrong (28-32).

Some indeed blind their eyes to their own relation to this wrath by assuming a position as the judges (ii. 1-16) or the teachers (ii. 17-iii. 8) of others; but God requires obedience, not censoriousness (ii. 1-11), trying each man with absolute fairness by the light he has received (12-16), and setting no store on the possession of the Law and Circumcision unless the heart is in correspondence with them (17-29). The Jew indeed was privileged above other men in being intrusted with the Oracles of God (iii. 1, 2). But God's faithfulness did not depend on his (3, 4). And God's wrath may righteously rest upon the nation for its repudiation of the trust, even though that very repudiation brings out God's truthfulness into clearer relief (5-8).

Is it then better to be a Gentile than to incur the additional responsibility of the possession of a trust? By no means. But Jews as well as Gentiles are, on the evidence of their own Scriptures, under the dominion of Sin (9-18). And Law reveals, it cannot break the chains of Sin (19, 20). So Jew stands on the same level as Gentile in his need of the revelation of the righteousness of God and of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus (21-26). He cannot claim to possess it in his own right on the ground of his own conformity to his Law, nor to exclude Gentiles from it for their lack of circumcision. It is the gift of the One God to all men who by faith lay hold of it and thereby lay the foundation for true obedience to the Law (27-31).

Of this Righteousness by Faith, Abraham is the great example (iv.). He did not earn it by his faith any more than the Psalmist earned his forgiveness by turning from his sin (1-8). Nor did Circumcision give, it only sealed to him, his claim to possession of it (9, 10). So even the uncircumcised ranked as his children if they shared his faith, and even the circumcised might be shut out if they lacked it (11, 12). For through it only, and not through the possession of a Law, could they hope to inherit the promise (13-15). Otherwise some of that universal seed would be shut out from the blessing in spite of the promise, by accepting which Abraham had shewn his Faith, and found Righteousness (16-22). Following his example we too find Righteousness in accepting the assurance of divine aid given us in the Death and Resurrection of Our Lord (23-25).

Having this Righteousness let us bring forth the fruits of it—Peace to God-ward, and Joy even in persecution (v. 1-5). Peace, because the death of Christ declares God's love even for sinners; and Joy, because the life of Christ is a pledge of abundant deliverance to all who accept the reconciliation He has wrought (6-11).

Do you ask how one man's work can be available for another? Look at the parallel presented by the heredity of sin. Just as a single man gave Sin an entrance into the world and Death a throne, even so—only much more abundantly—from one man grace and life overflow to all his brethren. The parallel is in fact exact. As one man's fall brings condemnation and entails a sinful nature, so one man's obedience brings acquittal and enrightenment, for all men. This result is, not due to the Law. Law is merely parenthetical and negative. It aggravates transgression. Free forgiveness dethroned Sin, and now reigns through Righteousness in place of Death (12-21).

But is sin tolerable because forgiveness is free? Nay, the sacrament of forgiveness is the pledge of death to sin as well as of life in the Risen Lord (vi. 1-4). Nothing but our own death to sin can set us free from sin, and we can accept even this living death in the hope that is set before us (5-11). We can spurn Sin's claim to dominion over the servants of a God who is now revealed not as Taskmaster but as Father (12-14). But we must beware of presuming on the tenderness of this new relation. Revolt against the habitual obedience involved in it is a return to the old slavery for the old wage. You may call the new relation a slavery if you like. But the Owner is God—His commands righteousness—His aim sanctification—and the goal, as the starting-point, is a free gift of eternal life (15-23).

Take a fresh illustration from the power of death to dissolve the marriage-bond (vii. 1-3). Our death in Christ has broken the bond by which, while we were in the flesh, we were wedded to the Law, and His resurrection has united us afresh to God (4-6). The fruit of our old union was sinful lust (though the Law itself is not Sin but the revealer of Sin), for it gave Sin an occasion for exciting lust in me and so destroying the life I once had (7-12). And so the very excellence of the Law revealed the hideousness of Sin and the misery of slavery to it (13-16).

It opened my eyes to the presence within me of a terrible power other than myself enslaving my will (17-20), and forced me to cry aloud for a deliverer, conscious, in spite of my devotion to the Law, of my own impotence, left to myself, to obey it (21-23).

This fearful slavery is past for all who are in Christ Jesus. God, by the mission and the sacrifice of His Son, has succeeded, where the Law failed, both in condemning Sin and in securing full obedience to the Law from all who accept the new principle of life. The old principle—the flesh—is hopelessly alienated from God. But the possession of the new principle—the Spirit of Christ—is the distinguishing mark of the Christian, and it carries with it the promise of new life even for the mortal body (viii. 1-11).

Surrender to this Spirit taking effect in the resolute mortification of corrupt habits is Life, because it brings with it the consciousness of sonship and a share in the inheritance (12-17). The perfecting of our redemption will bring with it the deliverance for which the whole creation groans. The hope of it brings patience (18-25). And we have yet another companion in our groanings—the Spirit—who gives expression to our voiceless longings; and so we know that God is on our side. He has begun a work which can only end in glory, and He will carry it out to the end (26-30). With God on our side pledged to our deliverance by the sacrifice of His Own Son we fear no condemnation. No created thing can shut us out from the Son so revealed (31-39).

In this triumphant strain St Paul brings the exposition of his gospel to a close. His tone changes suddenly at the opening of the next section (ix.-xi.). He is face to face with the bitter fact of the failure of his kinsmen to accept their own Messiah (ix. 1-5). This failure, real as it is, is not a failure on the part of God. He had from the first made it clear that 'the Seed' comprised a selection only out of all the natural descendants of Abraham (6-13). Nor can His selection, though it depends solely on His own will, be charged with injustice. His chief characteristic is Mercy (14-18). Man cannot indeed challenge God's absolute sovereignty over His creatures (19-21), but he can see even now long-suffering and mercy in His exercise of it in the call of the Gentiles into covenant, and in the salvation according to prophecy of the 'Remnant of Israel' (22-29). Still the bitter fact remains that the mass of Israel fails, where Gentiles succeed, in grasping the offered righteousness (30-33), because, in spite of their zeal for God (x. 1-4), they refuse to recognise His perfected work (5-15) and so turn a deaf ear to His messengers (16-21). Still God has not rejected His People. He has preserved a Remnant for Himself, while the curse falls on the rebellious (xi. 1-10). And even their fall is not final (11, 12).

At this point St Paul turns directly to the Gentiles and draws a warning for them from this failure of men who had been in covenant with God. They had less ground to expect lenient treatment than 'the natural branches' if they proved faithless (13-24). At the same time, the thought of the kindness that embraced even wild olive shoots suggests a hope, which at last bursts out into clear expression, that when Israel's present rejection has borne its full fruit in the conversion of the Gentiles God's promise shall be fulfilled in all its breadth, and His all-embracing mercy be finally revealed (25-36).

In the next section (xii.-xv. 13) St Paul sets himself to work out the true principles of Christian conduct (xii. and xiii.), and to apply them to the solution of a special difficulty (xiv.-xv. 13). He first lays his foundation deep in the revelation that he has just given of the mercies of God (xii. 1, 2). Then he calls upon each Christian to use his gift for the good of the whole body, avoiding pride and the spirit of revenge (3-21). As a member of a State he is bound to recognise God as the source of all civil authority (xiii. 1-7), and to fulfil all civil obligations by love (8-10), living in the light and so being kept from deeds of darkness (11-14). In matters indifferent in themselves, such as the sanctity to be ascribed to particular kinds of diet or to particular seasons, each man must judge for himself and leave his brother to God (xiv. 1-12), only taking care not to hurt his brother's conscience or his own (13-23), following Christ in bearing the infirmities of the feeble-minded (xv. 1-6), and in an all-inclusive charity (7-13).

The rest of the Epistle is taken up with purely personal matter. He explains once more (14-21) his relation to them as Apostle of the Gentiles. He tells them of his plan to visit them on his way to Spain, after he has taken the contribution of the Greek Churches to Jerusalem (22-29), asking earnestly for their prayers for his safety, as though he knew even then the dangers that were likely to befall him, and for the success of his mission (30-33).

He commends Phoebe, the bearer of the letter (xvi. 1, 2), and sends greeting by name to various kinsfolk and friends (3-16). Before he closes he adds a short but earnest warning against false teachers, whose appearance among them there was reason to dread (17-20). After the Grace and a few more salutations (21-23) the whole Epistle closes with yet another noble doxology for the revelation of the eternal counsels which God had vouchsafed (25-27).

Characteristics of the Second Group.

The Epistles of this group illustrate a second stage in the apostolic teaching. The readers to whom they were addressed were men who had passed through the excitement of their first awakening, and had begun to feel the need of guidance in shaping their lives in accordance with the will of God. They are written to point such men to the cross of Christ as the true secret of abiding peace through the emancipation and renewing of the will, and to guard them against being drawn away from the true freedom of obedience to the law of the Spirit by a specious slavery to the carnal ordinances of the Mosaic law. It is at first sight strange that such truths should be presented in a garb so fiercely controversial; but humanly speaking it was inevitable. The old order could not yield place to the new without a struggle. Looked at from the outside the simple gospel of the grace of God had nothing to recommend it. It might easily pass for a purely visionary system, which no one but a madman could invent or entertain. None but those who surrendered themselves to it could form a conception of its inherent truthfulness and power. On the other hand the upholders of a strict conformity to the Jewish law could appeal to the sanction of an undoubtedly divine appointment, approved by the example of generations of faithful Israelites, sanctioned by the practice of the original apostles, nay even consecrated afresh by the submission of the Lord Himself. Surely the weapons of the Spirit had need to be mighty if they were to prevail against a fortress so strongly intrenched as this. It is not strange that the warriors of the Reformation should have drawn nearly all their inspiration from a few chapters in the Epistles of this group.

THE THIRD GROUP.

Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, Philemon.

An interval of four or five years, spent by St Paul almost entirely in captivity, separates the Epistles of the third group from the Epistles of the second. They were all written from Rome.

The Epistle to the Philippians is placed first in the group because it is the most nearly related in language and doctrine to the Epistle to the Romans. Before it was written, St Paul had been at Rome long enough to feel that Christianity was making real progress among the soldiers of the Prætorian guard (i. 13) who were told off from day to day to guard him. Philippi was a Roman military colony commanding the great high road between Europe and Asia, and endowed by Augustus with special privileges of citizenship. The Church there was the earliest founded by St Paul in Europe (Acts xvi. 11-40). His first visit terminated abruptly, and it seems probable that St Luke was left behind to take charge of the infant community. St Paul himself, however, was not forgotten; the Church, though poor (2 Cor. viii. 2), was generous and grateful, and found occasion to send him supplies, not only while he remained in their neighbourhood, but after he had moved on to Corinth (Phil. iv. 15, 16). He passed through Philippi six years later (Acts xx. 2) on his way from Ephesus to Corinth, and again on his return (Acts xx. 6) from Corinth to Jerusalem. And when the news of his removal to Rome reached Philippi they sent one of their number, Epaphroditus (ii. 25), to minister to him in their name. The strain of work in the capital proved too severe, and Epaphro-ditus had to be invalided home (26-30). And this is the letter that St Paul sent by his hand to his affectionate friends. Its main purpose is to express his gratitude and affection, and to cheer them up under the disappointment of his own protracted imprisonment, and of the failure of their effort to help him. At the same time he uses the opportunity to warn them against false teaching, and to exhort them to unity, to humility, and to a vigorous striving after holiness.

Analysis. The Epistle opens, after the salutation (i. 1, 2), with a joyful thanksgiving (3-8) based on the sacrifices they had made for the spread of the gospel, and on his own assurance of their ultimate perfecting, leading to a prayer on their behalf (9-11) for more love in growing light and developed fruitfulness. Then addressing himself directly to them, he takes each of the darkest facts of the situation and makes it minister to joy (12-30)—his own imprisonment (12, 13), the increased activity of his rivals (14-20), the danger in which he stood (21-26), and the trials through which in any case they must pass before he could see them again (27-30). Passing from an exhortation to unity in the face of these inevitable trials he appeals to them with the whole weight of his own personal affection to overcome party spirit in the humility taught by the perfect example of Jesus Christ (ii. 1-11). Then in view of God's presence within them (12-18) he exhorts them to perseverance in Christian effort that they may prove worthy children, a blessing to the world and a glory to himself.

At this point St Paul leaves doctrine and exhortation to tell them of his plans. He hopes to send Timothy to bring back news of them, as soon as the issue of the trial is clear (19-24). Meanwhile their own messenger Epaphroditus is returning home. He has fallen ill in doing noble work (25-30).

The letter seems now on the point of closing (iii. 1), but the sense of the danger to which they might be exposed from Judaizing false teachers forces from him an explicit statement of the truths which they denied. So he warns the Philippians, almost fiercely, against giving up the spiritual circumcision for the carnal (2-4). He points out the worthlessness of legal (5-7), and the ceaseless effort after holiness which sprang from laying hold of evangelical, righteousness (8-16); and in stern contrast with those whose sense-bound imaginations could not rise to the thought of anything but a material purification, he reminds them that a Christian's citizenship is even now in heaven, and that the transfiguration of the body is included in his hope (17-21). Passing from controversy, he adds a few brief counsels for a peaceful life (iv. 1-9). Then after a grateful acknowledgment of their liberality (10-18) and a prayer for them, culminating in a doxology (19, 20), the Epistle closes with parting salutations (21, 22) and the Grace (23).

The Epistles to the Colossians and 'Ephesians.'

The remaining Epistles of this group were clearly written at the same time. Onesimus, who was the bearer of the Epistle to Philemon, is commended to the care of the Church of Colossæ (iv. 9); Tychicus is the bearer both of the Epistle to the Colossians (iv. 7, 8) and of the Epistle to the Ephesians (vi. 21).

The Epistle to the Colossians.

The Epistle to the Colossians was the result of a visit from Epaphras, the evangelist of the Church in Colossæ (i. 7, 8). From him St Paul had learnt the faith, and the dangers which threatened the faith, of a community with which he was personally unacquainted (ii. 1). The difficulty was a subtle one. It sprang from a deep consciousness of sin and from an earnest effort to attain moral purification by mechanical means, the careful observance of external ordinances (ii. 16) and ascetic restrictions (ii. 20), coupled with special devotion to a host of angelic mediators. This new danger, though in some respects the exact opposite of the danger which had proved so serious in Galatia, sprang, as that had done, out of Jewish influence. Its attractiveness was due not only to the satisfaction which it offered to the craving after sanctification, but also to the apparent completeness of the scheme of the universe with which it was connected and the show it made of deep speculation and practical wisdom. To meet the danger St Paul is driven to bring forth out of the treasure-house of Christ stores of wisdom and knowledge hitherto almost unsuspected. Christ is in His own Person the one principle of the unity of the universe, and the principle of evil cannot be directly identified with anything that He has made. When the members of the Church learn to recognise their present union with their risen and ascended Head they possess the secret of perfect sanctification.

Analysis. In the thanksgiving which, as usual, directly follows the opening salutation (i. 1, 2), St Paul lays stress first on the inherent fruitfulness of the gospel message (3-6); then he tells them how he came to be interested in them (7, 8), and how he prayed for their growth in the knowledge of God's will so that their lives might be worthy, fruitful, strong, and full of gratitude to the Father for transferring them to the kingdom of His Son (9-14), who is His own Image, the Author and the Goal of all creation (15, 16), preeminent not only in the old order but in the new (17, 18), because the Father willed that He should be the abiding home of all divine perfection and the reconciliation of the universe (19, 20), with a power which had already begun its work in them (21, 22), and which required from them nothing but faithful adherence to the hope of the one world-embracing gospel (23). St Paul was the appointed recipient and guardian of this new revelation of the universality of the gospel; so he passes naturally from this mention of it to explain his own relation to it in suffering for it, in working it out into all its consequences, and in striving to bring it home to the heart and mind of every man (24-29). And so they could understand how it was that he took a prayerful interest even in those who like themselves had never seen him (ii. 1-5).

After this introduction he is able, without seeming to intrude, to plead for and to enforce a fundamental truth, which some of their own teachers were forgetting, that the secret of holiness is to be found, not in cunningly-devised external regulations, but in union with Christ in all the glory of His true nature, and in the realization of our share in the fruits of His death and resurrection (6-19). The consequence of this for us is that we are free from all mechanical restrictions (20-23), and called even now to live with Christ in God (iii. 1-4). In the light of this revelation of our true state we can work out our own salvation by doing to death every evil inclination (5-8) and clothing ourselves in our divine ideal (9-11), especially cherishing all qualities that tend to union with our brethren (12-14), in constant remembrance of the peace and the power of Christ both in public worship and in every act of daily life (15-17).

Leaving the general exposition of Christian duty he describes the special duties of wives and husbands (18, 19), children and parents (20, 21), slaves and masters (22-iv. 1); and then he calls on all Christians for prayerfulness and prudence in their relations with the heathen world outside (2-6). The letter ends with a commendation of its bearers (7-9); greetings from his companions to the Colossians (10-14); a special message from himself to the Laodiceans (15-17); and the Grace (18).

The Epistle to the 'Ephesians.'

The thoughts which had been stirred by the danger in Colossæ had clearly an importance for a much wider and more influential circle than could be touched even if the Colossians were diligently to circulate their own Epistle among their neighbours in the little Phrygian valley of the Lycus both in Laodicea and Hierapolis. And further, there were some elements in the conception of the place which the Church, by virtue of her organic connexion with the Christ, occupies in relation to the whole counsel of God, that could not be fully developed in the stir and stress of controversy. Accordingly St Paul sends by the same messenger a second letter, in which he expounds in detail the work which the Church has been elected to perform in the world and the relation in which the various members stand one to another in the unity of the one body. These thoughts were no doubt not entirely new to St Paul, but they must have matured and deepened as he watched from its centre at Rome the practical working of a world-embracing empire; and gave thanks for the success of his mission to Jerusalem in averting the threatened breach between Jewish and Gentile Christians.

The letter was not, according to the true text (Eph. i. 1, R.V. marg.), addressed exclusively to any particular Church. It seems to have been, like the First Epistle of St Peter and the Revelation, in some sort a circular letter, carried round by its bearer from Church to Church in Asia Minor. For instance, it is probable that this is the letter which the Colossians are to expect from Laodicea (Col. iv. 16). In any case the Church at Ephesus must have been the most important of the Churches to which it was sent, and the centre from which copies of it would be most freely circulated; and so it may not unnaturally have been regarded as in a special sense addressed to that Church. But it seems difficult to imagine that if St Paul had been in any sense concentrating his attention on them his work should show no trace of the peculiar intimacy that existed between them (Acts xx. 17 ff.). And this at least is certain, that none of St Paul's Epistles reads so little like a private letter and so much like a theological treatise.

Analysis. After the salutation (i. 1, 2) the Epistle begins with a solemn ascription of blessing to God for the blessings bestowed on His chosen in Christ (3-7), especially in opening their eyes to see the goal of His eternal purpose (8-10) and in gathering Jew and Gentile into a present share in His inheritance (11-14). Then, still standing as it were at the head of his people, with his face turned towards God, he pours out his thanksgiving for their faith, and prays that their eyes may be opened to the full grandeur of their true position (15-18) and to the power which had been operative in the enthronement of their Head (19-23), and in their own deliverance from the death of sin (ii. 1-4) to a new life of active obedience to the will of God (5-10).

After this he turns to his readers and, in what we may call the first section of the Epistle proper (ii. 11-iii. 21), pleads with them to bear in mind these facts of their true position (11-22), first reminding them of the gulf which had in times past shut them off both from their fellow-men and from God (11, 12); then shewing them how this gulf had been bridged by the Incarnation and the Passion (13-15), the Resurrection and the Ascension of Christ Jesus (16-18), and finally working out under the figure of a spiritual temple their present living union with their brothers and with God (19-22). His exhortation is on the point of culminating in intercession when he pauses for a moment to explain to them the special relation in which he stood both to them and to this grand new revelation which God had granted to their age and generation as a step towards the working out of His eternal purpose (iii. 1-12). This delay is due to a fear lest the fact of his imprisonment might prove a stumblingblock in the way of their faith in his gospel. This once removed (13), he can turn once more to the Father and pray Him to strengthen them to enter into and be transfigured by this revelation of His love (14-19). The section closes with a doxology (20, 21).

In the second section of the Epistle (iv. 1-vi. 9) he works out in detail the practical consequences of the truths developed in the first. The first claim which the recognition of our unity makes upon us is for humility and meekness (iv. 1-6). But while each is thus bound to keep himself in check for the sake of the rest, each has his own gift to contribute towards the perfect development of the whole organism (7-16). In order to fulfil these claims each man is called upon to break decisively with his evil past (17-19), and to put on the new man (20-24). He then illustrates what is meant by this general direction in certain definite points of character and conduct (25-v. 5), and enforces the necessity for Christian consistency by the thought of the power of the Christian example (6-14). Christians must therefore be watchful and zealous in the evil days, sensible and sober even in the midst of spiritual joy (15-21). In fulfilling the natural relationships of a home they must bear in mind the divine source of all authority; so the husband will find a perfect pattern of devotion, and the wife of submission, in the interchange of surrender and obedience between Christ and His Church (22-33). Children will learn the secret of obedience and parents the secret of discipline in the Lord (vi. 1-4); servants will render a perfect service and masters learn to respect their subordinates in the constant recognition of His presence (5-9).

The last section of the Epistle contains a description of the armour which is provided in Christ for the Christian for the great spiritual battle which he is called upon to fight in carrying on his Master's work in the world (10-20). A few words commending the bearer of the letter follow (21, 22), and then the Epistle closes with a blessing and the Grace (23, 24).

The Epistle to Philemon. It is characteristic of St Paul that the little letter to Philemon should take its place side by side with these two great dogmatic Epistles. His contemplation of the deepest truths finds its natural fruit in the fulfilment of the homeliest duties.

Oncimus, a runaway slave, had been won for Christ in Rome, and was now returning to Colossæ, to the duty he had left. St Paul sends this letter with him to his old master, who chanced to be also one of St Paul's spiritual children.

Analysis. After the salutation (1-3), St Paul gives thanks for the good fruits of Philemon's faith (4-7), and then pleads with all the power of his personal influence for Onesimus, who had run away from his master to find a new master in Christ, and was now coming back to his duty (8-20). He then holds out the prospect of a visit from himself (21, 22), and adds a few greetings from his friends (23, 24) before he closes with the Grace (25).

Characteristics of the Third Group.

The characteristic doctrine of the first group, as we have seen, is the Second Advent; that of the second is the Cross and the Resurrection. The characteristic doctrine of the third group is the Ascension and the present sovereignty of Jesus Christ over the world and over His Church. This is seen to involve an eternal dignity. The ascent corresponds to a previous descent (Eph. iv. 9), and carries with it the motive power of a complete consecration for all whose eyes are opened to realize the true grandeur of their position as risen and ascended with their Lord. The Epistles belong to a period of quiet settled life in communities that were at least beginning to be consolidated. Problems of thought began to press for solution as well as problems of action. The gospel is shewn to be the guide to a true philosophy, as well as to possess the power to produce right conduct, and to satisfy the social as well as the individual needs of men.

THE FOURTH GROUP.

Titus, 1 and 2 Timothy.

The fourth group of St Paul's Epistles belongs to the period which elapsed between the last mention of him in the Acts and his martyrdom at Rome. Our knowledge of his movements during this period depends entirely on these Epistles, except that an early tradition declares that he fulfilled the intention expressed in Rom. xv. 28 and visited Spain. Assuming, as on the whole we are justified in assuming, that these letters are genuine, it is clear that he must have been set free from his first Roman imprisonment, and have spent at least some part of his time in revisiting his old friends in Greece and Asia Minor. To this interval of freedom we must assign the Epistle to Titus and the First Epistle to Timothy.

The Epistle to Titus. At some time during these travels he must have visited Crete with Titus in his company. Seeing the dangers to which the faith was exposed in the island from the lack of organization in the Church there, and being unable to stay long enough himself to do all that was required, he had left Titus behind 'to remedy defects and appoint presbyters in the several cities' (i. 5). St Paul, however, had no intention of setting Titus to work there permanently, and suitable messengers being to be had (iii. 13), he sent this letter by them partly to give his 'true son' some hints for his guidance in the difficult task that had been laid upon him, and partly to bid him come to Nicopolis as soon as Artemas or Tychicus came to relieve him (iii. 12).

Analysis. After a salutation, expanded to contain a full description of the faith which it was St Paul's glory to serve (i. 1-4), he reminds Titus of his commission to ordain elders (5-9) and to correct refractory members in the Cretan Church (10-16). He then describes the character which he should aim at producing in the various members of his flock, whether freemen (ii. 1-8) or slaves (9, 10), remembering the educational value of the gospel message (11-14). In fulfilling his own office he must be firm (15), insisting on submission to authority, and meekness (iii. 1, 2); teaching meekness by the memory of our natural state, apart from the new life of the gospel (3-7), and deriving firmness from confidence in his message as a matter for practical application to life, and not for quibbling subtlety or self-willed speculation (8-11). The Epistle closes with a brief notice of the apostle's plans, parting injunctions, greetings, and the Grace (12-15).

The First Epistle to Timothy.

In the course of these later journeyings St Paul must also at some time or other have reached Ephesus, and on his departure have felt it necessary to leave Timothy behind him to check the growth of certain unprofitable forms of speculation. He did not anticipate a long absence from the city (iii. 14). Still, as a delay might occur, he writes to him, perhaps from Macedonia (i. 3), to give him counsel and encouragement in the fulfilment of his duty. The special tendency he was required to check was due certainly in part, and perhaps altogether, to Jewish influence. Traces of it were to be found even in Crete (Tit. i. 14, iii. 9). It may perhaps be simply a later stage of the same error which St Paul had combated in the germ at Colossæ. It contained two elements; one purely fanciful, busied with 'endless genealogies' and 'old-wives' fables'; the other pretentiously practical, even while it wasted all its strength in the effort to define the minutest details of legal obligation (1 Tim. i. 7, vi. 4, 20; 2 Tim. ii. 14; Tit. i. 14). There was nothing solid or healthy in such stuff, and if it led to any neglect of the simplest moral obligations it was fraught with serious danger to the faith.

This was the danger immediately pressing (i. 3). There was a more serious danger looming in the future. Men would soon be found to brand as evil various parts even of God's own creation (iv. 1-5), and Timothy's bias towards asceticism (iv. 8, v. 23) might give this false doctrine a spurious attractiveness.

Analysis. After greeting his true son (i. 1, 2), St Paul reminds him of his commission to keep in check the frivolous speculations and foolish legalism of some teachers (3-11) who endangered the simple truth of the grace of God which was illustrated so clearly by St Paul's own experience (12-17); and exhorts him to watchfulness by the memory of his ordination and by two warning examples of failure (18-20). After this introduction he begins by giving special directions (ii., iii.) for the ordering of public worship and for the character and conduct of ministers. He exhorts the Church to pray for every member of the human race in the light of the universal purpose of God and the all-inclusive ransom (ii. 1-7). He bids women be modest in dress, and silent in the public teaching of the congregation (8-15). He details the special qualities required of those who fill official positions in the Church (iii. 1-13), and shows the peculiar sacredness which belongs to each congregation as a Pillar in the Spiritual Temple of the Truth (14-16).

In the next section (iv.) he warns him of the approach of a dangerous form of false teaching (1-5), and bids him meet the danger in himself and others by spiritual rather than bodily discipline (6-10), and by special attention to his own growth and teaching (11-16).

Then follows a section (v.-vi. 2) containing a series of hints to guide him in his relations with the old and young of both sexes (v. 1, 2), with special reference to widows (3-16), to elders (17-20), to the administration of discipline (21-25), and to the relation of Christian slaves to their masters, heathen or Christian (vi. 1, 2).

The last section of the Epistle (3-21) contains a description of the dangers to which believers, and especially teachers, were exposed from the love of money (3-10); an earnest exhortation to Timothy to keep clear of this and other dangers, based on the great facts of the Christian faith and hope (11-16); a message to the rich (17-19); then yet one more appeal to Timothy (20, 21); and the Grace.

The Second Epistle to Timothy.

The circumstances under which the Second Epistle to Timothy was composed confer on it a peculiar pathos, and stamp the mark of heroic grandeur on its indomitable trust. It was written from Rome after the first stage of a new trial (iv. 16). St Paul was in serious danger, and some even of his trusted friends had deserted him (iv. 10). In the bitterness of his isolation he longs for the presence of his "darling son" (i. 2) and writes to bid him come at once and bring Mark with him (iv. 11). This is his immediate object in writing, but the contents of his letter are mainly determined by another consideration. As he writes the sword of the executioner is hanging over his head, and the blow may fall at any moment. So he takes this opportunity, which may so well be his last, to give full expression to all the affectionate solicitude of his loving heart for one who had been for many years his faithful companion. Words written under such conditions, especially if they were sealed with the blood of the writer, must have had a peculiar power to nerve one who was still young for the work he had to do, and who perhaps was constitutionally disinclined to stand alone, to take up and wear the mantle that was now falling from the shoulders of his aged, deserted, and yet still triumphant, master.

Analysis. After greeting his beloved child (i. 1, 2), he gives thanks for the memory of his faith inherited, like St Paul's, from his forefathers (3-5); bids him stir up his gift and bear witness bravely (6-11); and tells him the secret of faithful guardianship (12-14). Then after a short notice of desertions, and of the loyalty of Onesiphorus (15-18), he appeals to Timothy to be diligent in teaching (ii. 1, 2), in self-discipline (3-7), in enforcing the full Christian creed for which he himself was suffering (8-13). He calls on him to keep strictly to what is solid and profitable in teaching, as in the presence of God (14-19), and since He can find a use for any vessel in His House if only it be clean (20, 21), he bids him aim at purity of heart, avoiding contentions that he might win souls (22-26). He then tells him of dangers ahead (iii. 1-9) from false teachers who will win temporary success. He reminds him of the sufferings that they had shared in early days (10-13), and bids him be faithful to the lessons of his childhood, the Scriptures that were given to fit God's people for their work (14-17). Then with the utmost solemnity he adjures him to be diligent in proclaiming his message, even though truth should be less popular than fiction (iv. 1-5), and all the more because his own work is done (6-8).

The letter closes with an urgent summons to Timothy to come to Rome, giving him various commissions to fulfil by the way (9-13), warning him against an enemy, and announcing the issue of the first stage of his trial (14-18). The last verses (19-22) contain messages to and from various friends, and the Grace.

Characteristics of the Fourth Group.

The Pastoral Epistles are by the nature of their destination occupied mainly with questions relating to the internal discipline and organization of the Christian body, and with the ideal of the Pastoral Office. The development and training of the life of godliness have taken the place of instruction in the faith. At the same time it is striking to notice the earnest reiteration with which St Paul in these Epistles emphasizes the universality of God's saving purpose (1 Tim. ii. 4, iv. 10; Tit. ii. 11, iii. 4), and the bounty which shines out in every part of His creation (1 Tim. iv. 4, vi. 13, 17).

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

The title of this Epistle suggests that it was written to Christian Jews in Palestine. The contents confirm the accuracy of the title. The persons addressed are of Jewish birth, feeling the fascination of their national creed and the ritual in which it was embodied. They have long been Christians, having received the Gospel from its first witnesses (ii. 3). But the first generation of their leaders has passed away (xiii. 7), and under the influence of renewed persecution at the hands of their own countrymen, coupled with disappointment because the Lord is not yet come, they are in danger of renouncing their faith in Jesus and returning to Judaism. These conditions would most naturally arise in Palestine, e.g. after the martyrdom of James the Just, A.D. 62.

The author of the Epistle has withheld his name, and neither the voice of tradition (cf. Limits and Growth, pp. 17-19) nor of criticism enables us to fill up the blank left by his silence. The phraseology of the Epistle, no less than its elaborate symmetry and polished rhetoric, distinguishes it from the Epistles of St Paul.

It was written in the company of some Italian Christians (xiii. 24), but there is no certain indication of the place of its composition. It begins without any formal salutation.

Analysis. God has in our day crowned all His former utterances by speaking to us in a Son who is higher than the angels; for they, as the references to them in the Psalms prove, are subordinate beings attending on the heirs of salvation, and bidden to do homage to the Firstborn; while He is clothed with divine prerogatives and is called to a throne at His Father's right hand (i. 1-14). This utterance then demands stricter attention from us who have heard it than even the utterance made through angels on Sinai (ii. 1-4). For the whole universe is by divine decree subjected not to angels but to man, and the glorification of Jesus is the visible first stage in the working out of that subjection (5-9), even His Passion finding a place in the development as the means of our deliverance from the fear of death and of His own perfecting for His present function as the High Priest of His brethren (10-18). Consider then carefully the position of Jesus as our High Priest. He is the Son set over the household of God in which Moses was but a servant (iii. 1-6). We as members of His household shall do well to take warning from the history of Israel in the wilderness, lest we miss our entrance into rest, as they did, through unbelief (7-iv. 2). For the promised rest is still before us (3-11), and we live under the eye of an all-seeing Judge (12, 13). So let us cling to our creed and boldly claim the help which our High Priest is able and willing to give (14-16). For both of the qualifications for a high-priesthood among men—sympathy arising out of personal experience of human weakness (v. 1-3), and divine appointment (4)—are found in the Risen Christ, as appears from the words of God in the Psalms, and from the record of the Agony in the Garden (5-10). The more special characteristics of His High-Priesthood belong to an advanced stage in Christian education, for which you ought by this time to be more ready than you are (11-14). Still let us leave the rudiments and press on (vi. 1-3), for though God's blessings misused issue in a curse (4-8), we have confidence on your behalf, only we would that hope were as active among you in appropriating your inheritance, as love is in your ministry to your brethren (9-12). You have in the oath of God to Abraham a most solid ground for clinging to the hope which like an anchor links you to your unseen champion (13-20), the High Priest after the order of Melchisedek. What, then, are the characteristics of this High-Priesthood? It is royal, and it is abiding (vii. 1-3); it is superior to the Levitical (4-10), for that is in itself transitory (11-14), belonging to an imperfect dispensation (15-22), and composed of constantly shifting elements (23-25), while this is free from all imperfection of sin or infirmity; it is the eternal office of the divine Son (26-28). It is exercised in heaven in the archetypal tabernacle (viii. 1-5), and is based on the nobler, that is, the new covenant, of which Jeremiah spoke (6-13). The ordinances and the instruments of worship under the first covenant belonged entirely to this world. The Tabernacle and its furniture were material (ix. 1-5); the very arrangement of the Tabernacle declared the imperfection of the revelation, and the sacrifices and ordinances themselves were powerless to effect any but a material cleansing (6-10). Christ, on the other hand, by the blood of His sacrifice can cleanse the conscience itself (11-14). The new covenant is established in His death (15-17), even as the old was ratified, and all that belonged to it cleansed, with the blood of victims (18-22). The scene of His work is the actual presence of God, and His sacrifice needs no repetition (23-28). The impotence of the former sacrifices is revealed by the fact of their repetition (x. 1-4) and by the substitution of spiritual obedience for them in the Psalmist's prophecy (5-10). Christ's sacrifice, however, is single (11-14), and perfectly effectual (15-18). In the strength of it let us draw nigh to God ourselves and stir up one another to faithfulness (19-25); for our responsibility grows with our privileges (26-31); and you have shewn some capacity for endurance (32-34); you will not surely lose heart, with the deliverance promised to faith almost in sight (35-39). Faith has been the mark of the saints in every age (xi. 1, 2). Abel's sacrifice, Enoch's walk with God, Noah's obedience, Abraham's wanderings, and the birth of Isaac, all shew the working of faith (3-12) and their longing for a heavenly country (13-16). By faith Abraham offered Isaac, and the patriarchs blessed their children, and Moses was preserved, and the people redeemed from Egypt, and established in Palestine (17-31). In short, God's heroes in every age have been heroes of Faith (32-38), even though they had to wait for us for their perfecting (39, 40).

With their example before you, and with your eyes fixed on the Cross of Jesus, you cannot faint (xii. 1-3). As sons, you must expect to be chastened by your Father (4-13). Only guard against evil in yourselves (14-17). For the Christian Sion is at once more blessed and more awful than Sinai (18-24); and the final shaking of both heaven and earth is at hand (25-29). So do not despise simple duties (xiii. 1-6). Imitate your first teachers (7-9). Beware of being drawn away by strange teaching from union with Jesus in His sacrifice (10-16); submit to your present leaders (17). Pray for us (18, 19); and may God bless you (20, 21).

A few brief notes of news and greeting bring the letter to an end (22-25).

INTRODUCTION TO THE CATHOLIC EPISTLES.

The Catholic (i.e. Universal) Epistles are so called because the most important among them are not expressly directed in their superscriptions, as St Paul's are, to particular Churches or individuals. It seemed natural, though it is not correct, to assume, on the strength of this fact, that they were meant from the first to be read by all Christians wherever they might be. The collection contains letters from each of the three pillars of the Church in Jerusalem, James, Cephas, John (Gal. ii. 9), together with one from a writer of whom we should otherwise have possessed no memorial, Jude, the brother of James. St James writes expressly to Jewish Christians. Both St Peter and St Jude are writing, in all probability, to converts from heathenism. Before St John wrote, the old distinctions had passed away. He writes to men who had been born and bred in the common brotherhood of the Christian Church.

The Epistle of St James. This Epistle is addressed to the faithful Israelites scattered throughout the world, who are regarded as symbolically representing the whole nation. It was written, as the imagery employed in it shews, from Jerusalem, or at least from Palestine.

The author, who writes as a Christian (i. 1) to Christians (ii. 1), describes himself simply as James. There can be no reasonable doubt that tradition is right in identifying him with 'the Lord's brother' who occupies so prominent a position in the Church at Jerusalem after the death of James, the son of Zebedee (Acts xii. 17; Gal. ii. 9). The brethren of the Lord, according to the common tradition in Palestine in the second century, were really what we should call half-brothers, children of Joseph by an earlier marriage. They were not (Acts i. 14) of the original Twelve, but James, by virtue of his official position, clearly ranks as an apostle (Gal. i. 19). He seems to have remained to the end of his life a strict observer of the Mosaic law, and to have been regarded with veneration even by his unbelieving fellow-countrymen. Trained as he must have been among those who were looking for the redemption of Jerusalem (Luke ii. 38), three truths would naturally lie at the root of his religious life. First he would learn to believe in one God, Creator of heaven and earth, who had made man in His own image (i. 18, 23; iii. 9, iv. 5). Then he would learn of the favour which God had in time past shewn to His people, poor and weak though they might seem to men (ii. 5). Thirdly he would learn to look forward to a coming day of judgement and deliverance (v. 3, 7, 8). His faith in our Lord Jesus Christ (ii. 1), in whom the glory that marked God's presence with His people had found permanent embodiment, who had shared as Messiah the lot of the poor, and who was Himself the Judge standing before the door (v. 9), deepened, defined, but did not disturb this simple Jewish faith. He seems to have had little interest in theological speculation. At any rate the object of his letter is to enforce in the spirit, and often in the language, of the Lord, with the earnestness and fire of a prophet of the olden time, the moral and practical consequences of his creed.

It does not seem to have been called forth by any special crisis. The difficulties it deals with are just those which would be sure to assail Jewish-Christian circles as soon as the faith in the Messiahship of Jesus had begun to crystallize into a dogma. They are just the national besetting sins reappearing in a slightly altered form. At the same time it is hard not to suppose that he is aiming directly in ii. 20-24 at some Jewish-Christian misinterpretation of St Paul's language in Rom. iii. 24. In that case the Epistle must have been written not long before his death. It would naturally be disseminated by means of the crowds who gathered at Jerusalem at feast times (Acts ii. 5 ff.).

According to the account in Josephus, with which the account in Hegesippus is not necessarily inconsistent, James fell a victim to the intrigues of Annas the high priest between the death of Festus and the coming of Albinus (A.D. 62).

Analysis. He begins his Epistle (i. 1) with the regular Greek form of salutation (cf. Acts xv. 23, xxiii. 26). He then passes at once to illustrate the power of the truth to transfigure our common estimate of things to be desired or shunned, and so to regulate our attitude towards them (2-18). He shews how trials may minister to joy (2-4), how a felt need may become a link uniting us to God (5-8), and how the absence or the presence of this world's goods may alike afford ground for exultation (9-11). Trial, for all its potency of blessing (12), has a darker side—it may pass into temptation; but this is not owing to God's willing, but to man's lusting (14, 15). So he comes to the expression of the fundamental truth which underlies the whole paragraph, the flawless and unchanging beneficence of Him to whose pure will we owe our being (16-18). He then passes to consider the special developments in character and conduct which will follow naturally from faith in such a Creator (19-27). These are first an ear open to receive His Word (19-21), then a will steadily set on embodying the revealed purpose of His creation (22-25), and then, as the true ritual of outward devotion, watchful self-restraint and active charity (26, 27).

He then proceeds to warn them against various dangers to which as Jews they were naturally predisposed (ii. 1-iv. 12). They were tempted, in flagrant contradiction to their faith in Jesus Christ, to pay court to a man simply on the ground of his outward possessions (ii. 1-4), in spite of the preference which God had shewn for the poor (5), and in spite of the violence and impenitence of the rich (6, 7). The consideration of this subtle form of mammon-worship leads him to explain how we may test the rightness of our actions (8-13) and the vitality of our faith (14-26). He shews first that the royal law of love is the one test of right conduct (8). Anything which, however slightly, violates that law is actual transgression (9) and brings absolute guilt (10, 11). So we must bear in mind the conditions of our enfranchisement, and forgive as we would be forgiven (12, 13). Then he shews that faith without corresponding action is profitless, whether it be regarded as the expression of a generous sentiment (14-17) or as the intellectual apprehension of a truth (18, 19), and illustrates from scriptural examples the power of obedience such as Abraham's to perfect the development of faith, which God recognises and blesses even in its germ (20-24), and the necessity of acting, as Rahab alone of the Canaanites had done, on a true conviction if we are to enjoy the fruits of it (25, 26). He then passes to the second danger (iii.). Each was inclined to regard himself as qualified to teach others, or at least as justified in wrangling fiercely with them in defence of what he held to be the truth. St James checks the first of these tendencies by a simple statement of our natural incapacity to control our own tongues (1-12). He checks the second by contrasting the bitter and factious spirit of a boasted orthodoxy with the sweet reasonableness and genuine devotion of true wisdom both in its source and in its fruits (13-18).

From this he proceeds by a natural transition to a third danger to which the presence of such contentions among them pointed. They were the outward signs of an inward discord (iv. 1). Unregulated desires were making them the source of confusion round about them (2), turning even their prayers into sin (3). Their hearts were given to the world (4), and in spite of the threats (5) and the promises (6) of Scripture, they were in proud rebellion against God. Their one hope lay in a penitent humbling of themselves before God (7-10), leaving their neighbours to settle, each on his own account, with his own conscience before God (11, 12).

His Epistle is now drawing to a close, and his thoughts are full of the approaching Advent; but he does not introduce it in its complete Christian form at once. He begins with the obvious uncertainty of human life, and uses the thought in that shape to rouse such as needed rousing from a vain confidence in their own forethought. Then he turns to those who were inclined to trust in their riches (v. 1-6). He points to forces already at work to destroy their hoarded treasure, and reminds them that the power of these possessions over their possessors would not perish with them (1-3), and then, in the language of the O.T. prophets, denounces their injustice, their crass forgetfulness, and their violence against God's servants (4-6). Then turning directly to the faithful, he exhorts them to endure to the end, patiently, firmly, silently, in the certain hope of the now imminent advent of their Lord and Judge (7-9), after the example of the prophets and in the light of Job's experience (10, 11). Then he warns them with special seriousness against the use of oaths in conversation. Their yea would be yea in the realized presence of their Judge (12). In sure trust in His present and ready help let them pray for one another and confess their sins one to another, especially in seasons of suffering and sickness (13-16), remembering the power of prayer revealed by the life of Elijah (17, 18), and the blessedness of being the instrument of converting even a single soul (19, 20).

The First Epistle of St Peter.

The First Epistle of St Peter was written to the Christians belonging to the different provinces of what is now called Asia Minor. It was written from 'Babylon' (v. 13), that is, apparently, Rome, and may be dated shortly after the outbreak of the Neronian persecution A.D. 64, if we may assume that this persecution, which began in the capital, spread, or seemed likely to spread, rapidly to the provinces. In any case St Peter, who had received a special commission to strengthen men who were in danger of being terrified into a denial of their Lord (Luke xxii. 32), writes this letter to help scattered communities to bear a fiery trial that was coming upon them.

Analysis. His salutation (i. 1, 2) reminds them of the rock on which their election rested, of the means through which it took effect upon them, and the goal to which it led. Then rising at once above all earthly anxieties, he blesses God (3-12) for the new life which the resurrection of Jesus Christ had brought with it, a life strong in the assurance of present protection, and bright with the hope of the salvation which had aroused the earnest inquiry of those prophets who in old times had seen the vision of the Messianic sufferings on the road to glory (10-12).

Roused by this hope, Christian men must strive earnestly after holiness (13-21), filled with holy fear by the thought of the impartial and unswerving justice of their Judge, the costly ransom that had been paid to set men free from sin, and the power of the resurrection to quicken faith and hope in God. Obedience to God will find expression in fervent love to man through the power of the new life brought by the gospel message (22-25) and fed by living contact with the Corner-stone (ii. 1-6), in touch with whom each stone would grow into its place in the Building which is at once priesthood, sacrifice, and shrine. For the same Stone (7-10) that trips up the disobedient confers on believers all the privileges of the Israel of God.

In respect to particular duties (ii. 11-iv. 11), he exhorts Christians, remembering the importance of their good name for the conversion of the heathen world, to keep the flesh in subjection (11, 12) and to render loyal obedience to all constituted authority (13-17). Slaves especially are called upon to bear even undeserved punishment patiently (18-25), and as their lot is the meanest and hardest of all, he brings out the most precious treasure in his store for their help, giving them at once the pattern and the motive for the patience required of them, by recalling the sufferings which Christ had borne without murmuring for their sake. He bids wives (iii. 1-6) win their husbands to the faith by their obedience and by the simplicity of their life and demeanour. He bids husbands (7) pay honour to weakness, and calls on all Christians (8-12) for the graces necessary to attain the promised blessing. Persecution (13-17) faced in this spirit has no terrors, but the prospect of it calls for watchfulness lest the force of their witness should be marred by arrogance or moral laxity. When it comes (18-22) there is strength to endure in the thought of the sufferings of Christ and of the fruit which they had borne for Him, opening a new sphere to His working, even before His ascension to His throne in heaven.

The thought of these same sufferings, and of the mystical union of the believer with them, forms the ground of a renewed appeal to the mortification of the flesh (iv. 1-6), which is supported also by the thought of the judgement to come on the dead no less than on the living. The section closes (7-11) with an exhortation to each man, in view of the end, to exercise his special gift for the good of all, and the glory of Jesus Christ.

Coming back from the questionings which the approaching persecution would be sure to raise in their minds, he reminds them that a share in the Messianic sufferings (12-19) was an earnest of glory and a token of the brooding of the Spirit over them, and so a ground for thanksgiving, though not for presumption or moral carelessness.

This thought brings him back once more to practical exhortations (v. 1-6). He calls on elder and younger to recognise their duties one towards another, safeguarding both authority and obedience with humility. By humble submission to the divine discipline (7-11) they might find freedom from all anxiety, in calm reliance on divine aid.

The concluding salutations (12-14) contain an exhortation to enter on and stand fast in this true grace of God.

The Second Epistle of St Peter.

Both in point of language and of attestation (see Limits and Growth, pp. 12-19) this Epistle presents difficulties which are as yet far from being completely solved. It is written apparently to the same Churches as the first (iii. 1). The salutation, however, contains no names—it only hints more definitely than before that the readers directly intended are Gentiles by birth. It is written in the near prospect of death (i. 14), and aims at guarding against a form of Antinomianism similar to that which St Jude combats in his Epistle, and at rekindling hope in the promised appearing of the Lord. It must have been written after the Epistle of St Jude, the language of which it adopts and adapts freely all through.

Analysis. The prayer in which, as usual, the salutation culminates expands without a formal break into a declaration of the grace already bestowed on believers, and an exhortation to them to respond to it by a steady growth in hope of the yet more abundant blessings in store (i. 1-11). This exhortation springs, as he goes on to tell them, from his conviction that his own departure, which according to the Lord's express declaration (John xxi. 18 ff.) was to precede the Advent, was now close at hand, and from his desire that these truths should not be forgotten when he was gone (12-15). For the faith that he had preached had been the outcome of his own experience (16), notably on the Mount of Transfiguration (17, 18), an experience which had strengthened his hold (19), as he bids them strengthen theirs, on 'the prophetic word' (Matt. xvi. 28), with this one caution, that they must not expect to understand prophetic scriptures in their own unaided strength, apart, that is, from the Spirit under whose inspiration they had in the first instance been delivered (20, 21). This thought of the need of a present inspiration leads him to the consideration of the danger to which they would be exposed from the presence in their midst of a counterfeit inspiration (ii.). The characteristic note of this dangerous teaching would be the denial of Christ's claim on His redeemed (ii. 1). However great the success of its exponents they are doomed (2, 3). For God has already, even in the act of delivering His servants from destruction, given proof of the severity of His judgement on the sinful (4-9), especially such filthy blasphemous brute beasts as these who, not content with their own licentiousness, set nets, as Balaam had done, to catch others (10-16). Such teachers are utterly worthless, and their boasted freedom sheer slavery to corruption, the more degrading because it is a return to a degradation once left (17-22).

Coming back from the prophetic picture to the immediate present, he exhorts his readers to remain faithful to themselves, to the commandment they have received (iii. 1, 2), and to his warning against such as would try to cover their own disobedience by scoffing at the long delay in the appearing of their Judge (3-7). He reminds them that God has a different standard of time from men, and that He is not dilatory, though He is reluctant to punish (8, 9). Still His day will come with startling suddenness (10), and the faithful are called to live in constant expectation of it, and of the new heaven and new earth to which it will open the way by its fiery destruction of the old (11-13). This expectation would help to keep them pure. Only they must guard against misinterpretations of St Paul's Epistles (14-16). The sum of the whole matter is briefly this—Guard against lawless guides, and see that you grow in grace (17, 18).

The Epistle of St Jude. The author of the Epistle (1) is Jude, brother of James, and therefore one of the brethren of the Lord (17). There is nothing in the salutation to help us to identify the readers for whom this Epistle was intended. It is clear, however, from the rest of the letter, that they were well known to St Jude. They had at one time been pupils of apostles (18), but now that by death or absence they had lost apostolic guidance, they were in serious danger from the presence among them of men who, while railing ostentatiously against the objects of pagan superstition, gave themselves up to all the licentiousness of pagan worship, declaring themselves, owing to their special illumination, to be above all law, and practising the vilest immorality under cover of some hideous perversion of the doctrine of the grace of God. St Jude writes to rouse his 'beloved' to a sense of their danger and at the same time to help them to meet it calmly, because they had been taught to expect it, and because, while doing what they could to help their brethren through it, they were safe in God's keeping.

Analysis. After the salutation (1, 2), in which he reminds his readers of God's love and the protection of Jesus Christ, he proceeds at once to tell them that his desire to write to them had been transformed into an overmastering necessity by the appearance of certain ungodly persons among them who had perverted the doctrine of the grace of God (3, 4). The news had made him long to remind them of God's judgements on idolatrous Israel in the wilderness, on the rebellious angels, and on the Sodomites, whose example these men did not scruple to follow (5-7). Each feature in their degradation shewed that these apostates at least had need of each of these warnings. Witness their filthy licentiousness, their rejection of all sovereignty over them, beginning with their Lord's, and their irreverent railing at the spiritual powers, in whose idolatrous feasts, as the one thing that they thoroughly understood, they did not scruple to share. In fact they had fallen into the old pitfalls—Cain's, who had grudged God's acceptance of his brother; Balaam's, who had prostituted his office for gain; and Korah's, who had risen in proud rebellion against God's appointed minister (8-11). Their true character was revealed by their fruits (12, 13). The judgement of such impiety, as the book of Enoch testified, was sure (14, 15). They were self-condemned. They pleased themselves while they murmured against God, and they swallowed their big words against idols whenever it was worth while (16). Let the faithful then recall the apostolic warnings against such men and keep guard over themselves (17-21), while doing all that could be done to save their brethren (22, 23). The Epistle closes with a doxology (24, 25), which brings once more before them the sufficiency of the protection on which they could rely, even when they were forbidden to rely on anything of their own.

The Epistles of St John. None of these Epistles contains any direct statement of the name of its author. In the first he claims to write in the name of the original witnesses of the gospel history (i. 1-4), but gives no further description of himself. In the second (1) and third (1) he calls himself simply the Elder. There can be no doubt, however, from their identity in strongly marked peculiarities of thought and expression, that all three are rightly ascribed to one and the same author, the evangelist of the fourth Gospel.

The first Epistle presupposes a knowledge of the facts recorded in St John's Gospel, and was probably written after it. It contains the practical application of the truths revealed in the life of the Incarnate Word to the life of men, together with warnings against the dangers which beset a true faith in the Incarnation even before the end of the first century, both from teachers who claimed an authority independent of His in the revelation of truth or the determination of duty, and from teachers who shrank from the acknowledgment of a real manifestation of the Godhead in human flesh.

The second Epistle is closely connected with the first in the character of the false teaching which it finds occasion to condemn (v. 7; cf. 1 John iv. 2). The 'elect lady' addressed in it is nameless, unless indeed these words are to be read as a proper name, 'Eclecta Cyria.'

Neither the second nor the third Epistle contains definite indications of the date of its composition, nor have we any further information with regard to the persons or incidents referred to in them.

Analysis of the First Epistle. The Epistle begins, as the Gospel had done, with a careful description of its subject (i. 1-4). Writing as the last surviving representative of the apostolic band, he sums up their experience and declares the secret of their evangelistic zeal. They had received through their own senses the revelation of a life which in itself is above sense. It had existed before they became conscious of it. It continued to exist after it had passed out of their sight (1, 2). It had introduced them to a living fellowship which left them unsatisfied so long as it remained unshared (3, 4). So the apostles were the bearers of a message to men which was to issue in fellowship with God. The next section (i. 5-ii. 6) contains a declaration of the message, and of the conditions of fellowship. The message is summed up in a revelation of the character of God. God is light (5). The condition of fellowship is likeness to God (6, 7). In spite of the obstacle presented by our present sinfulness (8, 9) and our past sins (10), the Father has made provision in His Son to enable us to satisfy this condition (ii. 1, 2). We may know that we are satisfying it, if we are keeping His commandments (3-5) and walking in the footsteps of His Son (5, 6).

This condition may seem too elementary, too indefinite, or too exacting. So in the next section (7-17) St John explains that the condition is not a new one, though it is seen in growing light (7, 8), that it affects the most definite earthly relationships (9-11), and that it is already satisfied in the members of the Church by the power of the Father's name (12-14). Only they must be watchful lest the attractions of the world should make them unmindful of His love (15-17). The attractions of the world could only be safely met in the power of a revelation of the Godhead in flesh which would completely satisfy the cravings which had found expression in every form of idolatry. So we pass from thoughts which spring directly from the doctrine of the Father (e.g. i. 2, 3, 9, ii. 1, 12, 15) to the consideration of different aspects of the doctrine of the Son (ii. 18—iii. 24). For it was the office of the Christ to reveal the invisible God (St John xiv. 6 ff.). And the most searching trial in life springs from the need for discriminating between rival claimants to that office. St John's readers had been forewarned of this trial and had already had experience of it (18, 19). But they were endowed with the power of discrimination (20, 21), and their faith in Jesus as the Christ supplied them with a ready test by which to unmask pretenders (22, 23), at the same time that it opened the door into the promised life (24, 25). Abiding in Him they had a pledge of growing illumination (26, 27), and would shew the outward sign of their new birth (28, 29). So we pass to the next section (iii. 1—12). The work of the Son does not stop with the revelation of the Father. He was manifested to impart to us out of His own Sonship the nature and the name of sons. This portion of His work is in one sense complete already. We are sons here and now (1). In another sense the hope of perfected sonship is our motive in that self-purification (2, 3) which it was the object of His life on earth to make possible, by casting out the spirit of lawlessness (4—6) and so undoing the devil's work (7, 8). This object is not achieved till the seed of His sonship bears fruit in us in unwavering obedience to God (9, 10) and love to our brethren (11, 12). For His work is not merely to reveal the nature and confer a right to the name, it is definitely to impart the life (13—24) of sonship. This life finds expression in active love in us (13—15), after the pattern and in surrender to the claim of His love for us as revealed in His death (16—18). So we are reminded of the true place of the cross in relation to His work. It is from it that the new life of love in us springs, and so in it we have the secret of abiding peace in spite of sin (19, 20), and of prevailing intercession when we are living in the obedience, that is, the faith and the love, of sons (21—24). The work of the Son in us and for us culminates in mutual indwelling, and it becomes a reality to us by the operation of His Spirit (24). So we pass from the consideration of the work of the Son who reveals the Father, to the consideration of the work of the Spirit (iv.—v. 12) who is sent in the Name of the Son (cf. St John xiv. 26, xvi. 12—15), and whose characteristic office among men is therefore witness to the Incarnation. By this He provides a test of Truth both in teachers and hearers of the word (iv. 1—6). In this lies the inspiration (7—10), on this rests the obligation, of love among men (11—16). For God, being Love, has in the Incarnation perfected the manifestation of His love for us, that we might love Him without fear (17, 18) and our brethren for His sake (19—21).

Each separate element in this supreme revelation has a power of its own (v. 1—12). Faith in the Messiahship, faith that is in Jesus as the perfect revelation of the Father, brings the gift of divine sonship, and with the sonship love for the newly-found brethren, in obedience to the Father (1—3). Faith in the Divine Sonship, faith, that is, in Jesus as endowed with all His Father's authority over men, brings with it an assurance of victory over the world in the memory of His baptism and of His triumph through death, to both of which the sacraments and the Spirit bear living, harmonious, and sufficient evidence (4—9). The surrender in faith of the whole of a man's being to the Divine Son is life (10—12). With this declaration the message that the letter has to convey is complete. Its object has been just this, to rouse men to the consciousness of the life that is in them (13). Nothing remains but to point to prayer as the characteristic expression of this life (14—17) and to sum up the ultimate certainties in a Christian man's conviction (18—21).

Analysis of the Second Epistle. For the truth's sake, the Elder and all who know the truth love the 'elect lady' and have good hope for the time to come (1—3). He writes, rejoicing in his experience of her children, to exhort her to encourage mutual love in simple obedience to the old commandment, and to turn a deaf ear, even to refuse all hospitality, to the advanced teachers who claim to have outgrown the doctrine of a Christ coming in the flesh (4—11). He has more to say, but he had rather speak than write (12, 13).

Analysis of the Third Epistle. The Elder praises Gaius for the good report which some of his guests have brought of his truth (1—4) and of his hospitality (5—8). He then sternly condemns the contumacy of Diotrephes (9, 10), and after commending Demetrius, the carrier of the letter, he closes, in the hope of an early meeting, with various salutations (11—14).

The Revelation of St John the Divine. The Revelation or, to call the book by its Greek name, the Apocalypse of St John, was sent in the first instance (p. 4) to seven Churches in Asia Minor. The voice of tradition is practically unanimous in identifying the author, who calls himself simply John, with the son of Zebedee, the evangelist of the fourth Gospel. There is a serious difference of opinion as to the date of its production. The common opinion is based almost entirely on a statement by Irenæus (v. xxx. 1—3), who was a pupil of the personal disciples of St John, to the effect that 'it' (i.e. apparently 'the Revelation') 'was seen almost in his own time, at the end of the reign of Domitian' (96 A.D.). There are various traces, however, of a different tradition, notably in Epiphanius (Har. xli. 12), which connects St John's exile to Patmos, and by implication the writing of the Revelation, with the persecution of Nero (64—68). This earlier date seems imperatively demanded by internal evidence. The difference in style for instance between the Revelation and the Gospel requires a substantial difference in date of composition if we are to maintain, as we have otherwise strong grounds for maintaining, the unity of their authorship. Again, the book itself, according to the simplest explanation of its own symbolism, claims to be written (xvii. 10) at latest under Galba or Vespasian (A.D. 68, 69). But the strongest argument of all lies in the fact that a book which has seemed to so many, when interpreted on the hypothesis of the later date, a dark and all but hopeless enigma, becomes, when once the earlier date is accepted, what it was clearly meant to be, a luminous and most inspiring revelation. In 68, 69 A.D. Jerusalem was already invested by the Roman legions. The tremendous crisis was now close at hand which, according to our Lord's express prediction, was to mark His return in judgement on the guilty nation (cf. Matt. xxiv., xxv.). In spite of His warning (Matt. xxiv. 23-27), men might fail to recognise Him when He came, because He did not manifest Himself in a visible form. They might think, especially if they were still in heart bound to the outward aids to worship afforded by Judaism, that the Fall of Jerusalem was a sign that God had finally withdrawn from, and not that He had at last wedded Himself to, the creatures He had made. They needed—do we not all need?—clear words to help them to understand that 'state of salvation,' that 'new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness,' which His coming was to introduce.

It will be noticed that on this interpretation the primary application of the words of this prophecy is to events that lay in the immediate future at the time that it was delivered. And this is certainly what the language of the book itself most naturally suggests (e.g. i. 1, 3, xxii. 6, 20). Nor is there anything in the book necessarily inconsistent with this interpretation. 'Babylon,' that is, the old Jerusalem, fell, and vengeance for the righteous blood (St Matt. xxiii. 35) that she had shed was exacted from her in 70 A.D. The triumph of Christianity over the Roman Imperial system (xix. 19-21) was not indeed outwardly perfected for two or three centuries, but the martyrs in the Neronian persecution had already won the victory in the first, and in some respects the fiercest and most deadly, of all the engagements in the long campaign. There is only one short section (xx. 7-10) which seems expressly to contemplate a far distant crisis in the history of the world. The value of the book for us will lie therefore primarily in the help which it can give us towards understanding a certain definite series of historical events in the past. If we read these events in the light which this book casts upon them, we shall learn to understand the principles, and in some degree the methods, of the judgement which Christ comes to execute on the world in every age. If we study the picture that St

John gives us of the new Jerusalem which he saw descending out of heaven from God in his own age, we shall understand, and understanding shall, according to the most sure promise of the Book itself (i. 3, xxii. 7), enter upon the enjoyment of 'the full hope of His calling, the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints' (Eph. i. 18).

Analysis. The opening verses (i. 1-3) tell us that the object of the book is to reveal Jesus Christ, and that this revelation was given by Him from God through His angel to John for the guidance of His servants in an approaching crisis. Then John sends greeting in his own name (4, 5) to the seven churches from the eternal God, from the 'Seven Spirits,' and from Jesus Christ crucified, risen and ascended. This greeting passes into a doxology for the love of the Redemption (5, 6), and to a prophecy of the approaching advent (7).

After this introduction, the main subject of the book is opened by a solemn declaration of the Name of God, from whom the whole prophecy comes (8). Then John explains the circumstances under which he had received his commission to write (9-20). During his exile in Patmos he had seen a vision of the Son of Man in the midst of seven lamps, holding seven stars in his hand (9-16). He fell as dead at the sight, but Jesus raised him, bade him record his vision, and then sent a message to each of the seven Churches symbolized by the lamps and the stars (17-20).

1. As invisibly present among His people, He rebukes the Church in Ephesus for the cooling of her first love, and promises, to those who overcome the special temptations to which they are exposed, food from the tree of life (ii. 1-7).

2. As conqueror of death, He exhorts the Church in Smyrna to firmness under an approaching persecution, and promises the victor deliverance from the second death, i.e. the lake of fire (xx. 14), which would destroy the wicked, as the cities of the plain had been destroyed in old time (8-11).

3. As the wielder of the sword, He warns the Church in Pergamum of the presence of Nicolaitans among them, promising, as to men who proved superior to the temptations which had assailed Israel in the wilderness, hidden manna, and the white stone of a pure initiation (12-17).

4. As God's vicegerent over Israel, He pronounces judgement on the woman Jezebel, and promises the faithful in Thyatira a share in His own dominion over the Gentiles, and the morning star (18-29).

5. As the source and guardian of spiritual life, He warns the Church in Sardis of the approach of spiritual death, but promises that those who keep themselves free from pollution shall not be expunged from the roll of the true Israelites (iii. 1-6).

6. As the true steward over the household of God, He declares the right of the Church in Philadelphia to membership in God's family, in spite of Jewish opposition, promising them, as a reward for their en-duration, protection through the coming persecution, and a place in the fabric of the spiritual temple which is shortly to be revealed (7-13).

7. As the fulfilment of the promises of God, and the beginning of His new creation, He rebukes the Church in Laodicea for her indifference and her self-satisfaction. He warns her to expect chastisement, and invites her to admit Him as her guest, and promises the victor a share in His own throne (14-22).

The first stage in the revelation of Jesus Christ is now complete. He is seen to be the present and living judge and protector of all Christian communities. The second stage opens with a vision in heaven: a throne, and One sitting on the throne, surrounded by four-and-twenty elders, representing the Church of both dispensations, and by four living creatures, representing the material universe, engaged in perpetual worship of the Source of all creation (iv.). Then a sealed book, and He who alone could open it, under the figure of a slaughtered Lamb (v. 1-7), who receives the praise of the living creatures and of the elders for the redemption He has wrought (8-10), and the praise of the angels in recognition of His inherent dignity (11, 12), and then, in union with One that sits upon the Throne, the adoration of each member of the whole creation (13, 14). Then, one by one, He opens the seven seals. After each of the first four, one of the living creatures says 'Come,' and a rider on horseback goes out to execute judgement on the world. These represent Wars of conquest (vi. 1, 2), Civil war (3, 4), the heartlessness of Trade (5, 6), and Pestilence (7, 8). The opening of the fifth seal is followed by a cry for vengeance from the slaughtered saints whose blood has been poured on the heavenly altar, and they are bidden to wait till the tale of the victims of persecution is complete (9-11). When the sixth seal is opened, a convulsion shakes the heaven and the earth, the powers in heaven that men have worshipped fall from their spheres, and earthly potentates cower before the wrath of the Lamb (12-17). This seal represents the judgement on the Gentile world which, as the Lord had foretold (Matt. xxiv. 29), precedes the judgement on Jerusalem. Before the seventh seal is opened, there is a pause for preparation. The four winds, which seem to represent hordes of Barbarian invaders (xx. 8), are kept in check until the members of the true Israel are marked out for deliverance in the coming judgement by the seal of the living God (vii. 1-3). St John first hears the number of the sealed, which is symbolically complete (4-8), and then catches sight of the multitude, gathered from every nation to which that perfect number corresponds, and hears them sing Hosanna for their deliverance, to God and to the Lamb, and all the hosts of heaven join them in their praise (9-12). One of the elders declares the conditions of membership in that multitude, and the blessedness of it (13-17).

The opening of the seventh seal is followed by silence in heaven (viii. 1). Then the seven angels of the Presence receive seven trumpets (2), and, as a prelude to their work, another angel offers the prayers of the saints before God, and then, filling the censer with fire from the altar, casts it to the earth (3-6). The first four trumpets are followed by judgements affecting the four divisions (xiv. 7) of the material creation, dry land (7), sea (8, 9), springs of waters (10, 11), the heavenly bodies (12). A flying eagle then marks the difference between these four trumpets and the next three (13). After the fifth trumpet, a star falls from heaven (ix. 1), marking the quenching of the light which the chosen nation had been commissioned to give out to the world. The consequence of this apostasy is seen in the opening of the pit, and in the issuing therefrom of a locust swarm that has power over all except those who are protected by the seal of God (2-12). The sixth trumpet is followed by the loosing of a vast host of horsemen, yet more terrible and deadly than the locusts, from the banks of the Euphrates, the spiritual boundary between Jerusalem and Babylon (13-19). In spite of these judgements, men still cleave to their idols and their sins (20, 21). The pause before the seventh trumpet is marked by the descent of a strong angel with a little book open in his hand (x. 1). He cries aloud, and seven thunders, whose voices St John is forbidden to record, echo his cry (2-4). Then the angel solemnly declares that in the days of the seventh angel the revelation made to the prophets of old shall be perfected (5-7), and St John is bidden to take and eat the little book, in token that, in spite of this declaration, there is still work left for him to do (8-11). Then he is bidden to measure the Sanctuary, which represents the sound core of the nation, and to leave the rest to its fate at the hand of the Gentiles, and to the final pleading in sackcloth of the two divine witnesses (xi. 1-3). These witnesses are the two national institutions of prophethood and priesthood which, even in their degradation, bore witness for God in the nation and in the world. Their witness, however, in its present form is not destined to endure. They fall, as national institutions, with the fall of their nation, and by the same foe (7, 8; cf. xvii. 16). But in themselves they are immortal; and even while men are exulting in the relief brought by the cessation of their witness, they rise again with their bodies, and ascend in the sight of their enemies to the throne of their risen and ascended Lord in heaven, becoming independent of their former national embodiment in the universal Church (9-12). The moment of the measuring is marked by an earthquake and a partial ruin which issues in a momentary conversion (13, 14). The seventh angel then sounds, and the walls of the spiritual Jericho fall flat. But for the present, all that we are called upon to contemplate is the revelation of the eternal and universal kingdom, which is brought into clear light by the collapse of that which was local and transitory (15), and to listen to the thanksgiving of the elders for the judgement which has avenged the slaughtered saints (16-18). Then the heavenly temple opens, the ark of God's covenant is seen secure in the innermost shrine (19), and the second stage in the revelation of Jesus Christ is over. The judgement on Jerusalem will make it clear that all the divine prerogatives of Israel have reached their goal, and have found an eternal embodiment in Him.

In one sense the book is complete at this point. It has no fresh facts to bring before us. Still, the same series of facts may be looked at from a fresh point of view, and be found pregnant with a fresh revelation. They have been sketched out so as to enable us to trace the process of the preservation of all that was imperishable in the old system. They may be sketched also, so as to shew how all in it that could not stand the fire was burnt up. With this object, a fresh start is made, and a fresh series of symbols (yet cf. xi. 7, xiv. 1) is brought before us. The ancient Israel, the bride of Jehovah, appears in a form which is the visible embodiment of Joseph's dream (Gen. xxxvii. 9), and at the moment of the fulfilment of the great end of her being (xii. 1, 2) Israel's foe, the mighty, proud, devouring, world-spirit, appears in the form of a red dragon, the exact antithesis of the Lamb, waiting to devour the woman's Son at His birth (3, 4). The Son is born, and raised to His predestined Throne in spite of the dragon (5), and the woman waits in the wilderness (6) while the witnesses are prophesying in sack-cloth (xi. 3). Meanwhile the ascension of the Son is the signal for the casting forth of the dragon from heaven (7-9). The accuser of His Brethren cannot stand before their Advocate, and those who ascend with Him are beyond the reach of their foe (10-12). Israel, however, even the faithful Israel, so far as it is still on earth, is not altogether out of the reach of the dragon, though she is kept safe from his attacks by the protection of the strong Roman sense of justice (13, 14), and by the friendship of 'the earth' (15, 16). The dragon then seeks an alliance in 'the sea' (17-xiii. 1). Out of the sea rises a monster, in many respects a visible counterpart of himself, and with him the dragon shares his kingdom (xiii. 2). This monster, as we shall be told more distinctly later on (xvii. 7-11), represents the material organization of the Roman empire which, as it recovered from what seemed its death-blow in the death of Nero, might well seem invincible, and deceive with its blasphemous pretensions all but the elect (3-8). Nevertheless a righteous recompense was in store for it, in the assurance of which the saints could suffer and be strong (9, 10). Even as it was, the first monster was powerless without the assistance of a second that comes up out of 'the earth,' representing the spiritual organization of the empire and the established worship of the city and the emperor (11).

The work of this second monster, the false prophet (xvi. 13), is to enforce the worship of the first monster (12), and by copying the signs of true prophets to induce men to make and worship its image (13-15). And finally, that nothing may be wanting to complete the diabolic travesty of the heavenly court, he compels all who would traffic in his kingdom to enrol themselves as the soldiers and servants of the monster, by receiving his mark—his name or some equivalent—on hand or brow (16-18).

This array of material forces seems overwhelming. It is not; the Lamb is the true king in the material as in the spiritual realm. And the next vision shews Him to us in His capital (Ps. ii. 6), surrounded by His troops that had been sealed to His service and had learnt His song, because they had been redeemed by His blood (cf. v. 9) to be the firstfruits of humanity, consecrated pure and without blemish to God (xiv. 1-5). Then three angels appear one after another with messages to the world: the first with the eternal gospel of the fear of God (6, 7), the second with tidings of the judgement on 'Babylon' (8), the third with a warning of a final judgement in store for the worshippers of the monster (9-11). This last message may call for resistance even unto blood, and the Judgement when it comes will mark the commencement of the reign of the Saints (xix. 20, xx. 4); so a heavenly voice declares the blessedness of those that die in the Lord (12, 13). This vision is followed by a representation in outline of the Judgement which it proclaimed. First the Judge is seen on a cloud holding a sickle (14). Then at the voice of an angel He reaps His harvest-field (15, 16). Then a second angel appears (17), and, at the bidding of a third angel, reaps the vine of the earth, and casts the grapes into the wine-press of the wrath of God (18-20).

All the fresh symbolism is now before us, together with a sketch in outline of the approaching Judgement. We are now ready to trace the working of it out in detail in the vision of the angels with the seven bowls (xv. 1). The vision opens with a hymn of praise, sung by those who had triumphed over the deceits of the false prophet, for God's judgement on their oppressors (2-4). Then the seven angels appear out of the Temple vested as priests, and receive their bowls, i.e. basins such as those used in the Temple worship to catch the blood of the slaughtered victims, from one of the living creatures (5-8), and they are bidden to pour them out on the earth (xvi. 1). The emptying of the first four bowls is followed, as the first four trumpets had been, by judgements on the four parts of the physical creation, the dry land (2), the sea (3), the springs of waters (4-7), the sun (8, 9). The fifth bowl is emptied on the monster's throne, and his kingdom is thrown into a darkness which may well symbolize the confusion which followed on the suicide of Nero (10, 11). The sixth (cf. ix. 14) dries up the Euphrates (12), and, there being now no boundary between the sacred and profane, the Trinity of evil is allowed to gather all the forces of the earth to meet God in the mount of 'Meggido' (13-16). After the seventh bowl the judgements are declared to be finished (17), all earthly confederacies and earthly potentates fall to the ground or disappear, and 'Babylon' is judged (18-21). The meaning and the process of this judgement are explained in the next two chapters. First we are shewn 'Babylon,' the apostate Jerusalem, under the figure of a woman that has cast off her allegiance to her true Lord, and entered into alliance with earthly powers, which she degrades by her apostacy (xvii. 1, 2). She appears first in all her glory, riding on a scarlet monster, drunk with the blood of the saints (3-6). Then the symbolism of the monster is explained. It represents the Roman empire, marvellous in power, but doomed to pass away (7, 8). The monster's seven heads are the seven emperors. The woman is seated on them, for the prosperity of Jerusalem rested on the favour of Cæsar. Of the seven emperors, five, from Augustus to Nero, had already fallen, one, Vespasian, is, and one, Titus, is not yet come to the throne (9, 10). The monster itself, i.e. the imperial organization consolidated by these seven successive heads, has a life of its own, though it is doomed (11). Its ten horns represent the tributary princes or, perhaps, the governors of the provinces, that are willing to unite with it in the war against the Lamb (12-14). Before this can be, however, the horns and the monster turn and rend the woman who had been once endowed with sovereignty—the Roman legions utterly destroy Jerusalem (16-18). Then we learn what is thought of this destruction in heaven. First a bright angel declares the fact (xviii. 1-3); then a voice calls God's people to come out of her and to leave her to her doom, the Jewish Christians are bidden to regard themselves no longer as Jews (4-8), and then the same voice records the mourning of the princes (9, 10), the merchants (11-16), and the sailors (17-19) over her desolation, while heaven and her victims exult because justice has overtaken her (20). Then a mighty angel shews by a sign that her desolation is final (21-24), and the heavenly host sing Hallelujah (xix. 1-3). The elders and the living creatures take up their song, and a voice from the throne echoes it (4, 5). Here again a great crisis in the revelation is over. But the whole judgement has not yet been fully declared, nor its fruits made known. The Christ has yet to vindicate His sovereignty against the blasphemous pretensions of Rome. He is not yet wedded to His Queen. So the heavenly hymn rises yet again; but this time it is to herald the Bridal of the Lamb (6-8), and a prophetic voice declares the blessedness of His invited guests (9, 10). The feast itself is not yet. There is stern work to do first. Heaven opens, and the Lamb appears as a warrior, mounted, armed, and crowned, surrounded by His soldiers, and bearing the names of 'Word of God,' and 'King of kings and Lord of lords' (11-16). The monster gathers his forces for the battle and is overcome—the Church is stronger than the empire—and it is cast, together with the false prophet, into the lake of fire (17-21). Two out of the three arch-foes are now overcome. Only the Dragon remains, the purely spiritual foe, who had used the powers of Rome to gratify his ancient hatred against God. And he, too, meets his match. As the apostate Israel had set him free (ix. 1, 11), so the faithful Church would master, chain, and cast him back into the abyss for 1000 years (xx. 1-3). During his confinement the saints are seen in their true position as reigning over the earth with a sovereignty over which death has no power (4-6). But he must be yet more decisively overthrown. So he would be let loose once more to gather his forces against the city of God in order that his new host might be destroyed and he himself cast with his old allies into the lake of fire (7-10).

Meanwhile the great white throne is already set up, and the Lamb sits on it in judgement on the old world, judging the dead so that all, even those who had not known Him after the flesh (cf. Matt. xxv. 34), might, if they were worthy, share the reign of His saints (cf. v. 6), and casting the unworthy, with the two great terrors of the heathen world—death, and the shadow world beyond it,—into the lake of fire (11-15). And now the light breaks in upon a new world, a new heaven, the Father's home, and a new earth from which the power that isolated His children from one another has disappeared, and on which the new Jerusalem can rest,—the outward symbol of God's abiding presence among men, and a pledge from Him of the removal of the primeval curse on death and toil (xxi. 1-4). This vision is confirmed by the words of Him that sitteth on the throne, 'the Beginning and the End,' who offers the new life to all who thirst for it, and the new inheritance to all who have the courage to enter in and take possession (5-7). For the fearful and the foul there is nothing but the fire (8). When this voice ceases, one of the same angels that had revealed the foulness of the apostate Jerusalem is appointed to reveal the beauty of the faithful Bride (9; cf. xvii. 1), and St John sees the new Jerusalem glowing with the light of God's presence in the midst of her, protected by a mighty wall and by angel guardians, yet open towards every quarter, and combining apostles and patriarchs in one compact structure (10-14). The form of the city is a perfect cube, like the form of the Holy of Holies (15-17). Every variety of precious stone found a place in the foundations; the gates were pearl and the pavement gold (18-21). God Himself and the Lamb supplied the place of shrine and light and lamp (22, 23). Her influence spread far beyond herself; heathen nations felt the blessing of her light; and earthly monarchs brought her their choicest offerings. None but the unclean found her portals shut (24-27). Through her streets flowed the Water of life; and the Tree of life, now at last open to all, grew on either bank, bearing all the year its various fruit, and even with its leaves healing the nations. And there, through all the ages, shall be the throne of God and the Lamb, and His consecrated servants shall serve Him, illuminated by His presence and sharing in His throne (xxii. 1-5). Now at last the revelation of Jesus Christ is complete. He has shewn Himself to us as the living Lord and Judge of His Churches, as the Deliverer and Avenger of His Saints, Lord of all the kings of the earth, and Judge of quick and dead; and now we see Him eternally one with the Father on His throne in the New Jerusalem.

The book ends with a solemn declaration of the divine source of the revelation, though it come through human channels (6-9), and with a command to make it known (10, 11), in view of the nearness of the advent described and the blessedness of the reward (12-15). Then Jesus Himself adds His authorization, and the Spirit and the Bride pray for the coming (16, 17). Then John adds a solemn declaration of the necessity of faithful dealing with the words of the communication (18, 19). Jesus once more asserts the truth of the proclamation, and John prays for its fulfilment (20). The book closes with the Grace (21).

V. BIBLE HISTORY.

1. OLD TESTAMENT (AND APOCRYPHA).

a. EXTERNAL HISTORY OF ISRAEL TO THE CLOSE OF THE CANON OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

BY THE REV. A. CARR, M.A., LATE FELLOW OF ORIEL COLLEGE, OXFORD.

(1) GENESIS—ABRAM TO JOSEPH.

The beginning of the Hebrew nation must be sought in Ur of the Chaldees, where Terah, the father of Abram, dwelt with his family. Recent discoveries have disclosed many facts about the condition of Ur, its population—its rulers—its trade—its arts and literature. The site of Ur is identified with the modern Mugheir, now 150 miles from the Persian Gulf, but in the days of Abram a busy seaport town, and the capital of one of the petty kingdoms into which Chaldea was divided. The original population (called in the monuments the people of Shumir and Accad, that is of Southern and Northern Babylonia) was Turanian, and so connected with the modern Chinese, Mongols, Turks and Finns. But at a very early period an invasion of Semites brought in a higher civilisation, and a religious system founded on a worship of the heavenly bodies which, though polytheistic on one side, dimly recognised a supreme God. The Semites became the ruling class in Chaldea, and to these the family of Terah belonged.

In Gen. xv. 7 the migration of Terah and Abram from Ur to Charran (Haran) is ascribed to a divine call, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur." But it is permissible to associate a call like this with the presence of external events. And in this instance the conquest of Southern Chaldea by Khudur-Nankhundi, king of Elam, the father of Khudur-lagamar (Chedorlaomer, Gen. xiv.), who desecrated the ancient temples, and disturbed the religion of the country, is an event which probably synchronized with the call, and would supply a motive for the migration from Ur. It is also to be noted that this movement occurred at a time of general restlessness in these regions of the ancient world.

Terah, with Abram and Sarai and his grandson Lot, "went forth from Ur of the Chaldees to go into the land of Canaan, and they came unto Haran and dwelt there." The reason of this interruption in the journey is not given. But at Haran—the Charræ of the Roman and Parthian period—Terah was still in Chaldean territory, which he may have been loth to leave.

It was at Haran that, after the death of Terah, Jehovah—(more properly Yahveh)—henceforth the Covenant name of the God of Israel—called Abram to resume the interrupted journey to Canaan, which now became the land of promise: "I will make of thee a great nation and will bless thee." Abram was accompanied by Sarai and his nephew Lot, together with "the souls he had gotten in Haran."

The passage (from 'Eber' to cross) of the Euphrates according to some authorities gave the name to the Hebrew nation. Abram's first resting-place in the land of Canaan was at the oak of Moreh near Shechem, where he built an altar. Here Abram received a second promise from Jehovah, "unto thy seed will I give this land." Proceeding south Abram built a second altar between Bethel and Ai. Thence pressed by famine he sought refuge in Egypt.

This visit of Abram to Egypt strikes the attention as an instance of contact between the two earliest civilisations of the world. By some authorities this visit is placed in the 12th dynasty, by others with greater probability at the time of the Hyksôs or Shepherd kings, who may have been like Abram Semites: (See however p. 154.) In this former case the favour shewn to Abram was not due to any tie of race or kinship but chiefly for his wife's sake whom, by a craftiness which would commend itself to Orientals, he represented to be his sister. The discovery of the fraud entailed the expulsion of Abram from the land.

Returning to Bethel Abram and Lot separated in order to secure wider pastures for their increasing flocks; Abram remaining in the Negeb or South Country, Lot descending to the fertile plain or Valley of the Jordan. Such a separation as that is a frequent occurrence for the same reason among the Bedouin tribes at the present day. The quiet settlement of Abram and Lot in the choice pastures of the land seems to imply a sparse population.

Modern research tends to shew that the Canaanite who 'was then in the land' is to be identified with the non-Semitic Hittite race; of which more is said below. See also the Appendix on The Nations surrounding Israel, p. 154. Indeed the names of Canaanite, Hittite and Amorite seem to be used interchangeably of the same people (comp. Gen. xiv. 13, xxiii. 2, 3, xxiv. 3). The separation from Lot is followed by a third blessing from Jehovah. The land in all its extent is promised to Abram and his seed for ever. Abram now settled by the oaks of Mamre in Hebron, where he again raised an altar to Jehovah. Meanwhile Lot is carried off as a prisoner of war by the victorious armies of Chedorlaomer (Khudur-lagamar) and his allies—confederate Chaldean princes—who had invaded the Jordan Valley to crush a revolt of the cities which for thirteen years had been subject to his rule. Abram was powerful enough with the aid of three Amorite chieftains to smite the armies of Khudur-lagamar, probably by a night attack, and to rescue Lot. Then ensued the meeting with the mysterious priest-king Melchizedec, who blessed Abram and received tithes from him (see Heb. vii.). This description of Melchizedec receives illustration from Chaldaea, where royalty seems to have been developed out of the priesthood, and the rulers to have borne like Melchizedec the twofold attributes of priests and kings.

Once more the promise is confirmed in a remarkable way. The faith of Abram, who is still without an heir, seems ready to wane; but Jehovah bidding him see in the stars of heaven an emblem of his countless seed, Abram's faith revived, "he believed and it was counted to him for righteousness" (Rom. iv. 3). Then, after a prescribed sacrifice, in which all sacrificial animals were included, the future of the race of Abram is revealed in a vision, and the promise of dominion again renewed. Before the heir of the promise is born the covenant of circumcision—the seal of the elect nation—is enjoined. The promise becomes more explicit, and as a further sign of divine favour the names of Abram and Sarai are changed to Abraham and Sarah. And at length in express terms three angelic visitors predict the birth of Isaac.

Abraham's next movement is further south to the court of the Philistine king, Abimelech, whom he deceived, as he had before deceived Pharaoh, in regard to the relationship of Sarah.

Isaac the son of the promise is born to Abraham and Sarah in their old age. Hagar and her son Ishmael are driven forth. Abraham making a covenant with Abimelech digs the well hence called Beer-Sheba (well of the oath).

Three points of interest stand out in the circumstances attending the burial of Sarah in the cave of Machpelah. (1) The contact with the Hittites, whose empire extended, as recent discoveries have shewn, from the Euphrates to the extreme north-west of Asia Minor; whose kings contended on equal terms with the kings of Egypt or Assyria; whose love of literature may be traced in the name of the Hittite Kirjath-Sepher ('city of books'); and whose art is evident by the curious sculptures found at Carchemish one of their capitals, and elsewhere. (2) The bargain with Ephron recalls the contract tablets of Ur (Mugheir), which record dealings of a similar character. (3) The purchase of a special place of sepulture finds a parallel in the sepulchral vaults of brick where the wealthier citizens of Ur placed their dead. One city Erech or Warka in Lower Chaldaea is literally a city of the dead, being filled with such places of sepulture, where the bodies are placed in jar-shaped earthenware coffins.

Isaac now takes to wife Rebekah daughter of Bethuel, whom Abraham's steward Eliezer had brought for him from his kinsfolk still dwelling in Padan-Aram.

Abraham dies, and the quiet life of Isaac succeeds. His home is in the south country, beside the well Beer-lahai-roi. Jacob like his father Isaac seeks a wife from the ancestral Haran. During the journey he sees a vision at Bethel, 'House of God' (comp. the Chaldean Babel or Babilu, 'Gate of God'), and there receives a renewal of the blessing and promise made to Abraham and Isaac. At Haran Jacob married two wives, daughters of his uncle Laban; one, Leah, through her father's fraud, the other, Rachel, by his own choice. Eleven sons were born to Jacob in Haran. But like Abraham Jacob left Haran by a direct call of Jehovah: "Return to the land of thy fathers and to thy kindred." The home return became of necessity a flight from his father-in-law. Jacob was overtaken by Laban at Mount Gilead. But the dispute was happily ended by a covenant ratified by a heap of witness, Gilead, and by sacrifices.

Another obstacle seemed to bar the return of Jacob. His brother Esau, now a formidable chieftain, met him on the way at Mahanaim. At night Jacob wrestled and prevailed with One whom he recognised as divine. From him he received a blessing and a new and significant name Israel ('he that striveth with God'). The scene of the divine conflict was called Peniel.

The meeting with Esau proved friendly, and Jacob went on in peace to Shechem (Gen. xxxiii. 18, R.V.).

There he purchased a parcel of ground and built an altar, calling for the first time on the God of Israel.—His new and sacred name—El-Elohe-Israel. A treacherous act on the part of Simeon and Levi produced a feud with Shechem. And, in obedience to divine command, Jacob went southward to Bethel, and there built an altar to the God who had appeared at Peniel. At Bethel the promise of the elect race was solemnly renewed.

At Ephrath or Bethlehem Rachel died in giving birth to Benjamin. The narrative turns aside (Gen. xxxvi.) from the history of the chosen seed to enumerate the descendants of Esau.

(2) JOSEPH TO JOSHUA.

The interest of the closing chapters of Genesis is centred in the history of Joseph. It is a career which determined and symbolized the future of Israel.

At the close of the book of Genesis Joseph appears as the chief of his race, who has dominion over his brethren. The 'house of Joseph' is the leading family (Gen. i. 7, 8). The next book opens without any trace of this supremacy either in Joseph or in his descendants. A period of three hundred and fifty years had passed, during which the numbers of Israel had increased with marvellous rapidity: "the land was filled with them." But the Israelites no longer enjoyed the honourable condition of free settlers—they had become a nation of slaves threatened with the danger of absorption into the mixed population of Egypt. Signs of this had appeared under the Hyksôs. In the mourning for Jacob the Canaanites had seen only the mourning of the Egyptians (Gen. i. 11). But events occurred to check the process of fusion. "There arose a new king over Egypt which knew not Joseph." The interpretation of this expression must be sought in the monuments. By one of the frequent dynastic changes in the land of Egypt the Hyksôs, grown degenerate through disuse of war, had given place to a new and powerful line of kings. The process of change however had been gradual. For a hundred years or more powerful princes of Upper Egypt had struggled against the supremacy of the Hyksôs. The final stroke was dealt by Ahmes, founder of the 18th dynasty, about 1700 B.C., who drove out the Hyksôs with great slaughter, pursuing them as far as to the borders of Palestine. The Israelites, hateful from their close relations to the shepherd race, were forced into the service of their conquerors. It was not however till the 19th dynasty that the oppression became unbearably harsh. Meantime, although the history of Israel was for the most part summed up in the daily monotonous tasks of slave labour on public works, such slavery was not inconsistent with wealth in flocks and herds, and possibly in stores of other kinds, or with the acquisition of skill in the various arts known to the Egyptians, such as metallurgy, gem-engraving, dyeing and weaving. There was some sort of organization too in the growing nation. We read of 'elders and officers of the people' (Ex. iii. 16), and when the Hebrews left Egypt, they left it in martial array.

The same period was an epoch of great and extended conquests for the Egyptian armies. Thothmes I., grandson of Ahmes, the first to break through the isolation of Egypt, made campaigns in Western Asia and beyond the Euphrates to the north, and in Nubia to the south. His daughter Hatasu controlled the government during the reign of her brother Thothmes II. and during the first 17 years of Thothmes III. The years of her supremacy were astir with commercial enterprise and with the erection of magnificent buildings. And yet her name, ordered by her successor to be erased from the monuments, has survived only by the accident of a workman's negligence. Thothmes III. carried out the aggressive policy of his father and pushed his conquests into Asia. He fought the Syrians (Rutennu of the monuments) at Megiddo on the plain of Esdraelon, destined to be the scene of many a decisive conflict in the history of Israel. In Mesopotamia he reduced the Hittites and the Assyrians to submission. Vast numbers of captives and spoils from the conquered peoples were carried into Egypt. Tribute too poured in to this great conqueror from Arabia and the Upper Nile. Thothmes III. is also distinguished by the number and grandeur of the temples which he enlarged or erected. His name is preserved on monuments now transferred to Rome and Constantinople, to New York and London.

The 18th dynasty lasted another century. Temples, colossi and obelisks at Thebes, Luxor, Karnak and elsewhere belonging to this period are among the most famous and enduring works of Egyptian art. One of two colossal statues of Amenhetep III. was celebrated by Greek and Roman writers, by a curious corruption, as the Vocal Memnon and associated with the legend of Memnon, son of Tithonus.

Under Amenhetep IV. or Khu-en-aten a monotheistic cult known as disk-worship was introduced into Egypt. Though in fact only one of the many forms of sun-worship, the principle which it contained of One supreme, powerful and living Being, shews an affinity to the truth, which may have grown out of Hebrew influence. In some external observances this worship seems to have affected the Hebrew ritual. Certainly the downfall of the disk-worshippers and the persecution of the Hebrews coincided in date, and were probably due to the same cause. The last king of the 18th dynasty overthrew the religious system of his immediate predecessors.

The 19th dynasty, a momentous epoch for Israel, began with a mighty struggle between Egypt and the Hittites. Seti I. and Ramses II.—the Pharaohs of the oppression—conducted campaigns in those parts of Syria and Palestine which had been devastated by Thothmes III. And though victories were gained and acts of royal daring were recorded on the monuments, no permanent conquest was achieved. The Hittite power remained unbroken. An alliance was concluded on equal terms with Ramses who married a daughter of the Hittite king. As a measure of defence on the north-eastern frontier Ramses II. constructed a wall from Pelusium to Pithom—in itself a sign of weakness and insecurity.

The great age of foreign conquest had passed for Egypt; but no monarchs have had grander conceptions of architectural splendour than Seti I. and Ramses II. The pillared hall at Karnak, and the palace-tombs, remarkable both for their beauty and for the thoughts of death and the unseen world which they embody, are the grandest of Seti's monuments. Ramses II. has left magnificent statues of himself. But the works of greatest interest for Hebrew history are the store-cities Pithom and Pa-Ramses, in the construction of which the Israelite slaves were employed. Pithom has been discovered and identified. The name signifies 'the abode of Tum,' the setting-sun-god. The store-chambers without doors or inlets at the side are constructed with three kinds of brick, some made with straw, some with reeds or 'stubble,' some with Nile mud alone; a striking testimony to the accuracy of the Bible narrative.

No direct reference to the enslaved Hebrews is found on the splendid monuments of the 18th and 19th dynasties: but the Semitic slave population generally is represented on the monuments as engaged in brickmaking, and Ramses II. boasted that his great buildings were erected by captives and not by native Egyptians.

The rule of great builders like Seti and Ramses sufficiently accounts for the acuter phase of slavery into which the Israelites passed. But there was another cause—their numbers had become a source of danger. This danger was twofold, loss of slave labour, and insurrection; the land of Goshen being the exposed frontier of Egypt, the side on which invasion might be expected. Accordingly as a means of crushing the spirit of the Israelites, and of diminishing their numbers, tasks of extreme severity were pressed upon them. Such forced labour was carried out at the cost of many lives. But still Israel multiplied. And even the harsher measure of slaying the male children at the moment of their birth was ineffectual to check the growth of the elect nation. The edict intended for the destruction of the race became indirectly the means of its salvation. The child who is taken from the papyrus flags of the river Nile to become the son of Pharaoh's daughter, by that means gains the ascendancy, culture and experience which enable him to deliver and guide his people. The life of Moses falls into three periods of forty years; (1) at Pharaoh's court; (2) in Arabia; (3) in the desert of the wanderings.

It was during the reign of Ramses II.—Sesostris of the Greeks—that Moses stirred with indignation at the suffering of his brethren "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter"; one of the noblest acts of self-sacrifice known to history. This resolution necessitated the flight into the land of Midian. There, whether on the east or west coast of the Gulf of Akabah is uncertain, Moses dwelt with Reuel, priest of Midian, whose daughter Zipporah he married. Reuel is sometimes identified with Jethro, but the identification, which depends on the rendering of the word translated father-in-law, is extremely doubtful. At the end of the uneventful sojourn in the land of Midian an incident occurred which gave rise to a fresh crisis—Moses had led the flocks of Jethro to the 'backside' or western part of the desert, where from the acacia bush which burnt but was not consumed came the revelation of the deliverance from Egypt and the promise of the land flowing with milk and honey.

This was the divine legation for Moses. It was ratified by a new name, that is, a new revelation of God, 'I am what I am,' denoting absolute eternal being—both in form and meaning nearly the equivalent of Jehovah (Yahveh), a title the full significance of which, unknown to the patriarchs, is now revealed. When Moses approaches Pharaoh we find his brother Aaron associated with him. He had doubtless shared with Moses a training in the wisdom of the Egyptians. The return of Moses to Egypt probably took place soon after the death of Ramses II. In that case the Pharaoh who refused to let the children of Israel go was Menephthah II. The character of this prince as described on the monuments corresponds with the picture drawn of him in the Bible. He had been put to the test already. A formidable invasion had taken place from the north-west of native Libyan tribes aided probably by troops from Greece and Sicily. Menephthah, 'warned in a dream by Phthah,' refuses to go to the front himself, but when victory is achieved he claims the glory of it. The same irresolution and lack of personal courage appear in the story of the Exodus.

The first demand of Moses for the release of his people only increased the severity of the oppression. They were commanded to make bricks without straw. This harsh act would in itself draw Israel more closely together, while the obstinate resistance of Pharaoh and the compliance twice given and withdrawn would in different ways train the people into readiness for their final departure. We may believe that during the few months—probably from June to April—during which the plagues continued the sense of national union, of a common cause and of trust in Jehovah, tended to unite and nerve the race for their supreme effort. The plagues seem at least in part to have been directed against the religious cult of Egypt. The account is full of local colour and even of native words.

The last plague alone directly touched Menephthah. The death of his firstborn son who shared his throne is recorded on the monuments. This blow at length broke the resistance, and Israel was delivered: "his hands were freed from the basket" (Ps. lxxxi. 6). The memory of this great deliverance never died out from national thought or national literature. It was the beginning of the national life, the type and pledge of all coming deliverances.

Before leaving Egypt the Hebrew women 'borrowed,' i.e. asked or claimed, of their Egyptian neighbours vessels and other articles. The incident marks more kindly relations between Israel and the Egyptian people than are generally supposed.

The precise course of the Exodus is still disputed. Ramses, named as the point of departure (Ex. xii. 37), was the royal city—the residence of Menephtah. Succoth or 'booths,' where the muster took place, is identified with Pithom, being the civil name, as Pithom was the sacred name. Succoth was the town which sprang up round the precincts of the temple of Tum. The ordinary line of march from hence to Palestine traversed by many an expedition under Thothmes or Ramses would be across the Egyptian frontier, and along the Mediterranean coast to the land of the Philistines. But this route was forbidden: "lest peradventure the people repent when they see war and they return to Egypt" (Ex. xiii. 17). The first encampment was at Etham 'on the edge of the wilderness.' At this point in obedience to the divine command the Hebrews turned back and marched southward, a course which seemed to entangle them in the land, and which encouraged the irresolute Menephtah to pursue.

Pi-hahiroth, Migdol and Baalzephon are not identified for certain; the first however was probably near the modern Ismailia, and Baalzephon ('the Lord of the North') may have been on the high land to the east across the sea. The passage was probably at a point, now dry land, where on the occurrence of high tides the Red Sea joined the waters of the Bitter Lakes. Certain conditions of wind and tide would produce the effects described in the Bible narrative. The 'Red Sea' is a misnomer—the Hebrew name Yam Suph, 'sea of weeds or sedge,' is characteristic, the Gulf of Suez being remarkable for the abundance and variety of its marine growth.

Here then the Hebrews with the mixed multitude to the number of 600,000 men, bearing with them the bones of Joseph and guided by the pillar of fire and by the cloud, safely accomplished the passage of two or three miles. The Egyptian host however, their chariots driving heavily in the thick mud thus temporarily exposed, perished miserably when tide and wind released the waters kept at bay for a while.

We note here that Pharaoh himself is not named as amongst those who perished. It is almost certain that he was not engaged in the actual pursuit. As previously in the Libyan invasion Menephtah left to his generals the task of meeting the enemy at close quarters. 'Warned by Phthah' he remained behind. This supposition falls in with the Egyptian records which imply the continuance of Menephtah's reign.

The monuments pass over the calamity of the Exodus in characteristic silence. But the revolt and civil war which fill up the annals of Menephtah's reign and the cessation from foreign expeditions indicate a condition of weakness such as must have followed the departure of Israel.

The next phase in the national life of Israel raises many questions. Among these are: the route taken across the wilderness—the position of Mount Sinai—the means of subsistence. The first and second are connected, and though the theory that the Hebrews followed the Haj route nearly due east from the point of crossing, and in the north of the Sinaitic peninsula, and that Sinai is to be sought among the mountains of Edom, has recently found able and learned support, the traditional view which takes the Hebrews southward along the western coast of the Gulf of Suez, and places Sinai in the south of the peninsula, is generally accepted.

As to the means of subsistence there is a good deal of evidence to shew that the Sinaitic region supported a far larger population than it does at present. Powerful tribes dwelling on the shores of the Red Sea had successfully resisted invasion from Egypt in former times. And at the period of the Exodus a large mining industry was carried on under Egyptian direction. The area of cultivation was then larger than it is now. But even at the present day the Bedouin grow wheat, and have abundance of dates, milk and flesh on which to subsist.

The wilderness was a mountainous district intersected with wide-spreading valleys down which sudden torrents run in winter, and in many there are perennial springs, pools and streams of running water.

The wilderness of Shur (Ex. xv. 22) is probably the same as the wilderness of Etham (Numb. xxxiii. 8), both implying the fortress wall constructed along the eastern frontier of Egypt. The term 'wandering in the desert' is misleading. The Hebrews would remain encamped like the modern Bedouin, sometimes for months, sometimes for a year, until their crops had grown. They had become a nomad tribe.

The various resting-places on the march are for the most part identified with tolerable certainty by modern travellers—Marah, now 'Ayn Mûsa, with many springs of somewhat brackish or 'bitter' water—Elim, where the Israelites encamped for a month, re-discovered in the Wady Gharandel with its streams and rich vegetation. The turn to the Red Sea from Elim (Numb. xxxiii. 10) would be taken to avoid the Egyptian garrisons stationed at the copper mines of Sarbut-el-Khadim, the position and workings of which are still known. It was the proximity of these mines, and the possibility of return to slavery and the regular rations of the slave, that made the rising discontent doubly dangerous.

In the wilderness of Sin, probably a sea-side plain, the Hebrews, yearning after the flesh-pots of Egypt, were fed with manna. After passing Dophkah and Alush the host of Israel reached Rephidim, identified with the long and winding valley now called Wady Feiran, where maddened by the desert thirst (see Ps. lxxiii. 1), the people 'chode' with Moses: 'Why had he brought them up out of Egypt to kill them and their children and their cattle with thirst?' At God's command Moses struck the rock in Horeb and a stream of water flowed forth. But in memory of the temptation and the chiding the place was named Meribah and Massah. X

At Rephidim the Hebrews encountered their first foe, the Amalekites, and won their first victory, under Joshua, at that time Hoshea—a name of good omen. The Amalekites are first mentioned Gen. xiv. 7. Unless therefore that passage is proleptic, the tribe was not descended from the Edomite Amalek. Arab historians by a probable tradition represent the Amalekites as driven from their original seat on the Persian Gulf by the pressure of the Babylonian power. The incursion of Israel from the west threatened their hold on the Sinaitic peninsula. It was more than a struggle for springs of water or for pasturage. The words of Ex. xvii. 14 are remarkable: "Write this for a memorial in a book and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua: that I will utterly put out the memorial of Amalek from under heaven." See also 1 Sam. xv. 2, 3 and 1 Chron. iv. 43.

The friendship of Jethro, priest of Midian—the other ruling tribe in the peninsula—stands in contrast with the hostility of Amalek. Jethro, who was either father-in-law or brother-in-law of Moses, visits the Hebrew camp bringing with him Zipporah the wife of Moses and his two sons Gershom and Eliezer. On his advice Moses organizes a plan for the orderly government of the people, appointing able men to be 'rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens' (Ex. xviii. 25). This was undoubtedly a measure of great importance in the training of Israel for national life.

In exactly three months after the Exodus the camp of Israel was pitched before Sinai. The site is disputed, but the height of Râs Sûsafêh on the north-west cliffs of Jebel Mûsa seems to answer the required conditions better than any other mountain in the peninsula. The lowest rocks rise abruptly from the plain of Er Râhâh, a wide expanse suitable for the encampment of the thousands of Israel. Through wild ravines between mighty walls of rock Moses scaled the heights of Sinai to receive the divine message: "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all peoples: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Ex. xix. 4-6).

On the third day amid thunder and lightnings and smoke like a furnace (again an Egyptian word is used) Moses conversed with God. He is charged once more to enjoin on the people to observe the bounds placed round the sacred mountain.

Again Moses ascended the mount, this time with Aaron, and the Lord spake 'face to face with the people out of the midst of the fire' (Deut. v. 4). Of the Commandments—the ten words—there given which were destined to mould the religious life of Israel and of the whole world, it is enough to note here: (1) how that in their deepest interpretation they cover the teaching of the New Covenant as well as of the Old; (2) how completely they impressed themselves on Hebrew thought and life through all the ages of their history. Even Pagan writers hundreds of years afterwards caught fragments of them from the lips of Jews. When Martial speaks of the Jew forswearing himself: "jura, verpe, per Anchialum" (Ep. xi. 94. 8), he is unconsciously quoting the first 'Word': while Juvenal characterizes the Jew as "metuentem sabbata" (Sat. xiv. 96). The same poet describes the law of Moses as written "arcano volumine" (Sat. xiv. 102).

The law given from Sinai—the book of the Covenant—is contained in Exodus xx. to xxiii. 19. Besides the ten commandments there are rules for justice, equity and purity far transcending any known ancient legislation, and regulations in regard to the Sabbatical year and the observance of the three great feasts of the Passover, of the Firstfruits, and of the Ingathering, and in regard to sacrifice and offerings.

In the Angel who is promised as the guide and protector of Israel we may discern the presence of Jehovah Himself.

The Covenant is ratified by sacrifice, and sprinkling of blood—an act of deep significance (Ex. xxiv. 7, 8. Cp. St Matthew xxvi. 28). At the sacrificial feast which followed the God of Israel manifested His presence to Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu and seventy elders of Israel: 'they heard the voice of words, but saw no form' (Deut. iv. 12). After that Moses and his minister Joshua went up into the mount of God, and were in the mount forty days and forty nights (Ex. xxiv. 13-18).

During the forty days on Sinai the pattern of the Tabernacle is presented to Moses (Ex. xxv. 1-xxxi. 11). As in other instances of divine illumination the elements of human culture and association are to be taken into account. Many of the details are influenced by Egyptian art. The materials are such as the special circumstances of time and place would suggest. Artificers of known skill, Bezalel, grandson of Hur, and according to Josephus husband of Miriam, of the tribe of Judah, and Oholiab, of the tribe of Dan, were appointed to the work. Each of them was inspired with divine wisdom "to work in all manner of workmanship." The special task of Bezalel was the carved work in metal, wood or stone, that of Oholiab the coverings and curtains of the tent.

The people were called upon to make freewill offerings of dyed wool, fine linen, skins of rams and of seals or porpoises (not badgers' skins), wood, oil, incense and precious stones. The number, variety and costliness of the offerings are explained partly by the spoils taken from Amalek, partly by the gifts of Egypt. And it may also be supposed that during the earlier and less oppressive years of the Egyptian bondage the Hebrews were allowed to trade on their own account, while their large flocks would enable them to barter with the desert caravans.

The most sacred deposit in the sanctuary, or innermost chamber of the tabernacle, was the Ark of the Covenant—a box or coffer (Heb. aron) of acacia wood covered with gold. It was the motive for the sacred dwelling and its central object. Above it was the mercy-seat and over that the Cherubim with wings that met. And there in an awful sense was the actual presence of Jehovah dwelling with His people.

It was the Ark of the Covenant containing the 'book of the law,' the visible sign of the compact between Jehovah and His people, and therefore closely associated with the election and sanctification of Israel.

While this scene went on among the cliffs of Sinai, the people in the plain below, weary and distrustful in the long absence of Moses, demanded of Aaron that he should make them a god (Ex. xxxii. 1, R. V. marg.) to go before them. Aaron yielded. With his own hands he fashioned a molten calf from the golden rings which the people offered, built an altar to the idol and proclaimed a feast. He spoke indeed of 'a feast to the Lord.' But it was in fact the Egyptian worship of Mnevis or Apis thinly veiled.

Moses intercedes for his brethren, averting the just wrath of Jehovah. He chooses rather to be their mediator than on the ruin of Israel to be the founder of a new nation. But as he descends the flanks of Sinai, not the front of the mountain facing the plain, he hears the sounds of revelry. Drawing near to the camp in his anger he brake the tables of stone, "the work of God," written on both sides, resembling probably the inscribed tablets from Babylonia and Egypt. The golden calf is ground to powder and strewn upon the water. The tribe of Levi execute a more terrible vengeance, slaying three thousand of their brethren. Again at the passionate prayer of Moses atonement is made and the sin forgiven (Ex. xxxii. 32).

But for the moment it appeared as if the Covenant had been broken. The Lord will not Himself go up with the host: He will send an angel before them. Moses removes his tent (according to LXX., q. v.) apart from the camp. But the people shewing signs of penitence the mediator once more pleads for his people, and finds grace.

Again Moses ascends the mount, this time alone. A fresh revelation is made of Jehovah as: "Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin" (Ex. xxxiv. 7). The Covenant is solemnly renewed with a special warning against idolatry. "And he wrote upon the tables the words of the Covenant, the ten words" (Ex. xxxiv. 28). Descending to the plain Moses addressed the people, his face shining with reflected glory as he spoke, after which he put a vail upon his face (Ex. xxxiv. 33. Comp. 2 Cor. iii. 12–15). (The curious mis-translation of the Vulgate in Ex. xxxiv. 29, "ignorabat quod cornuta esset facies," gave rise to the representation of Moses with horns on his forehead.)

After this the Tabernacle is constructed in accordance with the pattern given on Sinai.

One point in the significance of Sinai as the scene of the giving of the Law may be noted here. It was an ancient sanctuary dedicated to the Babylonian moon-god Sin, from whom the name is derived. The new and purer religion proceeds from a stronghold of an ancient cult; just as the truth about the Christ was first confessed at Cæsarea Philippi (Paneas), where a temple of the deified Augustus was built close to a sanctuary of Pan.

Before leaving Sinai Moses by divine command takes a census of the people. The means of doing this had been already furnished by the contribution of half a shekel from each adult male for the erection of the sanctuary (Ex. xxxviii. 25–28). The total number of those "able to go forth to war in Israel" was six hundred and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

The encampment at Sinai lasted for rather more than a year (Numb. i. 1). It was a critical and momentous epoch for Israel as a nation and as a church. There Israel made the Covenant with Jehovah and received the law which created and sustained its national distinctiveness.

Recent criticism has raised the question whether the whole of the Pentateuchal legislation including the priestly and sacrificial ordinances is contemporary with Moses. Briefly stated the new theory sees a simple primitive code (Ex. xx.—xxiii.), a later 'law of Deuteronomy,' put in its present form about the reign of Josiah, and a still later priestly code, not traceable in the religious life of Israel before the exile. So far as the external history is concerned it is not of great importance to determine whether the nation was guided in its development by progressive legislation or by progressive acceptance of an existing code. The former is more in accordance with the usual laws of national growth, the latter agrees with a rigorously literal interpretation of the Pentateuch, not perhaps with a deeper knowledge of Hebrew literary methods. A good deal more however is at stake than external history. And though the recent discussion has thrown some fresh light on the structure of the Bible, the difficulties raised by the new solution are perhaps as great as those which it attempts to remove.

The Israelites now strike their tents and enter the wilderness of Paran. Hobab the son of Reuel, probably brother of Jethro, whose intimate knowledge of the desert made his guidance valuable, at the request of Moses became to Israel "instead of eyes." It must not be supposed that even at Sinai the whole tribe of Israel remained encamped in one spot, certainly this would not be the case during the thirty-eight years and three months during which they 'wandered' in the wilderness. As with the modern Bedouin, detachments would go in search of pasturage in distant wādys, returning at times to the central encampment. This custom helps to explain the difficulty sometimes raised as to the supply of food for the vast host of Israel and the mixed multitude who accompanied them from Egypt.

The march was in regular and prescribed order, the 'camps' of the tribes distinguished by standards took their appointed places around the tabernacle, and each family had its proper 'ensign' (athl). The special charge of the Tabernacle and of the services connected with it was committed to the Priestly and Levitical families. The few events recorded of the desert life bespeak the severe discipline still needed for Israel: "when he slew them then they inquired after him... for their heart was not right with him neither were they faithful in his covenant" (Ps. lxxviii. 34, 37). It is the story of a generation unworthy of the promise passing away. They murmur, and "fire was kindled against Jacob," the lightning consumed those that were in the uttermost parts of the camp. The renewed craving for the plentiful slaves' fare in Egypt was again satisfied with flocks of quails driven by the south-east wind across the desert; but the graves of lust (Kibroth-hattaavah) proved how little the grace of heaven was deserved. The appointment of seventy elders was an important event; but the institution was not a permanent one, and its connexion with the Sanhedrin cannot be defended by historical proof.

At Kadesh Israel came within reach of the promised land. Modern travellers have ascertained the site of this fair spot (the En-Mishpat of Gen. xiv. 7), where water, now Ain Kades, springing from the rocks and falling in rivulets through the wādy, produces so rich a vegetation that it is hard to realize it as a desert scene. The name of Kadesh, signifying 'holy,' as well as that of En-Mishpat—"the well of judgement"—indicates that here was an ancient sanctuary and place of judgement.

From Kadesh the twelve spies are sent forth to explore the land of Canaan, and thither they return with their report. Joshua and Caleb alone encourage an advance. The words of the other ten spies stir the rebellious spirit of the Israelites to a height. They would stone Joshua and Caleb, they would choose a captain of their own and return to Egypt. The divine sentence marks the measure of their guilt. Not one of this congregation above the age of twenty, with the exception of Caleb and Joshua, shall survive to enter the promised land. From this point the penal wandering for 38 years commenced.

But even while mourning for this heavy judgement the people of their own self-will ascend the 'mountain top' and are there attacked by the Amalekites and Canaanites and grievously defeated at a place afterwards called Hormah.

At this point of the narrative the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram is inserted, possibly out of chronological order but with logical fitness as another illustration of the rebellious spirit of the people. Korah's protest was against the priestly supremacy of the house of Aaron, also, it is conjectured, against the appointment of Elizaphan (Num. iii. 30), who belonged to a younger branch, to be 'chief of the house of the families of the Kohathites.' Dathan, Abiram and On (named once only) as Reubenites claimed the lost rights of primogeniture—"They envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron the saint of the Lord" (Ps. cvi. 16). The conspiracy was supported by two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, belonging probably to other tribes. It would appear from Ps. cvi. 17, 18 that the Reubenites and their followers were swallowed up by the earth, while the flame from the altar consumed the rebellious Levites.

The authority of the priesthood was further confirmed by the dedication of the brazen censers, the plague among the rebellious people, the atonement of Aaron, and the budding of Aaron's rod.

The encampment in the wilderness of Zin was close to Kadesh. Here Miriam died; here too was a second Meribah, named from the same reason as the first, but marked by the sin of Moses the great leader, who "spoke unadvisedly with his lips." Passionate anger expressed by word and act resulting in dishonour to God lost for Moses and Aaron the privilege of leading Israel into the promised land. From Kadesh Moses sends a message to Edom from his "brother Israel" asking permission to pass through his land. The refusal of Edom necessitated a more circuitous route.

The first stage in this route brings the children of Israel to Mount Hor. The name is indefinite, simply signifying 'mountain,' and the identification with the castellated summit near Petra is disputed in favour of a height now called Moderah to the north of Kadesh. Here in solemn and impressive circumstances Aaron died on the lonely summit.

The attack of the Canaanite king of Arad falls in better with the more northern position of Mount Hor. Arad is in the South Country or Negeb, 20 miles south of Hebron. This second contact with the Canaanites ended in their defeat and utter destruction, a fact commemorated in the name Hormah given to the place. Numb. xxi. 3.

Their route now brought the host of Israel by the way of the Red Sea, close to Ezion-geber, whence they marched up the Arabah according to some authorities, but more probably on the eastern side of Mount Seir to the land of Moab.

Another mutinous outbreak in the great and terrible wilderness brought upon Israel the penalty of fiery serpents—snakes marked with flame-like spots or whose poisonous bite caused acute inflammation. The incident of the cure wrought by means of the brazen serpent placed upon a pole is of deep spiritual interest from the reference made to it by our Lord (St John iii. 14, 15).

The refusal of Sihon king of the Amorites to allow a passage is met by an attack and defeat by Israel. The capture of Heshbon, Sihon's capital, once a city of Moab, is celebrated by a psalm of great vigour and beauty (Numb. xxi. 27—30). Another victory swiftly followed over Og king of Bashan. The scene of Og's defeat, Edrei (now Edra'ah), is a site of remarkable interest. Modern explorations have discovered an elaborately contrived subterranean city with streets, shops, and market-place large enough to contain a whole population.

The Israelites have now possessed themselves of the fertile pasture-lands on the east of the Jordan. They encamp at Abel-Shittim, the 'Acacia meadow' beyond the Jordan, at Jericho. They had vanquished the redoubtable race of the Amorites, who had previously wrested from Moab a portion of their territory extending southward to the river Arnon.

The Moabites witnessing the fall of their formidable conquerors understood the nearness of their own danger. There is some evidence to shew that Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, was a Midianite chieftain who had acquired the lordship over the Moabites in their weakened condition. His recourse to Balaam was a counsel of despair. The narrative of this soothsayer's intervention is full of interest—his home, Pethor on the Euphrates—his knowledge of Jehovah—his mixed and vacillating character—his shameful policy and his miserable end are deeply instructive, but only partially touch the external history of Israel. The star to come out of Jacob and the sceptre to rise out of Israel had a nearer fulfilment in the victories of Israel age after age over the warriors of Moab 'the sons of tumult' (Numb. xxiv. 17), and a later one in the days of the Messiah. Up to this time the new generation of Israel had displayed a spirit very different from that of the generation who perished in the wilderness. They had met with the success of a vigorous disciplined race. Their fall came through the licentious worship of the Moabite gods. They joined themselves to Baal-Peor, who is possibly to be identified with Chemosh 'the vanquisher,' the special god of the Moabite race. The zeal of Phinehas in slaying the offending Israelite prince, and in interceding for the guilty people, "was counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore" (Ps. cvi. 31). This act of zeal (kanna) must be noted as one fruitful in example in the history of Israel. See St John ii. 17; St Matt. x. 4.

In a census taken of the people in the plains of Moab, Caleb and Joshua alone remained of the six hundred thousand who were numbered at Sinai. Two decisions (Numb. xxvii. 7 and xxxvi. 6, 7) in the case of the daughters of Zelophehad gave occasion for important rules in the law of inheritance and of tribal property which would determine similar cases in after years.

One task of solemn vengeance remained for Moses to accomplish before his death. Midian as a nation had sinned in the most flagrant and shameful way which it is possible to conceive. Their extermination was the act of the wrath of God. The arrangements and conduct of the expedition mark vividly its judicial character. If the severity of the judgement seems to need explanation it may be remembered that divine judgement by war stands on the same level as divine judgements by pestilence or famine or death in the wilderness. The solution stated briefly is to see here the moral law acting with the same inflexible consequences as the laws of nature.

The immense spoil was divided between those who went out to war and those who remained in the camp, a five-hundredth part being first dedicated for an offering to the Lord.

The first step towards a division of the conquered territory among the tribes of Israel was now taken by assigning the districts east of the Jordan to Reuben, Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh, i.e. the families descended from Machir (Numb. xxxii. 40). The assignment however was made on the condition that these tribes should aid their brethren in the campaign on the western side of the Jordan.

At the same time three cities of refuge were named in the territory of the two tribes and a half; Bezer, Ramoth in Gilead, and Golan (Deut. iv. 43). Three others afterwards appointed on the western side were, Kedesh, Shechem and Hebron (Josh. xx. 7, 8).

The death of Moses is variously described as taking place on Mount Nebo or on Pisgah. Nebo is probably named from the Babylonish deity—the god of literature—the divine interpreter to men of the will of the gods—a suggestive association. Pisgah is 'the height' or 'summit.' Both are points in the range of the Moab mountains. The precise scene of this great event is still unknown; and yet endeavours have been made to describe and picture the very localities which presented themselves to the dying prophet's eye. But the pathos and meaning of the death of Moses are quite independent of such local particulars. It was a great work ended on the brink of a larger accomplishment. And yet there was a fitness in the moment of his departure. The Jordan was the limit of a definite crisis in history which was determined by the work of Moses. With him an epoch closed, with his successor a new one began.

(3) THE CONQUEST OF THE LAND OF CANAAN. JOSHUA.

The narrative in this book, which extends from the death of Moses to the death of Joshua, contains little external history, but it is the story of a great change in the character of the people. Those who hitherto had led the life of nomads now became a settled nation. The events which preceded their settlement have already been enumerated (p. 54).

The whole length of the sacred and memorable land of which they took possession does not exceed 140 miles; its breadth varies from 40 to 50 miles; its area is about equal to that of Wales.

The same seven nations (iii. 10) possessed the land who held it hundreds of years before, in the time of Abraham. But since then the armies of Egyptian conquerors had repeatedly swept through the land and had been the cause of at least one great change. Everywhere strongly fortified towns had sprung up, with walls 'reaching to heaven.' Those of Lachish, lately exposed by excavation, shew a breadth of 28 ft. with all the indication of great height.

The invasion under Joshua is marked by considerable military skill. Instead of making the attack, as before, by attempting to force the difficult mountains of Southern Palestine, strongly defended by walled towns, Joshua directs his invasion towards the comparatively undefended East.

There seems no doubt that the reputation of the people had preceded them. Of this there is evidence in the story of Rahab, whose words to the spies shew that the fame of Israel and the name of Israel's God were known. "Swear unto me by the Lord" (ii. 12), is her entreaty, after she has enumerated the mighty works whose hearing had made the hearts of the people to melt. She who thus sought safety afterwards married the Israelite Salmon, and thus found a place in the ancestry of David and of the Christ.

The spies return with good news; and the army prepares to cross the Jordan, at the season of harvest, when the impetuous river, 'the descender,' rushing down its tropical valley with a fall of 60 ft. to the mile, increased in volume by the melting snow of Hermon, seemed to render a passage impossible. The spies must have crossed by swimming, and no other mode was then available. On this, as on other occasions, Jehovah intervened for the salvation of the elect people. But though the narrative recounts these interventions, it lays no less stress on all the human means which were employed in the conquest.

At Gilgal,—so called from the 'rolling away' of the reproach,—the neglected rite of circumcision was renewed, and the people thus again brought into covenant with Jehovah celebrated the Passover for the first time in the land of promise.

A march of seven or eight miles across the level Jordan valley brought the host of Israel to Jericho—the city of palm trees. Once on each of the following six days the Israelites went round the Canaanite stronghold, and on the seventh day they compassed it seven times. Then at the sound of the trumpet "by faith the walls of Jericho fell down" (Heb. xi. 30). The rich spoil was dedicated to the Lord. All living beings within the city were destroyed save Rahab and her house. Jericho was laid under a curse: no fortified city was hereafter to rise on its site.

On the heights above stood Ai and Bethel. The first attack on Ai ended in a repulse; which was traced to the sin of Achan, who had transgressed by appropriating to himself from the spoil of Jericho gold and silver and a Babylonish garment (Heb. a mantle of Shinar). When the crime was expiated by the death of Achan and his children and by the destruction of all his goods, Ai was taken by a stratagem rendered possible by local conditions traceable to this day—a wide valley or Arabah (viii. 14) to the north, where the main body was posted, and on the west a ridge behind which the ambush of 5000 men could be securely placed.

After the conquest of Ai the march from that place to Shechem—a day's stage in a modern traveller's journey—met with no opposition from the Canaanites. It brought Israel to the centre of the land of promise, and to scenes memorable in the history of the Patriarchs.

Here Joshua carried out the command given to Moses (Deut. xxvii.). By three solemn acts he conveyed to Israel the lesson and the true historical meaning of the conquest. It was a renewal not only of the covenant of Sinai, but also of the covenant with Abraham and Jacob.

1. A copy of the law—probably the decalogue is meant—is inscribed on plastered stones and placed on Mount Ebal.

2. An altar of unhewn stones is raised and offerings made to the Lord God.

3. The blessings and curses of the law are solemnly recited by the Levites (or by Joshua himself; see Josh. viii. 34, 35), standing in the valley between Ebal and Gerizim, the six tribes on Ebal answering Amen as the curses were pronounced, and the six on Gerizim responding in like manner to the blessings.

It was probably now that the bones of Joseph which had been carried from Egypt were laid in the piece of ground purchased by Jacob (xxiv. 31, 32).

The conquest of the land was achieved by two campaigns, one in the south, the other in the north. In the former the most remarkable event was the battle of Beth-horon. Five chieftains were leagued against the Gibeonites, who, by subtlety, had made peace with Joshua.

Against them, with characteristic swiftness, Joshua marched up the passes from his camp at Gilgal, at night, and came suddenly on the kings encamped before Gibeon. The battle of Beth-horon, which followed, was one of the most important in the history of the world. It decided Joshua's southern campaign. The few lines of local description present the scene with the utmost vividness. The fight was at Gibeon (x. 10): the pursuit, first on the ascent to Upper Beth-horon ('place of caves'), then in the descent to Lower Beth-horon. At this point it was that a fierce hailstorm fell upon the fleeing enemy and slew more than the sword had slain.

It was then that Joshua spoke in words given in poetical form in the Book of Jasher ('the record of the upright'). It can hardly be doubted that misconception has arisen from pressing the poetical language of the Book of Jasher into the prose of actual fact; and that it is not necessary to suppose a stoppage in the revolution of the earth. It is indeed contended, with much probability, that the meaning of the phrase has been misunderstood, and that Joshua's prayer was not for a lengthened day, but for continuance of the darkness of the storm.—'Sun, stand thou still,' which is literally, 'Sun, be thou silent,' would mean, 'cease to shine'—a condition more favourable than the light of noon to the armies of Israel. The darkness would have the same effect on the Amorites as the eclipse at Pydna, or the dark thunderstorm at the river Crimesus, or as the strange darkness which fell upon the combatants at the battle of Evesham. For an able argument in support of this view the reader is referred to a work by the Rev. A. Smythe Palmer, entitled, A Misunderstood Miracle.

The entire subjugation of Southern Palestine followed on this victory.

The land here won by Israel was familiar to Egyptian conquerors, from whose records it appears certain that the Hebrews destroyed nations far in advance of them in wealth, culture, and the arts of civilisation. Hebron, whose ruin is described in a single line, was one of the seats of Hittite refinement; the name of Debir—the sacred city—otherwise called Kiriath-Sopher, the city of books, indicates a literary centre, in which a library of inscribed tablets, such as have been found in Assyria and Babylonia, had a place in one of its temples. But it is equally certain that flagrant vices characteristic of advanced pagan civilisation prevailed to an extent which called down the just wrath of heaven.

The swiftness of Joshua's movements had prevented a hostile combination of Northern and Southern Canaan against the invaders. The north was left to struggle alone. Jabin, king of Hazor, headed a confederacy which was especially formidable to Israel from the number of its chariots. Their muster was at the waters of Merom. But while they were still unprepared for battle, possibly in a night attack, Joshua fell upon them like a thunder-bolt, as the word implies (xi. 7). The victory was decisive, and Northern Palestine was largely subdued thereby.

There remained however both large tracts of country, as well as separate cities, which were in the possession of the Canaanites. And though, after these great victories, Joshua proceeded to allot the land to the various tribes, the trans-Jordanic contingent was dismissed, and it was left to each tribe to expel its own enemies.

The notes of Joshua's final addresses were those of his own life, strength, courage and obedience. The watchword for national policy was separateness, to be maintained by prohibition of alien marriages. At Shechem, where the second of the addresses was given, the argument is drawn from history, especially the history of the conquest. There Joshua renewed the Covenant of Sinai, and wrote the words of promise in 'the book of the law of God,' and for a memorial set up a great stone 'under the oak which was in the sanctuary of Jehovah.'

Joshua died at the age of one hundred and ten. The force of his influence is shewn in the obedience of Israel as long as any of the elders who had overlived Joshua still survived.

At this time the burial of Joseph is recorded, though it probably occurred earlier. His body, embalmed in Egyptian fashion, had been carried through the wilderness, and in the Holy Land, during the seven years of the conquest.

(4) THE PERIOD OF THE JUDGES.

With the Judges the history of Israel enters into a new phase. Joshua had no true successor. For a time the national unity is lost or slenderly maintained. Great figures with partial authority come upon the scene and then vanish. But the commanding genius which controls a whole people is absent during the times of the Judges. It was a period of transition which culminated in the reforming work of Samuel and in the settled monarchy that grew up under his guidance. But the two distinctive notes of the kingdom, consolidation of the tribes, and hereditary succession, are traceable even under the Judges. Tribal combinations were formed under each great leader, and in the case of Gideon the principle of hereditary monarchy was all but reached. On the other hand that which seemed to be the essential idea in the period of the Judges,—the right of the strongest to rule,—lay at the root of the Hebrew monarchy. Saul and David secured their authority by the claim of conquest as much as Barak or Gideon.

While the political condition of Israel was disturbed and the national cohesion lost, religion had also ceased to act as a central force. The Sanctuary at Shiloh was doubtless not without influence. But it was not the only place where sacrifice could be offered. Nor is sacrifice any longer exclusively a priestly function. The chief of the clan or the head of the family sacrifices to Jehovah without rebuke. Gideon, Manoah and Samuel are instances of this use. The rule is theocratic in name, but the observance of the law is difficult to trace. And yet this period is one of the most interesting and instructive of the many portions and many modes in which the divine revelation was given (Heb. i. 1). It is the history of God's purpose working for salvation when humanly speaking Israel was in grievous danger of being crushed or assimilated by the heathen nations around. No book perhaps has inspired history more than this, or more keenly stimulated the struggle for religious freedom in after ages.

The first task of the several tribes was to complete the conquest within their own borders. Judah, partly with the aid of Simeon, reduced many cities to submission and possessed the hill country, but "could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron." Benjamin fails in like manner to expel the Jebusites from Jerusalem. Manasseh, Ephraim, Zebulun, Asher and Naphtali shewed the same leniency or weakness in regard to many towns within their borders. And Dan was forced back into 'the mountain' by the Amorites, who maintained themselves strongly in the south (Judges i. 36).

The disciplinary character of the oppressions is explained in ch. ii. The nations were left to prove Israel. The judge raised from time to time as a deliverer bore a prophetic character. "The Lord was with the judge" (v. 18). Disobedience to him implied breaking away from the Covenant (v. 17).

The Israelites having fallen into the idolatrous cult of Baal and Ashtoreth or Astarte (Istar of the inscriptions) were for eight years oppressed by Cushan-rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia (Heb. Aram-Naharaim = Syria of the two rivers). Othniel, Caleb's youngest brother, the first judge and deliverer of Israel, "went out to war" and prevailed against Cushan-rishathaim.

After the 'rest' of forty years renewed idolatry brought upon Israel an invasion of Moab aided by Ammon and Amalek. For eighteen years Eglon king of Moab oppressed the land. Ehud the left-handed Benjamite slew the tyrant by an act of treachery. His true title to fame however lies in the crushing defeat of Moab at the fords of the Jordan, the result of which was peace for eighty years.

Shamgar who achieved the exploit, probably at this period, of slaying six hundred Philistines with an ox-goad is not formally reckoned among the judges, though the expression 'the days of Shamgar' found in Deborah's song implies some kind of eminence.

The great struggle with the northern Canaanites produces one of the most memorable episodes in Hebrew history. Israel lapsed into evil after the death of Ehud, a testimony to his influence for good; and the Lord sold them into the hand of Jabin ('the wise' or 'prudent') king of Canaan. It is the reverse of redeeming them from the hand of the enemy. Jabin's stern rule, supported by a formidable army in which nine hundred chariots of iron were the most dreaded force, lasted for twenty years. The headquarters of his general, Sisera, were at Harosheth of the Gentiles, a name signifying 'a forest district,' or, according to others, 'a smithy' or 'iron foundry.' Deborah, the prophetess who judged Israel in those evil days, summoned the people to resist. Barak ('lightning') promised to lead the host if Deborah would go with him.

Zebulun, Naphtali and Issachar were foremost in the battle; Ephraim, Benjamin and Manasseh sent detachments.

Barak descended from Mount Tabor at the head of ten thousand men. The swelling of the river Kishon, and the storm of rain, contributed to the Canaanite defeat. Sisera fled on foot from the battle. Heber the Kenite had settled with his clan in the north of Palestine. In his tent Sisera sought refuge. There he fell by the hands of Jael, Heber's wife, who, perhaps to escape the charge of treachery, offered not water but curdled milk or lubban, and then slew the guest as he slumbered for weariness. This deed, which cannot be characterized here, must be measured by a standard of morality far below the Christian code.

The next invasion was still more harassing. For seven years, season after season, hordes of Midianites with the Amalekites and nomad tribes called 'the children of the East' poured into the land of the Israelites, who were forced to take refuge in the caves or mountain fastnesses. The deliverer this time was Gideon, a Manassite dwelling at Ophrah. The circumstances of his call—the secret threshing of corn in the winepress at Ophrah—the destruction of the image of Baal, and of the Asherah (wrongly translated 'grove' in A.V.), a wooden image for licentious worship—the quaint humour of the name Jerubbaal—the signs given and the gathering of the host—present a vivid picture of the times. Strong in his faith Gideon reduces his army to three hundred men, the bravest and wisest of the thirty-two thousand who had gathered round him. Adding by a singular stratagem to the terror of a night attack he throws into utter confusion the countless forces of the enemy. There is much in the rapid decision of Gideon, in his high courage and even in the plan of a night attack, to remind us of Joshua. The Ephraimites summoned by Gideon seized the fords of the Jordan at Beth-barah and here intercepted the fugitives, and slew the petty chieftains, Oreb and Zeeb (the 'raven' and the 'wolf'). The pursuit was continued, and in a great battle at Karkor, east of the Jordan, Zebah and Zalmunna, the kings or highest sheiks of the Midianites, were captured and slain by Gideon, whose own brother these chieftains had previously put to death.

After the victory Gideon proceeded to take cruel vengeance on the men of Succoth and Penuel, who had refused supplies of food to the pursuing armies. The fierce wrath of the Ephraimites, who had been called late to the battle, was calmed by the address of Gideon. His answer is a model of conciliatory speech.

The victorious judge refused the supreme power offered him by the grateful tribes. But he fell into graver sin than the assumption of royalty would have been. At Gideon's request the gold earrings taken from the Midianites were thrown into a garment or hyke, and presented to him. Out of these was made an ephod of great costliness, which became the object of a superstitious worship.

Gideon died in a good old age, and was buried at Ophrah. The restraint which he exercised in Israel is proved by the sudden outbreak into lawlessness and idolatry which followed his death. They "made Baal-berith (Baal of the Covenant) their god."

The story of Abimelech, son of Gideon by a Shechemite woman, is not strictly a continuation of the history of the judges. It is an episode like the two narratives at the end of the book vividly illustrating the character of the times. It marks the tendency towards the monarchy, and, on the other hand, it marks the evil of usurped power, it is an anticipation of the swift changes and blood-stained annals of the northern kingdom. Aided by his father's prestige and by the influence of his Shechemite kinsmen, Abimelech is made king—the first mention of the title in Hebrew history; though the name Abimelech itself involves it. The whole movement is Canaanite rather than Israelitish in its incidents. It is supported by silver from the temple of Baal-berith, and Abimelech's first step is to slay seventy of his brethren upon one stone at Ophrah. The youngest, Jotham, who alone escaped, uttered from the top of Mount Gerizim the famous parable of the bramble and the trees, indicating with shrewd and characteristic humour the meaning of Abimelech's success. For three years Abimelech was 'prince' over Israel (ix. 22, R.V.). His influence, however, extended little beyond the walls of Shechem, and even there his rule was disputed. Gaal, the son of Ebed, organized a revolt in the absence of Abimelech, who had, however, left Zebul in charge of his interests in the city. It was probably a rising of the Israelites against the Canaanite population (ix. 28). On his return Abimelech retook the city and burnt the tower of Shechem, a hold or fortress which was also a sanctuary of Baal-berith, in which a thousand men and women had taken refuge. Abimelech perished at the siege of Thebez. The city was captured, and, while he was attacking the tower, a woman cast a piece of a millstone on his head and slew him.

Of the two next judges the records are scanty. The most interesting point in the account of Tola is that, though of the tribe of Issachar, he dwelt in Mount Ephraim. With Jair, the narrative of the Judges turns to Gilead. Tola arose to "save Israel" (x. 1, R.V.); but no mention is made of any deliverance under Jair.

Israel now sinks deeper than ever into idolatries of every kind, and for eighteen years is oppressed, on the west by the Philistines, on the east by Ammon. The weight of the invasion fell upon Gilead. More is told us of the early history of Jephthah than of any other judge. It is a history often repeated in wild unsettled times. The bold adventurer stung by personal wrongs becomes the attractive leader of lawless men. But Jephthah exhibits higher qualities than those of the bandit chief. The parley with Ammon shews both moderation and shrewdness. His historical argument is not only interesting as a diplomatic answer, but also as an indication of the way in which the Hebrew traditions were retained, even in the rudest ages.

The victory over Ammon, achieved by a faith infused by the Spirit of Jehovah (xi. 29), was decisive. The cruel act which followed, the living sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter, cannot be explained away, unless plain words are misleading indeed. The view which substitutes perpetual virginity for the more cruel fate is comparatively recent. Both the rash vow and the act of sacrificial cruelty point to Phœnician influence.

In dealing with Ephraim, who professed indignation because they had not been summoned to war, Jephthah displays the same calmness in argument as with Ammon, and the same might and decision in battle. The Ephraimites were defeated, and, besides those who fell in battle, many were slain in cold blood at the fords of the Jordan. In all forty-two thousand perished.

Of the three judges who followed Jephthah, Ibzan, Elon and Abdon, no notable acts are recorded. Ibzan ruled at Bethlehem (whether the city in Judah or that in Zebulun, Josh. xix. 15, is meant, is uncertain), Elon belonged to the tribe of Zebulun, Abdon to that of Ephraim.

It may be mentioned here that in a list of judges given 1 Sam. xii. 11, the name of Bedan occurs, which is not recorded elsewhere. A probable explanation is that Bedan is a false reading for Barak, the two names having a close resemblance in Hebrew characters.

The Philistines had now become the most formidable adversaries of Israel. It was long before their power was crushed. The deeds of Samson did little even to keep it in check, and yet they were such as to encourage his fellow-countrymen, and to pave the way for future resistance. Samson was born to the work. He is the first Nazirite named in the Bible. He received the measure of inspiration needed for his special work. The brute force of the Philistines was held back by the still mightier strength, courage and subtlety of the Israelite, whose joyousness and humour are characteristic of the popular leader. Though his sins were grievous and coarse, his repentance was deep and his faith true. A striking element in Samson's career is the single-handedness of his efforts. He has no support from his fellow-tribesmen, and he asks for none. He was a mixed character. Like other heroes of faith in this book, and like the nation of Israel itself, Samson was moved by opposing influences.

The two narratives at the end of the book of Judges seem to be added in illustration of the character of the times, and of the inter-tribal relations. They belong to the internal history of Israel. The book of Ruth is in the same category.

The movement of a portion of Dan to the north was preceded by the mission of spies, as in the national invasion of Canaan. The report being favourable, the six hundred warriors go forth to capture the unsuspecting city of Laish, henceforth called Dan.

On their march—and this is the most remarkable point in the narrative—the Danite warriors visit the house of Micah on Mount Ephraim, and there take captive a Levite named Jonathan, a grandson of Moses himself (xviii. 30). With Jonathan the Danites carry northwards the molten image, the teraphim and the ephod with which he had executed the rites of an idolatrous worship. It is a proof of the religious confusion in Israel that Jonathan and his sons were priests to the tribe of Dan “until the day of the captivity of the land,”—a reference probably to the oppression by the Philistines; see 1 Sam. iv. 21, ‘the captivity of the glory of Israel’; or, as some think, to the captivity by Shalmaneser and Sargon.

The detail with which the story of the outrage at Gibeah is told points to the deep impression it made on the national conscience. A Levite, returning home from Bethlehem with his concubine, whom he had recovered there, lodges at Gibeah. There his concubine receives shameful treatment, and dies. Desire of vengeance for the crime knits together Israel as one man (xx. 11). And, when Benjamin refuses to deliver up the guilty for punishment, a war ensues. The Canaanite sin appearing in Israel incurs the penalty of the Canaanites. The first success is with the Benjamites, but in the end they are all but annihilated. Six hundred alone survive. But in order that the tribe should not utterly perish, wives are provided for them, partly from the virgins who are spared from the sack of Jabesh-Gilead (a town sentenced to destruction because its inhabitants had failed to appear at the muster of Israel), partly by the seizure of maidens celebrating a dance at Abel-Meholah.

The mention of Phinehas (xx. 28) fixes the date of this occurrence in the first generation after Joshua's death. While the crime itself implies the swift and ruinous influence of contact with the Canaanites, the sense of right in Israel shews that saving characteristics still exist.

The book of Ruth is a link between the Judges and the monarchy. With it commence the annals of the house of David. It is also valuable as a picture of quiet pastoral life, and of faith in Jehovah in an era of bloodshed and apostasy. There is a further contrast to the book of Judges in the exhibition of peaceful relations with Moab—one of the oppressing nations. The sons of Naomi, an Ephrathite woman left a widow in the land of Moab, marry daughters of that country. The sons, Mahlon and Chilion, dying, Ruth, Mahlon's widow, clings to her mother-in-law, when she seeks her old home in Bethlehem. In passing to a foreign country Ruth did not lose sight of her native land. The blue line of the Moab mountains is plainly seen from the rocky platform on which Bethlehem stands. Boaz, one of the chief citizens of Bethlehem, by right of kinship takes Ruth to wife. And, from that union, springs the line of David, and of the Messiah. The genealogy (iv. 18–22) shews that Salmon, who fought under Joshua, was the grandfather of Obed, and that Obed was the grandfather of David, important data for the chronology of the whole period.

(5) SAMUEL AND THE BEGINNING OF THE KINGDOM.

There is no abrupt transition from the books of Judges and Ruth to the books of Samuel or Kings. Eli, who comes before us as high priest in the opening of the book of Samuel, himself belongs to the line of Judges. And the oppression of the Philistines existing in Samuel's time is the same oppression against which Samson contended, and in connexion with it Samuel's position first becomes prominent.

A man of God had already pronounced the doom on Eli's house. It was Samuel's first prophetic task to report the judgement—the forfeiture of the priesthood, which that house had brought to shame. It was a message which required truth and courage, and one which is characteristic of the prophetic office in relation to the priesthood throughout Hebrew history. After this “all Israel knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord,” 1 Sam. iii. 20.

The divine word was soon fulfilled. Israel had made a desperate attempt to check the advance of the Philistines. The ark of God was brought into the field accompanied by the sons of Eli. But the Philistines were victorious, Hophni and Phinehas were slain, and the evil tidings coming to Shiloh caused the death of Eli and his daughter-in-law, wife of Phinehas. This victory opened the way for the Philistines into the very heart of the country. Shiloh was probably taken and sacked: “He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men... Their priests fell by the sword, and their widows made no lamentation,” Ps. lxxviii. 60–64.

The ark was carried to the Philistine cities—Ashdod, Gath and Ekron. But at Ashdod Dagon, the fish-god, fell from his pedestal. At Gath and Ekron the people were attacked by tumours, a symptom of the Oriental plague, and the fields were overrun by mice (1 Sam. v. 6, LXX.). In a ‘deadly panic’ the ark was restored to Israel. In the account of the occurrence at Beth-shemesh the text seems to require correction. From a reading in the LXX. it may be inferred that a certain number of priests were slain for profanely gazing on the ark, which was now fetched by the men of Kirjath-jearim (Ps. cxxxii. 6), and placed by them in the house of Abinadab on a hill in or near their city. For twenty years the Philistine oppression continued. But Samuel now appeared as judge and deliverer. Israel, assembled at Mizpah, was attacked by the enemy. The fight took place close to the scene of the battle of Aphek. While Samuel offered a burnt-offering and cried unto the Lord, a thunderstorm broke over the Philistine army, which was ‘smitten before Israel.’ A stone raised as a trophy and called Ebenezer (stone of help) gave the name to this battle.

The request for a king, made through the elders of the people, was a natural one. It was forced on Israel at the time by the old age of Samuel, the perversity of his sons, and the fear of renewed oppression by the Philistines and Ammonites (ch. xii. 12). A sense of unity, order and protection had grown up under Samuel's rule, and it was felt that the absence of a permanent chief placed the Israelites at a disadvantage with their enemies and checked the administration of justice. Beyond this they did not look. They failed to grasp the higher ideal of theocracy.

When the divine will was known Samuel undertook to guide his people through the political crisis. The incidents narrated (ch. ix. 1-x. 17), Saul's introduction to Samuel, his honourable reception at the first, his anointing, the gift of prophecy and 'the changed heart' (ch. x. 9), explain the choice which Samuel proposes to the people. When the choice is made it is ascribed to Jehovah (x. 24), and Samuel shews himself in the character of a founder by telling the people 'the manner of the kingdom,' and writing it in the book. It was an addition to the sacred library in the sanctuary.

As with the judges, however, the true foundation of Saul's power rested on success in war. The defeat of Nahash, king of the Ammonites, and the rescue of Jabesh-Gilead gave the requisite prestige to the monarchy. The people made Saul king at Gilgal: according to the LXX. Samuel anointed Saul there to be king (xi. 12-15). In his last address to the people, as judge, Samuel continued his protest against the kingdom. It was 'a wickedness,' and yet Jehovah would not forsake His people for His great name's sake (1 Sam. xii. 22). The oppression of the Philistines had now reached the point of the utmost distress and scorn (xiii. 6, 19-22). But the area of the struggle was almost confined to the district of which Beth-el was the centre, extending westward to the passes of Beth-horon, and eastward to Gilgal and the Jordan valley. Chiefly by the valour of Jonathan the Philistines are smitten from Michmash to Ajalon.

And now, at Samuel's bidding, Saul turned his arms against the Amalekites and drove them in defeat from Havilah to Shur, probably the fortified wall defending the north-eastern frontier of Egypt. But this great victory which might have strengthened Saul's kingdom was stained by an act of disobedience, and the solemn deposition of Saul followed as a consequence of his sin. And, though his reign continues, from this moment the historical interest is fixed on the rise of David.

The steps by which David rose to power are described with a minuteness which indicates the importance of his place in Hebrew history. An introduction to Saul puts him at once in a prominent position. But whether this introduction first occurred after the slaying of Goliath, or previously to that, when the king's fits of melancholy madness were soothed by the presence of the shepherd boy skilled in the use of music, is made uncertain by a double line of tradition preserved in the Hebrew text. In the LXX. version, which here probably represents a purer text, the narrative is consistent and clear.

David's victory over Goliath gave him the prestige of a Samson or a Jephthah. The women of Israel praised him in song (xviii. 7). The educational value of the act for Israel lay in the faith which prompted it. "The battle is the Lord's, and he will give you into our hand" (xvii. 47). Externally regarded, the achievement was a danger to the monarchy. And it is this fact which gives the supreme charm to the drama in which the disinterested friendship of Jonathan, and the jealous antipathy of Saul, are the chief springs of action.

The dramatic element appears in another way. Every scheme for David's destruction results in his advance. The hidden divine purpose works itself out in spite of hostile plans. His removal from the court enables David to win the love of all Israel and Judah, because he went out and came in before them (xviii. 16). The dowry demanded by Saul for his daughter Michal, intended to place him in jeopardy, brought him fresh renown (xviii. 20-30). The actual attempts on David's life by Saul forced him into armed opposition, and created for David a band of devoted followers, whose fortunes depended on Saul's ruin.

The noticeable points in David's flight from Saul were: the visit to Nob (see St Matt. xii. 4); his refuge in disguise with Achish, king of Gath; and his friendly relations with Moab (xxii. 3). While contending with each other both Saul and David continue the war against the Philistines, whom David defeats at Keilah. Both at Keilah and at Ziph David is exposed to the treachery of his enemies. At En-gedi Saul falls into the power of David, but is spared, and for a moment is seized by remorse (xxiv.). At this point the death of Samuel is recorded. The short notice states that the whole nation joined in mourning for the lost leader.

Once again David spares the life of Saul, whom he has surprised asleep in the camp. And, though a friendly colloquy follows, David is obliged once more to seek refuge with Achish. This time David comes at the head of a small army, and is welcomed as a valiant ally against Saul. The city of Ziklag is given to David as headquarters. Here David has a difficult part to play. While attacking the Amalekites and other hostile tribes he has to keep up the pretence of fighting against Israel as an ally of the Philistines (xxvii.). In his final campaign against Israel, Achish forces David to accompany his army. The distrust of the Philistine chiefs however saved David from this dilemma. The decisive battle between Saul and the Philistines was fought at Gilboa, a mountain which rises out of the plain of Jezreel. Here Saul and Jonathan were slain and the defeat was disastrous and complete.

While these events were going on David had returned to Ziklag, and there recovered his wives and other captives from the Amalekites, who had sacked the city in his absence.

From this point David shows consummate policy in reconciling the partisans of Saul. The Amalekite who brings the news of Saul's death, professing to have dealt the fatal stroke himself, meets the doom of a murderer by David's command. He laments the fate of Saul and Jonathan in a dirge of exquisite pathos and delicacy. He sends a greeting to the men of Jabesh-gilead for their care of the bodies of Saul and his sons.

Ishbosheth, son of Saul, supported by the valour of Abner, reigned for two years at Mahanaim. But in a battle at the pool of Gibeon Abner's forces were defeated by Joab, and the power of Saul's house was crushed. Abner, received into favour by David, was treacherously slain by Joab.

The ultimate result of David's conciliatory measures was his acknowledgment as king by all the tribes. The elders of Israel anointed him king in Hebron.

David had reigned seven years and a half at Hebron. He now proceeds to fix the seat of his power in Jerusalem. The city, still in possession of the Jebusites, a Canaanite tribe, seemed to be impregnable. But Joab succeeded in making an entrance through a subterranean channel ('the gutter,' 2 Sam. v. 8) constructed for the water supply of the city during a siege. The channel has been recently rediscovered, and Joab's feat has been repeated. But it is probable that he was aided by a confederate Jebusite.

David now strengthens his power by alliance with Hiram, king of Tyre. The Philistines are defeated in two battles in successive years on the plain of Rephaim, near Jerusalem. In the first of these engagements the 'gods' of the Philistines were captured and burnt by David. The second, in which the Philistines were driven back from Geba, north of Jerusalem, to Gezer in the south-west was even more decisive.

In 2 Sam. viii. a general account is given of David's wars. The Philistines were subdued. David took from them 'the bridle' or control of their mother city (or took Methegammah). The Moabites suffered more cruelly. After defeat two-thirds of their warriors were put to the sword. No reason for this extreme measure is given. A Jewish tradition supposes the treacherous murder of David's parents.

In the north-east, the district between the Orontes and the Euphrates, Saul's campaign against Zobah was renewed, and Hadadezer ('whose help is Hadad,' the Syrian sun-god) suffered defeat. The shields of gold on the servants of Hadadezer were brought to Jerusalem. The Syrians of Damascus, allies of Hadadezer, were likewise defeated and became tributary to David. The defeat of Hadadezer induced his adversary, Toi king of Hamath, on the Orontes, to send costly gifts—vessels of gold, silver and bronze, wherewith to win the friendship of David. Inscribed stones recently found at Hamath point to a Hittite nationality. From this place probably came those Hittite warriors of whom there were several in David's army.

The difficult statement, 2 Sam. viii. 13, is corrected by the LXX. version of the passage and also by 1 Chron. xviii. 12, and by the title of Ps. lx. From these authorities it appears that David after the conquest of the Syrians either returned in person or sent Joab or Abishai to avenge a raid made by the Edomites during his absence. The result was their utter defeat in the Valley of Salt.

David's victories however did not secure peace. Two fresh wars spring up. The first is with Ammon, whose new king has grievously insulted David's envoys. Ammon hires Syrian mercenaries—here first mentioned in the Bible—for the vast sum of 1000 talents of silver (1 Chron. xix. 6). The allied host is arrayed before Medeba (1 Chron. xix. 7, 9). Joab with the choicest troops puts the Syrians to flight. The Ammonites seeing this flee before Abishai. But even so the Syrians are not crushed. Hadadezer collects an army from beyond the Euphrates. In a second campaign David utterly defeats Shobach, the Syrian general. The Ammonites now withdraw to Rabbah, their capital, prepared to stand a siege.

At this crisis David remaining in Jerusalem falls into the grievous sin which is the beginning of the disastrous close of his reign. Uriah, possibly one of the Hittites of Hamath, is doomed to die beneath the walls of Rabbah. His wife, Bath-sheba, is taken into David's harem and becomes the mother of Solomon.

The end of David's reign was clouded over with civil and domestic war. The formidable rebellion of Absalom followed by the rising under Sheba the son of Bichri, ominous of the division between Israel and Judah, and finally the struggle of Adonijah for the kingdom (1 Kings i.), involving the disloyalty of Joab and Abiathar, were signs of divine wrath against David.

The Second Book of Samuel closes with two incidents which have raised questions of some difficulty. The recurrence of a famine three years in succession is divinely assigned as a punishment for the cruelty of Saul to the Gibeonites. The expiation demanded by the Gibeonites and granted by David was the execution of seven of Saul's sons. In the first we trace the principle of the identity of a people with its ruler, in the second that of the unity of the family. By that ancient code the child suffers justly for the father's crime.

The second incident was the census of Israel taken by David. It was a provocation of Satan (who is mentioned here only in the historical books), 1 Chron. xxi. 1. Clearly the sin was not in the act, but in the motive for the act. The pestilence which followed was not only a penalty for David's sin, it was also a punishment for national transgression (2 Sam. xxiv. 1).

The sacrifice on Araunah's threshing-floor consecrated the future site of the Temple.

The reading in the Heb. text, which implies that Araunah was a former king of Jebus, must probably be abandoned.

(6) THE REIGN OF SOLOMON.

After securing the safety of his kingdom by the execution of Adonijah and Joab, and the banishment of the high priest, Abiathar, Solomon still further strengthened his position by his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter. The Egyptian king who thus made affinity with Solomon was probably Pi-netchem II., who reigned at the close of the 21st dynasty.

For Israel it had important results. A traffic sprang up between the two countries. Chariots and horses were the chief exports from Egypt, the international market being apparently fixed at Tekoah (see 1 Kings x. 28, LXX.). Egyptian influence may be traced in the increase of royal state and especially in the size of the harem. The architectural splendour of Solomon's reign was undoubtedly partly due to Egyptian conceptions. The very form of the Temple as a whole with its courts, its porch and the two conspicuous pillars standing like obelisks in front of the porch ('at the porch,' R.V.), was Egyptian in character. So too were the lions on Solomon's throne, and the pillared hall of the house of the forest of Lebanon. Solomon's kingdom was, in fact, moulded on the system of the great empires. For the moment it seemed possible that Israel would be added to the list of these, and play a very different part in the history of the world.

For administrative purposes the land of Israel was divided into 12 districts which were not continuous with the tribal territories. Each of these in turn supplied a month's provision for the royal household.

The empire extended from Tiphisah (Thapsacus) on the Euphrates to the river of Egypt (Wady el Arish), and from Dan to Beer-sheba—the extent promised to Abraham and to Joshua.

Under Solomon Israel became a great commercial nation. By the help of Hiram, king of Tyre, a merchant navy was constructed at Ezion-geber, at the head of the Gulf of Akabah, for trade with Arabia, and even with India; Ophir, thought to be a port on the Arabian coast, being the chief entrepôt. The ships of Tharshish or Tartessus, in Spain, probably indicate the class of vessel, rather than the line of commerce. The building of Tadmor in the wilderness (2 Chron. viii. 4) points to a caravan traffic across the eastern desert. It is clear that the wealth of Israel at this epoch was enormous, exceeding probably that of any other contemporary eastern monarchy.

The friendship of Hiram, king of Tyre (a dynastic name, like Pharaoh), was of the utmost advantage to Solomon. His subjects were the most skilful craftsmen of the day in stone and metal work. His forests and quarries in the Lebanon supplied the materials needed for the Temple and palaces in Jerusalem. On the other hand Solomon's tribute of corn and oil gave the stores of which there was scanty supply on the narrow strip of fertile land on the Phœnician coast (comp. Acts xii. 20).

The visit of the Queen of Sheba—a region in Southern Arabia—whose wise inquisitiveness is praised by Christ, is another instance of the attractiveness of Solomon's court. Her motive may have been partly religious (see LXX. version of 1 Kings x. 1), but chiefly she came "to hear the wisdom of Solomon." The visit is also an additional proof of the commercial intercourse between Arabia and Israel (see Ps. lxxii. 10, 11).

The erection of the Temple was the culminating event in Solomon's reign. The wealth got by tribute and commerce, and the preparations made by David, aided by the Tyrian alliance, enabled Solomon to build the house of the Lord with the greatest magnificence and skill.

Forced labour on a large scale was used for this great work. 150,000 Canaanites were condemned to bondservice, while 30,000 Israelites also by forced levies laboured in monthly courses; and though these levies are distinguished from the slave labourers—the Canaanites (cp. 1 Kings vi. 13 and ix. 20–22, and 2 Chron. viii. 7–9), it was a feature of the new monarchy which must have ominously recalled Egyptian bondage. Huge substructures enlarged the area on which the Temple was to be built. Timber and stones already dressed were conveyed on floats to Joppa, and thence to Jerusalem, so that the building rose without sound of axe, hammer or chisel. The Sanctuary, even to its sloping roof, was formed on the model of the Tabernacle or 'tent of meeting.' Other parts, as has been observed, bear the impress of Egyptian influence. The building of the Temple was a recognition of the theocracy, a sign that the Lord was ruling Israel. The religious danger lay in the thought that the presence of the Most High was confined to "temples made with hands" (Acts vii. 48). The Temple, however, was destined never to prove a strong rallying-point for the nation. The privilege of Jehovah was violated within sight of His sanctuary. Solomon had transgressed the covenant by marriage with alien wives, to a great extent probably as a matter of state policy. As a consequence the idolatries of many nations sprang up in Jerusalem. High places arose on the slopes of the Mount of Olives, on which sacrifices were offered to Ashtoreth, Milcom or Molech, and Chemosh.

Solomon learned the judgement of God on his sin by an immediate message. The magnificent empire laboriously built up should be destroyed and divided. Not, indeed, in his own day, but in the time of his son. But already signs of disunion and decline begin to appear. Adversaries who had been plotting against Israel throughout the reign of Solomon now become formidable. Of these, Hadad, an Edomite prince, had escaped to Egypt from the slaughter of his fellow-countrymen by Joab, after whose death he returned to Edom with plans of vengeance. In the north, after the defeat of Hadadezer by David, Rezon, a Syrian chieftain, had made himself king in Damascus, and there waited his opportunity to levy war on the son of his conqueror. But by far the most formidable adversary was Jeroboam, the son of Nebat. An Ephraimite (R. V.), charged with the oversight of his fellow-tribesmen in their forced labour, he easily turned the growing disaffection and the old tribal jealousy to the purposes of his own ambition. And when the prophet Abijah foretold success, Jeroboam, fearing to remain in Solomon's power, fled, like Hadad, to Egypt. The ruling monarch was Shishak or Sheshonk, a prince of Semite descent, and founder of the 22nd dynasty. His support of Jeroboam was a reversal of his predecessor's policy; and greatly assisted the cause of Ephraim in its revolt against Judah.

(7) THE DIVISION INTO TWO KINGDOMS.

On the death of Solomon, after a reign of 40 years, Jeroboam was recalled to be the spokesman of the ten tribes, and when Rehoboam's answer held out no promise of lightening burdens, the threatened breach took place, and Jeroboam was crowned king of Israel, as distinct from Judah, at Shechem.

With this, the prospect of a great united empire of Israel was shattered for ever. But, in truth, the element of disunion had always been present. Ephraim and the northern tribes had taken little part in the maintenance of the kingdom, and the separation could only have been postponed by a firm ruler with a conciliatory policy. The choice of Shechem, as the meeting-place for the election of Rehoboam, was in itself significant of change, and of the temper of Ephraim.

The first act of Rehoboam was to prepare for war against Israel. But the prophet She-maiah was empowered by divine command to forbid the conflict: a striking proof of prophetic influence. The next measure was to erect fortresses in the south against the expected invasion of Sheshonk (Shishak). The invasion was probably concerted with Jeroboam in Egypt. One after another the fortresses fell before Sheshonk's army. Jerusalem yielded without resistance, and the treasures of the Temple and of the king's house were carried to Egypt. An inscription at Karnak recording this inroad mentions the conquest of Levitical and Canaanite cities in the northern tribes, a proof that those cities resisted Jeroboam's authority.

The cession of priests and Levites as well as of pious Israelites to Judah was another source of weakness to Jeroboam's kingdom.

Rehoboam's reign was stained by the licentious cult of the Canaanite deities, Baal and Ashtoreth, and though moments of repentance are recorded, the worship of Jehovah was all but forsaken.

Jeroboam, who in the language of the Bible made Israel to sin, transgressed (1) in the perversion of Jehovah-worship, (a) by setting up golden calves as objects of worship at Dan and Bethel, (b) by making priests

'from the ends of the people,' i.e. from among all the people (R.V. 1 Kings xii. 31, see also 2 Chron. xiii. 9), (c) by instituting a feast of his own devising on the fifteenth day of the eighth month; (2) secondly, in the actual worship of the Asherim or wooden images of Asherah (1 Kings xiv. 15).

Abijah (Abijam in Kings), Rehoboam's successor, gained a decisive victory over the forces of Jeroboam though the latter was superior in numbers, and apparently in strategy (2 Chron. xiii. 13, 14).

Abijah was succeeded by Asa, 'whose heart was perfect all his days.' He raised the army to a high state of efficiency, and determined to shake off the yoke of Egypt. The fortresses destroyed by Sheshonk were rebuilt. And in one of the most memorable and decisive battles ever fought by Israel, Zerah the Ethiopian (Osorkon II. of the monuments) was utterly defeated in the valley of Zephathah. It was a victory of faith; see the prayer of Asa (2 Chron. xiv. 11). The enemy were 'broken before Jehovah.' Its consequences were lasting. For more than two centuries and a half there was no invasion from Egypt.

The hostility of Baasha was checked by Asa's alliance with Ben-hadad who made a diversion by attacking the northern cities of Israel.

Asa now by the advice of the prophet Azariah wrought a great religious reform, removing the high places, the Asherim and the sun-images (2 Chron. xiv. 5), deposing the queen-mother Maacah and destroying the idol which she had made, and in a solemn assembly of the two tribes entering into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers.

In Israel swift changes had been taking place. Jeroboam had been succeeded by Nadab, whom Baasha smote while besieging Gibbethon. Elah the son of Baasha was slain by Zimri, one of his officers, and his race exterminated. The conspirator enjoyed a reign of seven days. Omri, captain of the host, then besieging Gibbethon, proclaimed king by the army marched against Tirzah, when Zimri in despair burnt the house over him and died. Omri, after a four years' struggle with Tibni, who was supported by half Israel, secured the kingdom, and founded a strong dynasty, the fame of which spread widely. In the Assyrian inscriptions the kingdom of Israel is Mât Humri, 'land of Omri.' For his capital he built Samaria, destined to have a long history.

His son Ahab, who did evil in the sight of the Lord above all that were before him, succeeded in the 38th year of Asa. His marriage with Jezebel, daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Sidonians, was full of disaster both for Israel and Judah, soon linked through her by ties of marriage,—the worship of Baal and Asherah was established in Israel (1 Kings xvi. 32, 33; 2 Kings iii. 2), and measures were taken to exterminate the prophets and the religion of Jehovah (1 Kings xviii. 13).

The most formidable external power at this time was Syria, whose king Ben-hadad

11., at the head of a powerful confederacy, contended for equality with Assyria. Against this power Ahab fought at first singlehanded. The remarkable incidents of the war are narrated in 1 Kings xx. After the victory of Aphek (6 miles east of the Sea of Galilee) Ahab allied himself with Ben-hadad. A defeat of their united forces by Shalmaneser II., mentioned in the Assyrian inscriptions, broke up the alliance, and brought about the coalition which now took place between Ahab and Jehoshaphat.

It was now that the alliance was formed between Israel and Judah after a separation of 70 years, the political motive being probably the necessity of uniting against Syria and the more formidable kingdom of Assyria. The alliance was cemented by intermarriage between the royal houses. Jehoshaphat went down to Samaria, and the question of peace or war was discussed in a remarkable scene, in which Micaiah appears as the one true prophet of Jehovah. Jehoshaphat was then 'enticed' (Heb. 2 Chron. xviii. 2) to go up to Ramoth-gilead. But the attempt to recapture the city from Syria ended in disastrous defeat. Ahab was slain and his army scattered. On his return Jehoshaphat was met with a rebuke from the prophet Jehu for this unholy alliance (2 Chron. xix. 1-3).

On his return Jehoshaphat resumed his reforms. Making a progress through his kingdom he brought the people back to the Lord God of their fathers. He also made a reform of the judicial system (2 Chron. xix. 5-11).

A formidable invasion by "the children of Ammon and Moab and Mount Seir" failed from internal dissension, the hostile army breaking into two divisions, which fought and destroyed one another. The valley of Beracah, now Berekit, preserves the memory of the thanksgiving for this victory.

After Ahab's death Jehoshaphat, in conjunction with Ahaziah, built ships at Ezion-geber which were wrecked near that port, and Jehoshaphat gave up the enterprise, which from the first was displeasing to Jehovah, 2 Chron. xx. 37.

Ahab was succeeded by Ahaziah. Like his father he was a worshipper of Baal. The two chief events of his reign were, the joint maritime expedition with Jehoshaphat, and the revolt of Moab (2 Kings i. 1). The latter has a special interest from the supporting evidence of the Moabite Stone. Possibly the cause of Mesha's unchecked success was the illness of Ahaziah, who lingering for some time died from the effects of a fall through a lattice in his palace at Samaria. His mission to Baal, god of Ekron, brought on his messengers the consuming fire of heaven at the word of Elijah.

His brother Jehoram succeeded him. Securing the aid of Jehoshaphat and of the king of Edom he continued the war against Moab. A victory predicted by Elisha drove the king of Moab to the desperate act of sacrificing his son as a burnt-offering on the walls of Kir-hareseth. Jehoshaphat died after a reign of 25 years. His son Joram succeeded, a weak and idolatrous king. Instantly Edom rose against him, and though Joram beat back the invading army, Edom recovered its independence (2 K. viii. 20). Libnah (one of the priests' cities) also revolted, and the Philistines and Arabians made a raid into Judah, stormed and sacked Jerusalem and carried captive Joram's wives and children, except only his youngest son Ahaziah (Jehoahaz, 2 Chron. xxi. 17), who soon afterwards succeeded, Joram dying of a loathsome disease (2 Chron. xxi. 18, 19).

Ahaziah joined Jehoram king of Israel in the attempt to recover Ramoth-gilead. Jehoram was wounded and returned to Jezreel. In the absence of Jehoram, Jehu, captain of the Israelitish army, is anointed king by one of the sons of the prophets at Ramoth-gilead, and acknowledged by his fellow-officers and the whole army. Instantly the new king drove to Jezreel. Meeting the two kings in Naboth's vineyard he slew Jehoram. Ahaziah too was wounded at Samaria and died at Megiddo. Jezebel was flung from a palace window and devoured by the street dogs. Ahab's seventy sons slain in Samaria, and the forty-two 'brethren' (strictly nephews, 2 Chron. xxii. 8) of Ahaziah slain by Jehu brought to an end the massacre of Ahab's house.

Jehu founded a new and powerful dynasty in Israel, which lasted for more than a hundred years. He began his reign by a great act of zeal for Jehovah, in which he was joined by Jehonadab the son of Rechab. The Baal-worshippers summoned to meet as for a great act of service in the temple of their god were slain to a man by Jehu's orders. But Jehu's zeal was unreal or short-lived. He sinned like Jeroboam, and "the Lord began to cut Israel short." The trans-Jordanic region fell into the power of Hazael the Syrian king. The hostility of Hazael is explained by Assyrian inscriptions, which shew Jehu to have been a tributary ally of that power which was pressing Syria from the east.

In Judah for a while Athaliah daughter of Jezebel was supreme. But by a skilfully executed plot she was deposed and slain. Joash, called to the kingdom, ruled well during the life of the high priest Jehoiada; after that he lapsed into sin and even sanctioned the murder of the high priest Zechariah (see St Matt. xxiii. 35). During this reign the pressure of Hazael was bought off by the treasures of the Temple.

The reign of Jehoahaz, son of Jehu, is distinguished only by the severity of the Syrian oppression. Hazael and Ben-hadad III. 'made them like the dust in threshing.' Ben-hadad however was not a great king like Hazael; and Jehoash, the son of Jehoahaz, recovered from him the cities which Hazael had taken. Jehoash was also victorious over Judah. Amaziah had succeeded his father Joash, and organized a strong army with which he overthrew the Edomites in the Valley of Salt. Elated with this victory he challenged Jehoash, king of Israel, to fight. Jehoash, after a vain endeavour to decline the combat, invaded Judah, defeated Amaziah, took him prisoner at Beth-shemesh, and carried off the treasures from the Temple in Jerusalem. The defeat came as a penalty on Amaziah's faithlessness to Jehovah, which also brought about his death. For when he turned from the Lord a band of conspirators caused him to be slain at Lachish. The conspiracy was not directed against the dynasty, for Uzziah (Azariah) succeeded his father, and reigned for 52 years, at first righteously. His wars were prosperous against the Philistines and Arabians. Ammon also became tributary. He repaired the walls of Jerusalem broken by Jehoash, and rebuilt Elath without resistance from Edom. Uzziah "loved husbandry," and cut out cisterns for his cattle. His army was carefully organized, equipped and furnished with engines of war. At the close of his reign he transgressed by sacrilegiously offering incense in the Temple and was struck with leprosy.

Jeroboam II., the ablest of the kings of Israel, succeeded Jehoash. By him, evil though he was, the Lord saved Israel. He recovered Damascus and Hamath, according to the word of Jonah, and restored the dominion of Israel from Hamath to the Sea of the Arabah (the Dead Sea). In these successes Jeroboam was aided by the ever-growing power of Assyria.

The evil line of Jehu ended with Jeroboam's son Zechariah, who succeeding after an interregnum of 11 years was slain by Shallum "before the people."

Jotham succeeded Uzziah, and like his father ruled righteously. He was a great builder, both in Jerusalem and in the hill country and forests, where he raised cities, fortresses and towers. He repressed a revolt of the Ammonites, and in his later years fought against Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel (2 Kings xv. 37).

The succession of good kings of Judah was broken by Ahaz, who transgressed like the kings of Israel, making molten images of Baalim and sacrificing his own son in the fire to Molech. For this God's wrath fell upon him. He suffered defeat from the confederate kings of Israel and Syria. In this war 200,000 Judean captives were released by Israel on the admonition of the prophet Oded. The Edomites and Philistines, probably in alliance with Israel and Syria, also rose against Judah. In his distress Ahaz sought the aid of Tiglath-pileser II. king of Assyria, who after the conquest of northern Israel (2 Kings xv. 29) took Damascus and slew Rezin (see Is. vii. 14-17). Towards the end of his reign Ahaz sank still deeper in idolatry and died unhonoured after reigning 16 years.

Shallum, the murderer of Zechariah, after one month of power was slain by Menahem, who ruled in his stead. In this new dynasty Assyria was hostile to Israel. An invasion by Pul, now identified with Tiglath-pileser II., had to be bought off by the payment of 1,000 talents. This vast sum was exacted from the rich men of Israel. Menahem secured the succession for his son, Pekahiah, who however reigned two years only. One of his captains, Pekah, slew him and reigned in his stead. Pekah and Rezin, king of Syria, now allied, made war on Judah, intending to place a Syrian usurper on the throne of David. Their success was only partial, and soon completely reversed by the advance of Tiglath-pileser. Pekah lost the kingdom, as he had gained it, by a military revolt, being deposed and slain by Hoshea, who was probably supported by Assyrian influence. Hoshea, however, though at first tributary to Shalmaneser IV., broke from the alliance and sought the aid of So (Shabakah), first king of the 25th Egyptian dynasty. Shalmaneser at once laid siege to Samaria, but died before its capture, which was achieved by his successor, Sargon. Israel was then carried into captivity in settlements in the region of the Euphrates and of Media. The inhabitants thus deported formed, however, but a small proportion of the ten tribes.

This closed the history of the Northern Kingdom. The divine motive for the fall of Israel is given in 2 Kings xvii. 7-23.

The country was gradually populated by settlers from Hamath and the cities of Babylonia and other parts. In the wasted land lions, formerly common, began again to increase. Attributing this to the God of the country the new colonists summoned a priest of Israel to instruct them in the law of the Lord. But the various cults of the imported nations continued to co-exist with a degraded form of Jehovah-worship.

(8) FROM THE FALL OF SAMARIA TO THE FALL OF JERUSALEM.

Hezekiah succeeded to the throne of Judah five years before the fall of Samaria. He immediately proceeded to carry out a religious reform by the suppression of idolatry and by reconstituting the Temple services. His external policy commenced by rebellion against the king of Assyria, probably Shalmaneser, and by a defeat of the Philistines (2 Kings xviii. 8). He then prepared to meet the threatened invasion of the Assyrians by repairing and strengthening the city walls, and by stopping and concealing the water-course of Gihon and introducing the stream by an underground passage into Jerusalem, thus cutting off the water supply from a besieging army.

A cuneiform inscription describes Sargon as 'the subduer of Judah,' to which Isaiah probably refers (ch. x. 24-32). The immediate cause of this invasion was possibly the embassy of Merodach-baladan, king of Babylon, to Hezekiah (2 Kings xx. 12).

Sennacherib succeeded Sargon in 705 B.C. Three years afterwards he invaded Judah and other states in alliance with Egypt. On this occasion Hezekiah submitted and paid a tribute (2 Kings xviii. 14). Nevertheless the Assyrian Tartan or commander-in-chief appeared before Jerusalem demanding a surrender. Then encouraged by Isaiah Hezekiah and his people defied the Assyrian army, which was divinely destroyed by a pestilence before it could come to the city or "cast a bank against it."

After Hezekiah's death came the long and evil reign of Manasseh. He began by restoring the idolatries destroyed by Hezekiah; his son (or child, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6) was offered in the fire to Molech. In consequence of his sin he was taken captive to Babylon by Esarhaddon, but restored on his repentance, when he appears to have made some show of reformation (2 Chron. xxxiii. 15 f.). Amon, son of Manasseh, sinned like his father and died by the hand of assassins after a reign of two years.

With Josiah there was a return to righteousness. While still young he made a thorough reformation, which extended to the northern tribes; he restored the Temple, destroyed idolatrous images, put down the false priests—the chemarim (2 Kings xxiii. 5), and celebrated a great Passover. The book of the Law laid up in the Temple, and lost in the period of confusion, was rediscovered and solemnly read before king and people.

Josiah became involved in the war between Assyria and Egypt and, though Pharaoh-Neco disclaimed enmity, met him in battle at Megiddo and was defeated and slain. Neco reached the Euphrates and returned to Egypt in triumph, but three years later he was completely overthrown at Carchemish by Nebuchadnezzar, general for his father Nabopolassar. In this reign Judah with other nations suffered from an incursion of Scythians, who descending from the Russian steppes spread ravages far and wide.

Jehoiakim, Josiah's second son and immediate successor, was deposed by Neco, and carried to Egypt, where he died. Neco placed Jehoiakim (Eliakim) on the throne, exacting from him a heavy tribute. After Neco's defeat at Carchemish, Jehoiakim was subject to Babylon for three years and then rebelled. He was harassed by Moab, Ammon, and other vassal nations. In the reign of his successor, Jehoiachin, Nebuchadnezzar invaded Judah, and took Jerusalem and the chiefs of the people into captivity. Zedekiah, Josiah's youngest son, was appointed vassal king. He reigned eleven years, and then, allying himself with Pharaoh-hophra, king of Egypt, and rebelling against Assyria, brought about another siege of Jerusalem. The king and his men of war broke from the city, but were captured. Zedekiah was blinded, and taken captive to Babylon. Jerusalem was laid waste, the Temple and the royal palace burned to the ground. With the exception of a few poor inhabitants, left to cultivate the land, the population was deported to Babylon. Gedaliah, appointed ruler over those who remained, was murdered within two months: after which many of the Jews, among them Jeremiah, fled to Egypt, settling in Tahpanhes, a frontier town on the caravan route between Syria and Egypt, the site of which, now known as Kusr el Bint el Yehudi (the palace of the Jew's daughter), has recently been discovered (see Jer. ii. 16 and xliii. 1-7). In Babylon, Evil-Merodach, who had succeeded Nebuchadnezzar, shewed kindness to Jehoiachin (with whom he was probably for a time fellow-prisoner), taking him out of prison, and setting his throne above the thrones of the kings that were with him in Babylon (2 Kings xxv. 27-30).

(9) THE BABYLONISH CAPTIVITY.

For the second time in their annals the history of Israel became the history of a subject race in a foreign land. The position of the Jews, however, was that of colonists rather than of slaves. The epoch cannot be said to have been marked by external events. But the Jewish race displayed its remarkable power of assimilation and adaptation to circumstances; and many Israelites rose to high positions in the state under their Chaldean and Persian masters.

(10) THE RETURN.

The return of the Jews was decreed by Cyrus, now shewn by the monuments to have been a king of Elam, not of Persia, in the first instance, and a polytheist, not a Zoroastrian. Gobryas, the general of Cyrus, entered Babylon without resistance. The Chaldean dynasty, of which Nabonidus was the last king, with Belshazzar his son in command of the army, was overthrown, and a new era dawned for the Jews.

The decree for the Return was an act of policy extended to other nations also, whose disaffection might prove a danger to the state.

The first Return across the desert from Babylon to Jerusalem was under the high priest Jeshua, and Zerubbabel, a prince of the royal line. Attempting to rebuild the Temple the returned exiles met with the bitterest opposition, especially from the Samaritans, whose association in the work Jeshua and Zerubbabel declined. The disturbed condition of the Persian Empire, in which sedition was rife, gave weight to the charges against the Jews. It was not till the second year of his reign that Darius felt himself secure and at peace. The decree of Cyrus was found on a roll at Ekbatana, and the work of building was allowed to proceed; the hostile rulers, Tatnai and Shethar-boznai, being compelled to help on the work, which was completed in the 6th year of Darius. Between this date and the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus (Ezra vii. 8), in which Ezra went up to Jerusalem, there is an interval of 87 years, a period full of general historical interest, but a blank in the history of the returned Jews.

But in the land of their exile a momentous event occurred. At Susa (Shushan), the Persian capital, Haman, probably of Amalekite descent, a high court official, stung by an affront from the Jew Mordecai, obtained a royal decree for the destruction of the Jewish race throughout the Persian empire. Esther, however, niece of Mordecai and queen of Xerxes, succeeded not only in reversing the decree, and thus delivering her people, but also in exacting vengeance by the slaughter of thousands of their enemies.

The Feast of Purim became the memorial of this national deliverance.

In 458 Ezra the scribe, of the high-priestly line, headed a second migration to Judah. He was armed with authority to "set magistrates and judges which may judge all the people that are beyond the river": he carried with him gifts from his fellow-countrymen and from the king and his counsellors, and had power to exact aid from the royal treasurers west of the Euphrates. The object of his mission was "to teach in Israel statutes and judgements" (Ezra vii. 10).

His first act of reform was to effect a separation of the Jews from their foreign wives.

Fourteen years after this Nehemiah, cup-bearer to Artaxerxes, hearing of his brethren's distress came with the king's authority as governor to Jerusalem. Under him the Jews, in spite of opposition from Sanballat, Tobiah, Geshem, and other enemies, repaired the city walls. Jerusalem became once more a fortified city.

Nehemiah then proceeded to reform abuses.

The richer Jews had exacted usury of their poorer brethren, taken their lands on mortgage, and even caused their children to be sold into slavery. Then followed a solemn recitation of the Law by Ezra, and afterwards a continuous instruction of the people therein. On a solemn Fast Day the ancient covenant was renewed, and the Law more authoritatively than ever became the rule of life for Israel.

After these reforms Nehemiah returned to the Persian court for a while, but in the 32nd year of Artaxerxes again came to Jerusalem, where grave evils had re-appeared. The Temple was desecrated by the presence of Tobiah; Levitical dues and tithes had been neglected, the Sabbath was profaned, inter-marriage with the heathen had sprung up again. With the greatest vigour Nehemiah testified against these corruptions and once more wrought reform.

Here the Old Testament history somewhat abruptly ends, but the work of Ezra and Nehemiah was soundly and deeply laid, and effected lasting results in the new development of the history of Israel.

b. EXTERNAL HISTORY OF ISRAEL BETWEEN THE CLOSE OF THE CANON OF THE OLD TESTAMENT AND THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

BY THE REV. A. CARR, M.A.

The history of the Jewish people from the death of Ezra to the death of Herod the Great includes what is in many ways the greatest period of their national life, one in which their special characteristics were displayed in a series of striking events, in new developments of religious and philosophic thought, and in a minute elaboration of their judicial system. More than any other period it gives proof of the high qualities of the Hebrew race, their policy, astuteness, courage, and faith.

This period too, it must be remembered, was the immediate precursor of the Messianic epoch. The religious sentiment of the Jews in the time of Christ, whether in its purer and higher aspect or in its cruder or more popular form, was not the pre-exilic religion of Israel, but that religion as it was modified, chastened, and enriched by the experience of the Captivity, the stern discipline of the Return, and the manifold vicissitudes of the four hundred years of struggle for national existence. The thoughts and hopes which filled the minds and stirred the imaginations of the contemporaries of Christ were more directly moulded and inspired by the reforms of Ezra and the achievements of the Maccabees than by the heroes and prophets of an earlier generation. It is therefore a grave historical mistake to place the Jew of the New Testament in close juxtaposition with the Jew of the Old Testament, and to neglect the causes and elements of diversity.

Without a knowledge of the intervening period no proper estimate can be made of the Saviour's attitude, or that of His apostles, to the Mosaic law, or to the sects, or to foreign domination. Without such knowledge it is impossible to understand the Temptation of our Lord, or the popular hopes and disappointments which His career produced. And if a study of these centuries is necessary to a true understanding of Messianic times, it is equally needful for a comprehension of the spread of Christianity afterwards.

The Greek language, which the Jew had made his own during this period, the Greek philosophy, which he partly assimilated, the wide diffusion of his race throughout the Roman empire, the influence which he exercised in almost every great city of the civilised world, are incidents of considerable account in the founding of the Church and the spread of Christianity.

The return of the Jews to Palestine was due partly to the policy and partly to the gratitude of the conqueror.

In all probability the Jews had aided Cyrus in his attack on Nabonidus; and that very incident shewed him the danger of admitting a conquered and alien race to settle in the province of the people who had humiliated them.

Accordingly 42,360 Jews, or, if that number represent the heads of families, 200,000 Jews crossed the desert to Jerusalem. A large majority of the nation remained behind to become the nucleus of the diaspora or 'dispersion' which afterwards played an important part in the history of Christianity.

But the Jews who returned differed widely from their fathers of 50 years ago. The Judah which was carried into captivity was monarchical; when national life revived, it was under the rule of a priestly caste. The later history of the Jewish kingdom before the Captivity was stained by the sins of international division, of idolatry, of neglect of the Law; it was distinguished moreover by perfect freedom of intercourse with surrounding nations.

All this was changed. A passionate, even a servile devotion to the Law, and a zeal for monotheism, had replaced the former neglect of the Law and the tendency to idolatry; and from henceforth the policy of Judah was determined by a stern isolation and exclusiveness combined with a revived spirit of patriotism, which sought to recognise in the returned exiles once more an undivided Israel. The policy of separation was carried out by the suppression of intermarriage with foreign races, and by a strict enforcement of the enactments of the Law.

Moreover the Jews who returned under Ezra brought back with them the institution of a new Feast, which completely harmonized with the new principles. The Feast of Purim had been founded to commemorate a great national deliverance, and the vengeance of the Jews on a hated population. It was an inspiring national memory, destined to work itself out in fresh results.

Ezra and Nehemiah, Zechariah and Malachi had strongly influenced the people in the direction of obedience to the Law and the undivided worship of Jehovah. Their work, especially the work of Ezra, the reformer, the exponent and the codifier of the existing Law, formed the basis and foundation of the succeeding age.

For convenience of treatment the whole period between the Old and New Testaments may be divided into three sections:

(a) The Period of Subjection and Silent Growth.

(b) The Maccabean Rule.

(c) The Herodian Dynasty.

(a) The Period of Subjection and Silent Growth.

Throughout the first of these periods, from the death of Nehemiah, c. B.C. 415, to the accession of Antiochus Epiphanes, B.C. 175, Israel played no independent part in history. Their country, first under the domination of Persia, fell with the other provinces of that empire into the hands of Alexander. After his death, B.C. 323, it became by turns subject to Egypt and to Syria. But though powerless by any national effort to determine its own external destinies, Israel was gathering strength, and by internal organization, by intellectual effort, and by a variety of spiritual development, was preparing itself for the great part which it was destined to play in moulding the future of mankind.

It was in this blank and silent period that the institutions, the sects, the forms of religious thought with which the N.T. has made us familiar, were beginning to take shape.

In religious thought a deeper sense of the Unity of the Godhead, a firmer grasp of Messianic hopes, a distinct belief in the ministry of angels, a fuller recognition of a future life and of the immortality of the soul, were characteristic of the Jews of the Return. With such enrichment of religious thought, due at least in part to the conquering monotheistic race, with the tradition of a great deliverance, and a passionate attachment to the divine Law of his forefathers, adapted to modern needs and codified by the later scribes, and with a fervid spirit of patriotism closely linked and almost identified with the purified national religion, the Jew entered on his new career.

The decaying Persian government probably interfered very little with the internal administration of Judaea, which was now vested in a line of hereditary high priests. At the same time Jews must have served in the Persian armies, and have taken a share in the great movements of the world. They must have fought at Cunaxa, Issus, and Arbela. It was part of their education to be involved in wider interests and to come in contact with many nations.

In the first generation after the Return the Jewish population was probably considerable. Israel was in the position of a military colony surrounded by enemies who were exasperated by their attitude of social and religious exclusiveness. But it is clear that their numbers grew rapidly. Their chief rivals, the Samaritans, seem never to have spread widely, and even in the north the Jewish element soon outnumbered the rest of the population.

Of the high priests few were distinguished. During part of the period, down to the pontificate of Onias III. (B.C. 185), the dates of the high priests cannot be determined with certainty.

John, or Jonathan, third in descent from the high priest Eliashib, anticipated the violence of a later age by the murder in the Temple precincts of his brother Joshua, who had intrigued against him in complicity with the Persian governor Bagoses (B.C. 367).

The remarkable story given by Josephus (A. J. xi. viii. 5) of the meeting between the high priest Jaddua and Alexander (B.C. 332), though characteristic in many ways both of the Jew and of the Macedonian conqueror, is open to grave historical suspicion in its details. The leading statements, however, may well be true that Alexander received the high priest with unexpected reverence and kindness, that he granted favours to the Jews in different parts of his dominions, and that many Israelites served in the Macedonian armies on favourable terms. It is worthy of note that Jaddua is the last high priest mentioned in the Canon of the Old Testament (Neh. xiii. 11, 22).

One name among those who enjoyed the dignity of the royal priesthood is treasured with peculiar devotion. The portrait of Simon the Just, in the 50th chapter of Ecclesiasticus, is the ideal picture of a great High Priest, the stately and revered leader of a hierarchical Court. Words seem to fail in describing the divine and majestic ceremonial of the Temple service, in which the central and commanding figure is Simon the Just († B.C. 291). It is a description which embodies the conception of a later age, and is a splendid and unique representation of priestly government in its most imposing aspect.

By the refusal of another high priest, Onias II. (B.C. 250), to pay the customary tribute to Egypt, the virtual independence of Judæa was all but lost. It was secured by the address of the high priest's nephew, Joseph, who himself became the collector of the royal taxes in Judæa, and founded a family which rivalled in influence the high-priestly line, and played an important part in the national history.

About fifty years later (B.C. 160), a step was taken calculated to render the Alexandrian Jews independent of Jerusalem. When Onias V., son of the high priest deposed by Jason, fled to Egypt, he besought Ptolemy Philometor to concede to him a disused shrine of Pasht (the cat goddess), at Leontopolis in the nome (or district) of Heliopolis (On), as a site on which to build a temple, which should be to the Jews of Alexandria what the ancient sanctuary was to their brethren in Jerusalem. Onias was encouraged in his design by a curious distortion of a passage in Isaiah (xix. 18, 19), which was supposed to foretell the foundation of a Jewish temple in Egypt. Philometor, who, according to Josephus, "committed his whole kingdom to Jews," granted the request. But though richly endowed by royal bounty the temple, more like a fortress than a sanctuary, does not appear to have achieved celebrity or to have alienated the Alexandrian Jews from the house of the Lord at Jerusalem.

When the successors of Alexander contended with one another for the various portions of the dismembered empire, the position of Palestine exposed it to attack alike from Syria and Egypt. It became the battle-field and the prize of victory for opposing powers. "The Jews," says Josephus, "were like a ship in a storm; they were tossed by the waves on both sides."

The capture of Jerusalem by Ptolemy Lagides (Soter), B.C. 320, was one of many instances in which the strict observance of the Sabbath brought defeat on the Jews. But what seemed at first a disaster led ultimately to favourable results. Thousands of Jewish captives were taken to Alexandria. There Ptolemy Philadelphus, who succeeded his father Ptolemy Soter in B.C. 284, was stirred to take a genuine interest in the history and literature of Israel. He purchased the freedom of 120,000 Jewish slaves. At the same time he took measures to have the records of the Jewish people added to his magnificent library. The result was the translation of the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek.

The story of the Septuagint Version is obscured by fabulous incidents. Though the miraculous consensus of seventy independent translators may be discredited; and though the origin of the version may be attributed to the religious necessity of the Alexandrian Jews, as well as to the instance of Ptolemy, the historic fact of this great literary work remains. It would be out of place to estimate fully here the influence of the Septuagint on religious thought, and especially on the language of the New Testament. But it may be well to note that to the great majority of Jews, and to the early Christian Church, the Septuagint was the channel through which the teaching of the Old Testament was conveyed. Its influence on language may be compared with the influence of the English Bible on our own tongue. But the work of the Septuagint was even greater. It was the most effective instrument in throwing down the partition wall between Jew and Gentile. It was the first memorable instance of a religion disclosing its secrets to the curiosity or reverence of alien races. The Septuagint accomplished the supremely difficult task of creating a new religious phraseology, and of transferring religious terms out of their native setting into a language teeming with ideas at variance with the religion which was being interpreted.

The Græco-Egyptian monarchs also promoted this interchange of Hebrew and Hellenic influence by planting Greek settlements in Palestine itself. Many of the towns distinguished by Greek names, such as Paneas, Ptolemais, and Scythopolis, owe their origin or reconstruction to this epoch.

The same favour which was shewn to the Jews by the Ptolemies in Egypt was extended, according to Josephus, to their brethren in Syria and Asia by the Seleucid dynasty. Seleucus Nicator granted to many Jews privileges of citizenship equal to those enjoyed by their Greek and Macedonian fellow-subjects. The continuation of this policy under the Roman government explains the instances of the Roman franchise granted to Jews in the Christian era. The friendly relations between Judæa and the Greek dynasty in Egypt which had subsisted since the battle of Ipsus (B.C. 301) were broken by an outrage of Ptolemy Philopator (B.C. 217) in the Temple precincts, followed by a cruel persecution of the Jews in Alexandria. These acts threw the Jews upon the Syrian alliance.

Under the rule of Seleucus Nicator, Syria, with Antioch for its capital, had become a powerful kingdom. Antiochus the Great increased its strength to the point of rivalry with Rome. After some alternations of success, the struggle between Egypt and Syria ended in the victory of the latter. Palestine was included in the conquests of Antiochus, and now became a Syrian province.

It was under Seleucus IV., the successor of Antiochus, that the crisis came. Intestine division at this, as at many other crises in Jewish history, was the cause of disaster. Simon, probably the son of that Joseph who had retrieved the indiscretion of the high priest Onias II., disputed with his successor, Onias III., the control of the Temple treasury, and, as the quarrel deepened, appealed to Apollonius, viceroy of king Seleucus. Heliodorus, the Syrian envoy and royal treasurer, so the story runs, advanced to plunder the Temple, when on a sudden an armed warrior, of divine and terrible aspect, rode against the intruder, who was flung to the ground. Two heavenly attendants scourged him as he lay. Thus was the sanctity of the Temple vindicated.

(b) The Maccabean Rule.

Notwithstanding this intervention, the Hellenizing party continued their intrigues, and on the accession of Antiochus Epiphanes, B.C. 175, Jason, brother of Onias III., obtained the high-priesthood by bribery. His name of Jason, the Grecized form of Joshua, was itself typical of the Hellenizing movement now in vogue. A strong effort was made to break through the exclusiveness of Israel. The manner, the dress, the language of the Greek, even the Greek gymnasium with its distinctive games, were introduced under the shadow of Jehovah's Temple. At the head of the Hellenizing faction was the high priest Jason, who, after displacing his brother Onias III., was in his turn thrust from his position by the victory of Menelaus. This unseemly rivalry brought on Jerusalem an invasion by Antiochus, who was returning (169 B.C.) from an expedition to Egypt. The calamity was a terrible one. Thousands of Jews were slain and carried captive, the Temple was pillaged and profaned, its sacred treasures, the golden candlestick, the altar of incense, even the veil of the Sanctuary, were carried off. A Syrian garrison was posted in a fort overlooking the Temple courts.

But a still more sweeping destruction is imminent. Antiochus resolved to obliterate the distinctive position of Israel. Its nationality was to be destroyed. The religion of Jehovah was to be merged into the cult of Jupiter Capitolinus, or of Zeus Olympius, or into the lascivious rites of Syria. This persecution of Antiochus was an extraordinary fact, quite alien from the usual tolerant spirit of paganism. It was an attempt to unite his empire in the links of a Catholic paganism.

The abolition of Israel seemed an easy task, well within the power of the Syrian general Apollonius, with his army of 20,000 men.

But Antiochus had miscalculated. Among his measures had been the order to erect altars to Zeus in every important place throughout the Holy Land.

At the little town of Modin, not far from the historic site of Beth-horon, resistance began. A renegade Jew was about to offer the unhallowed sacrifice at the bidding of the Syrian king's emissary, when Mattathias, an aged priest belonging to the family of Asmon or Chasmon, who had himself refused to do the impious act, stepped forward and slew in his zeal both the sacrificers and the royal officer.

Mattathias was the father of five sons, of whom all were distinguished, and three in succession guided Israel with consummate skill and valour in the mighty struggle now beginning.

The followers of Mattathias fled to the mountains and caves, but a bloody vengeance fell upon them. Thousands of unarmed fugitives were slain on the Sabbath day.

Accordingly it was resolved henceforth to disregard the Sabbatical rule, which would have exposed the pious Jews to unresisted slaughter.

One of the most memorable incidents in this persecution was the death by cruel torture of a mother and seven sons. Their dying utterances express a confident belief in the Resurrection and in everlasting life. The light of immortality had never shone so clearly as in this dark hour of national need.

The death of Mattathias soon followed. But his last words inspired national feeling for many generations to come. Zeal for the law, the Temple and the covenant, and the example of the heroes of the nation who had given illustrious proof of this zeal, became the guiding lines of Jewish history.

Judas, the first to bear the name of Maccabæus, or 'the hammerer,' was appointed to succeed his father. Under his leadership repeated victories crowned the valour of the soldiers of zeal. The way was opened to Jerusalem; the ruined Temple was restored; the sacred courts cleared of the bushes with which they had been overgrown, and the desecrated altar was pulled down and reconstructed. When all was finished, the feast of the dedication of the new altar was celebrated with great rejoicing, and became henceforth the historical memorial of the third signal deliverance of Israel.

The triumph of the Jews was bitter to the ever-watchful foes around them. Accordingly the next task of Judas was to turn his arms against Edom and Ammon, and against 'Galilee of the Gentiles.' Sending his brother Simon to the north, Judas himself crossed the Jordan, and delivered the Jews who were beset in the fortresses of Gilead.

In the year 164, Antiochus Epiphanes died, and was succeeded by his son Antiochus Eupator.

The tide of Maccabean success was checked for a moment by the advance of a vast army led by the Syrian general, Lysias. But the temporary defeat was marked by an act of conspicuous valour. Eleazar, surnamed Avaran, or the 'Beast sticker,' the fourth son of Mattathias, creeping beneath one of the largest and most richly decked of the elephants, slew it and perished by its fall.

For a time there was a lull in the conflict, during which a romantic friendship sprang up between Judas and Nicanor, one of the most skilful of the opposing generals. The friendship, however, was soon interrupted by the intrigues of Alcimus, who had been appointed high priest by the Syrian king.

Judas and Nicanor once more met in battle. Victory was again with the Maccabees; Nicanor was slain; and one of the Temple gates, called by his name, marked the place where his members were savagely exposed.

The treaty which Judas concluded at this time with Rome is not only one of the most interesting instances of historical contact, but is characteristic of that policy by which, from time to time, Israel saw its advantage in fostering the rivalry of opposing empires.

Rome was to be the counterpoise to Syria, as Assyria had been the counterpoise to Egypt, or Persia to Babylon.

The advantage, however, was not immediate; for notwithstanding the promises of the Roman Senate, Judas was once more unassisted in battle, and exposed finally to defeat and death at Eleasa, probably the modern Bir-ze-zeil.

Jonathan and Simon, the brothers of Judas, now took the lead of the patriotic party. After a short struggle Bacchides gave up the contest and made peace with the Maccabees, a result which may probably be in great part attributed to the Roman alliance.

The dispute for sovereignty between Alexander Balas and Demetrius, who had succeeded Antiochus Eupator (B.C. 162), gave the Jews an opportunity, of which they availed themselves. Jonathan took the side of Alexander, who in turn bestowed the high-priesthood on Jonathan, an important precedent, which placed the nomination to the high-priesthood in the hands of the sovereign power, and which vested the titular, as well as the real, authority in the Asmonean family.

It may be noted, however, that by some even among the most fanatical opponents of foreign influence this radical change in the principle of succession to the high-priesthood was viewed with disfavour and suspicion.

The immense concessions of Demetrius were offered in vain; and his general Apollonius, now governor of Coele-Syria, suffered defeat from Jonathan.

But Alexander Balas in his turn was defeated by Ptolemy Philometor, and soon afterwards slain in Arabia. Demetrius II. now (145 B.C.) succeeded to the Syrian throne. Jonathan seized the opportunity of laying siege to the hostile garrison which had continued in Jerusalem since the days of Antiochus Epiphanes. Meantime Demetrius made overtures of peace on favourable terms, which were accepted by Jonathan, who even rescued the Syrian king when his own subjects rose against him in Antioch. But the promises made by Demetrius of withdrawing the garrisons in Judea were violated.

Another revolution, planned and fostered by a Syrian adventurer named Tryphon, placed Antiochus, son of Alexander Balas, on the throne. One of his first acts was to enter into friendly relations with Jonathan, who proved his loyalty by twice successfully repelling an invasion of Palestine by the faithless Demetrius. At the same time Jonathan strengthened his position by sending embassies to Rome and to Sparta.

Never, perhaps, had the name of Israel been so formidable as at this moment, when a base act of treachery deprived it of its trusted chieftain. Jonathan was inveigled into the fortress of Ptolemais and eventually slain by Tryphon, who was now conspiring against his master Antiochus VI. (c. 144). Simon now placed himself at the head of the Maccabean party. Tryphon caused the boy king Antiochus to be put to death, and contested the Syrian crown with Demetrius, with whom Simon now entered into close alliance. Demetrius, however, was taken prisoner by Arsaces (Mithridates); and Tryphon exercised a limited and precarious authority for a while, until he was put to death by Antiochus Sidetes, brother of Demetrius (c. B.C. 139), who now succeeded to the Syrian throne.

The reign of Simon was remembered as a peaceful and prosperous time, when "every man sat under his vine and his fig-tree, and there was none to fray them." Almost the last trace of foreign dominion had disappeared with the reduction of the Syrian garrison in Jerusalem. From the first year of Simon's reign a new era began, from which legal documents were dated, and the sovereign privilege of coining money was granted to the Jews by the Syrian king (B.C. 142).

Antiochus Sidetes, with the accustomed perfidy of the Seleucidae, feeling secure of victory, threw over his former friend and ally, and demanded the restitution of the stronghold from which the Syrian garrison had been expelled.

The cause of Israel, however, still prevailed. Judas and John, the sons of Simon, gained a decisive victory over Cendebeus, the viceroy of Antiochus.

The national gratitude to Simon was expressed by the erection of a brazen tablet in the Temple, recording the absolute power entrusted to him. He was to be "their governor and high priest for ever until there should arise a faithful prophet." The reservation is remarkable. But certainly no Jewish ruler had ever had a like honour paid to him, and none had possessed authority so ample and so despotic.

The first book of the Maccabees ends with the treacherous murder of Simon and two of his sons at Dok, probably the modern Ain Duk (B.C. 135).

John, surnamed Hyrcanus, escaping a plot laid against him by the assassins of his father, succeeded to the high-priesthood and to the Maccabean chieftainship, B.C. 135. His reign was marked by the rebuilding of the fortress on the Temple area at Jerusalem, known in later days as the Castle Antonia. John also distinguished himself in war by the conquest of two inveterate enemies of Israel—the Edomites in the south, and the Samaritans in the north—both events of considerable importance in Jewish history. In the northern campaign the rival temple on Gerizim, and the city of Samaria itself, were razed to the ground.

The ascription of the prophetic gift by his contemporaries to John, so meagre in the evidence given, may be regarded rather as a yearning for the recovery of a lost privilege than as indicating a fact.

The three sons of John Hyrcanus who rose to power were Judas, Mattathias, and Jonathan, or, as they were named in accordance with the prevailing Hellenic taste, Aristobulus, Antigonus, and Alexander Jannæus. Aristobulus, the eldest son, was the first to assume the title of 'King of the Jews,' a name previously unknown to Hebrew history, but destined to carry with it a sacred and enduring significance.

His second brother, Antigonus, was admitted to a partnership in the kingdom. But, by a cruel intrigue, the jealousy of Aristobulus was roused, and Antigonus was slain by the royal guards in an underground passage leading to the castle afterwards called Antonia. Swift compunction followed the commission of that crime. The death of Aristobulus, which soon followed, was hastened by remorse (B.C. 106).

The reign of Alexander Jannæus (B.C. 105-78) was disturbed by war and revolt. Reverses in battle, the employment of foreign mercenaries and the opposition of the Pharisees, made him unpopular with his subjects, who rose against him. The rebellion was suppressed with rigorous cruelty. And in the end Jannæus succeeded in extending the limits of his kingdom. Ituræa had been added to the Jewish dominion by Aristobulus, and under Jannæus most of the Greek towns on the west, and the settlements of Moab and Gilead on the east of the Jordan, acknowledged the sway of the Asmonean kings.

On the death of Alexander Jannæus, the government was carried on by his widow, Alexandra, who, acting on the shrewd advice of her dying husband, yielded herself to the guidance of the Pharisaic party. Hyrcanus, her elder son, a man of feeble character, was appointed high priest; her second son, the able and vigorous Aristobulus, chafed by the female rule and the influence of the Pharisees, after vain protests against his mother's policy, seized a number of strong places, and gathered round him a formidable body of adherents. At this juncture Alexandra, who had won popularity by a discreet management of affairs, died after a reign of nine years (B.C. 69).

(c) The Herodian Dynasty.

The end of the Asmonean dynasty is closely involved in the rise of the Herodian family to power.

Antipater, or Antipas, the father of Herod the Great, was a rich Idumean, an ardent partisan of Hyrcanus, and bitterly opposed to Aristobulus. Hyrcanus, yielding to his brother's stronger character, had resigned his dignities. But, instigated by Antipater, he revived his claims, and pleaded them against his brother before Pompey, who was then at Damascus, B.C. 63. Pompey eventually decided in favour of Hyrcanus, whom he restored to the office of high priest. But Hyrcanus became henceforth little more than a puppet in the hands first of Antipater, afterwards of his son Herod.

Meantime Aristobulus attempted a faint resistance, but soon surrendered himself to the victorious Pompey, who now laid siege to Jerusalem. The horrors of internal faction broke out within the walls. The scrupulous observance of the Sabbath, not for the first time in Jewish history, gave an advantage to the enemy. A terrible massacre followed the capture of the city. Then ensued an act of sacrilege which was never forgotten or forgiven by the Jews. The Gentile conqueror entered the holy of holies, expecting to find some visible symbol of the mysterious Eastern cult. In the words of the Roman historian, he found nothing.

By the Roman settlement, carried out under Gabinius, the ancient limits of Palestine were divided into five separate and independent governments—the seats of which were respectively at Jerusalem, Gadara, Amathus, Jericho, and Sepphoris. "So the Jews," says Josephus, "were now freed from monarchic authority and governed by an aristocracy." The Jewish captives who had been carried to Rome were, by an unusual exercise of humanity, permitted to settle in large numbers on the right bank of the Tiber—an event which carried with it far-reaching consequences in the history of the Jews and of the Christian Church.

The most distinguished of the captives, however, Aristobulus and his sons, Alexander and Antigonus, made their escape. The two first, after varying fortunes, passed out of Jewish history. But Antigonus and his sister-in-law Alexandra, and the two children of Alexander, Aristobulus and Mariamne, remained to play their part in the closing tragedy of the Asmonean house. Hyrcanus, its nominal chief, was now completely subordinate to the Idumean Antipater, who, by the favour successively of Pompey and Julius Cæsar, became a Roman citizen and Procurator of Judea. When Herod succeeded to his father's position, the only change was that through the feebleness of age Hyrcanus sank into deeper insignificance, while the brilliant ability of Herod, both in war and peace—his capacity for rule—his address—his noble presence and his powerful friendships at the Roman Court, gave him an ascendancy which his father had never enjoyed.

One member of the Asmonean house, however, made a desperate effort to check the advance of Herod. The only possible counterpoise to Rome at this epoch was the Parthian empire. For a moment the defeat of Crassus at Carrhæ (B.C. 53) inspired the East with extravagant hopes. To this power, therefore, Antigonus had recourse in order to effect the ruin of Herod, the protégé of Rome. Hyrcanus, the nominal chief of the Maccabean race, together with Phasael, Herod's brother, was inveigled into Parthia. Phasael shortly afterwards died. Hyrcanus was summoned to be high priest and king in the Jewish colony at Babylon, where he was treated with the greatest consideration. Herod himself fled to Rome; and there, by the favour of Antony and Octavianus, he was recognised as 'King of the Jews,' B.C. 40. Jerusalem was once more captured by the Roman armies. Herod ruthlessly massacred the party opposed to him. Antigonus, king and priest though he was in the estimation of the Jewish nation, was scourged and crucified, in circumstances of cruel indignity, at Antioch.

Herod now (B.C. 38) strengthened his position still further by allying himself with the dynasty he was striving to supplant. Mariamne, daughter of Alexander and granddaughter of Aristobulus II., who inherited all the beauty and all the courage of her race, became the wife of the Idumean adventurer. Herod recalled Hyrcanus to Jerusalem, not, however, to fulfil the office of high priest, for which he was incapacitated by a personal blemish inflicted on him by Antigonus, but to be the guest and friend of Herod. To the office of high priest Herod first appointed Hananel, who, like Hyrcanus, belonged to the Babylonish colony. Soon, however, in accordance with the popular voice, he instituted to that office Aristobulus, the brother of Mariamne, a youth seventeen years old, who possessed the noble features and majestic bearing which seemed to be an heritage of the Maccabees. When, dressed in the high-priestly robes, in the bloom of youthful beauty, Aristobulus ascended the altar of sacrifice, every eye was attracted. But the very hopes which his appearance stirred in the friends of the Maccabean house proved fatal to him. While bathing with other youths in the luxurious warm baths of Jericho, he was held under the water and drowned by Herod's Gallic mercenaries. Other victims now followed; among whom the aged Hyrcanus was put to death under legal forms.

But the most tragic sacrifice of all remained to be consummated. Mariamne had just cause for resentment, not only from the deaths of her beloved brother Aristobulus, and of her grandfather, Hyrcanus, but also from a sentence of death which Herod had left to be executed against her in case of the failure of his mission to Augustus Cæsar after the battle of Actium. The mission succeeded. Augustus continued the friendship which his rival Antony had bestowed on Herod. But Mariamne had learnt the secret of the fatal order, and received her husband coldly on his return (B.C. 29). The occasion was seized by Herod's own mother and sister to rouse and foster suspicion. Mariamne was doomed; and died with serene courage. But with scarcely an interval, Herod's passionate love revived. He was filled with the keenest remorse, which he strove to deaden by every device, even by the fond pretence of regarding her as still living and present in the household. Mariamne left two sons, Alexander and Aristobulus. Their attitude of just and irreconcilable hatred to their mother's murderer made them easy victims to the continued intrigues of the Herodian house. They too perished; and with them the history of the Maccabees may be regarded as closed: for the fortunes of their descendants became merged in the history of the Herodian house.

Herod's closing years were marked by fresh cruelties, and by ever-growing pains of remorse. Though the massacre of infants at Bethlehem is unnoticed by the Jewish historian, it is too closely paralleled by similar acts in Herod's career to leave room for any historic doubt. Indeed, it is an act which might have been inferred if it had not been recorded. But what lends a special interest to it in this connexion is the light thrown upon it by its historical setting. It was the precise juncture of time when from despair of an Asmonean heir, and from hatred of Herodian tyranny, the ancient hope of a prince of the house of David might be expected to revive.

Before Herod's own end came, Antipater, his son by his Idumean wife Doris, was added to the list of his victims. In this case the fate was deserved by one who had plotted the ruin of others. Even at the last, when the agonies of death were upon him, Herod arranged a general slaughter of the leading men of the country, imprisoned by the tyrant's orders in the hippodrome of Jericho. The order was given, but was not executed. After vainly seeking a cure in the sulphur baths of Callifloe, Herod, king of the Jews, died at Jericho, and was buried in the Herodium, a fortress which he had built in the earlier years of his reign.

The memory of Herod is so inextricably connected with the one or two closing incidents of his reign recorded in the Gospels, that it is difficult to disengage it from that absorbing association, and to present his career and position as they must have appeared to his contemporaries.

To the Greek and Roman, Herod was perhaps the most striking figure in the Eastern world. He was the friend and ally of Cæsar, from whom he had received a kingdom, and towards whom he displayed a profuse and noble gratitude. His rule was inspired by the example of Rome, and it was to Rome that he sent his sons to be educated under the roof of a distinguished noble, Pollio, the friend of Virgil and of Augustus.

To the Greek he appeared as the lover and patron of Hellenic authors and philosophers. He was appointed perpetual president of the great Olympic festival, which he had re-endowed and restored to its former splendour. He introduced the games of Greece and the shows of the Roman amphitheatre into the cities of Palestine; cities in which the stately architecture of Athens or of Corinth honoured the name and the divinity of Cæsar.

By the Jew he must have been regarded in various aspects. Fierce hatred must for the most part have pursued the Idumean upstart who ruled by the overthrow and slaughter of the beloved family of the Maccabees; who was the destroyer of the 'light of the world' by the massacre of the Sanhedrin and of the learned men of Israel; who in his youthful campaigns had slain by the sword thousands of Galilean patriots; who did violence to the ancient spirit of Jewish exclusiveness by foreign innovation; and whose cruel and capricious despotism, supported by a barbarian soldiery, brought fear and insecurity upon Israel.

On the other hand, there were some who, in the powerful prince who had conciliated the favour of the successive rulers of the world, and who by the steady support of Rome had placed the Jewish race high among the nations of the world, thought they saw the promised Deliverer of Israel. This was one of the aspirations which, apart from mere mundane hopes, gave life to the Herodian party.

But by far the greatest work of Herod as king of the Jews, and one which with some went far to atone for his crimes and cruelty, was the rebuilding of the Temple at Jerusalem. This magnificent structure, its courts, its stately colonnades or porches, its precious gifts, are described below (p. 215). It was a work which created genuine admiration and enthusiasm, and did much to give prestige to the Herodian dynasty.

After the death of Herod the Great the influence of Rome became dominant. It was no longer difficult to discern the signs of the times. Throughout its recent history of four hundred years, Israel had maintained a chequered independence, at one time through the conflicts of contending empires, at another by the intestine divisions of the paramount power, each of which in turn courted the support of the Jews by promises of freedom. But Rome had crushed all her rivals, civil war had ceased, and she was left free to rule the subject nations with undivided force. For this reason, when Israel, inspired by past successes against great empires, opposed a last desperate resistance to Rome and failed, there was no longer hope of national recovery.

GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF THE MACCABEES.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS OF THE PERIOD BETWEEN THE CLOSE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT AND THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

JEWISH SECTS—SCRIBES, PHARISEES, SADDUCEES, ESSENES, ZEALOTS.

The joint work of Ezra and Nehemiah had been to complete the Torah, or Law, and to enforce obedience to it. Historically, that work followed the lines of Josiah's reform, like that its whole force was directed against idolatry, and like that it tended to centralization of worship at Jerusalem.

The result was the foundation of Judaism. The Law was set forth as a complete system by which men should live. By the Law was understood in a special sense the Pentateuch, every word of which was regarded as inspired, and an immediate revelation to Moses. The Prophets (including the historical books) held a secondary place in the Canon.

From the first the Law needed explanation and development. This need called into existence a body of interpreters who were termed Sopherim or Scribes. Ezra had collected and edited all that survived of the sacred writings of the Jewish people. The Scribes explained and applied the rules of the Torah to special cases as they arose. Hence came that development or 'hedging round' of the Law which resulted in the body of minute Rabbinical rules of conduct. Eventually, though not at first, the decisions of the Scribes had the force of law. They bound men with burdens. In this way the Scribes were recognised as the legislators and the judges of Israel.

The first Scribes were priests. That the priest's lips should keep knowledge was a rule of the order. Soon, however, the study of the Law spread outside the circle of the priesthood, and a separate, even an antagonistic, body of Sopherim began to teach. And when in the Hellenistic period many of the priests addicted themselves to heathen culture, the Scribes, who were not included in the priestly order more than any others, attracted the respect and reverence of the people. The Scribes were designated by various names, Sopherim, or literary men, lawyers, learned in the Torah or Law, teachers of the Law. Their learning had a wide range; mathematics, natural science, astronomy, geography, the history and the languages of the surrounding nations, were all required for a full exposition of the Law in its wider sense, and came within the limits of a Scribe's study. The estimation of the Scribes, and of the learning they professed, was high among the Jews. 'Study is more meritorious than sacrifice'; 'A scholar is greater than a prophet'; 'You should revere the teacher even more than your father,' were among the sayings which illustrate this enthusiasm for the teaching of the Law. Titles of honour, such as lord, and master, and Rabbi, came into vogue in the generation preceding the Christian era.

The Scribes, as an organized and associated body—a college of learned men—are probably to be identified with the Great Synagogue, an institution referred to, but not clearly explained, in the Rabbinical writings. To the Great Synagogue—the central college of Scribes in Jerusalem—must be referred the origin of synagogues, widely spread in Jerusalem itself, in the towns and villages of Palestine, and in most of the important cities of the Roman Empire into which the Jewish dispersion had flowed.

The Synagogue was, in its original intention, more a house of instruction than a house of prayer. It was the chief means by which the teaching and influence of the Scribes were extended, and by which the enactments of the Law were interpreted and enforced. The Synagogue was, in fact, a church, a school, and a court of justice.

Among the enthusiasts for the Law there was an inner circle, whose exact obedience and purity of life distinguished them above all others as specially representative of the national impulse towards zeal for the Law and separatism. To these the name of Chasidim, 'the pious,' was given. The Chasidim seem to have given rise, more or less directly, to two schools, sects, or orders—the Pharisees or 'separatists,' and the Essenes.

Although these sects, together with the rival faction of the Sadducees, do not appear under those appellations until the reign of John Hyrcanus, it is not to be supposed that their origin dates from that late period. The different tendencies which afterwards took shape under familiar names originated at the time of the Return, or even earlier.

The Pharisees were the popular party—the men who distinguished themselves in that enthusiasm for avoidance of pollution from persons or things which was now the characteristic of the whole nation. Their belief included the doctrine of immortality and the resurrection of the body, and the existence of angels and spirits; in the question of the freedom of the will, they inclined to fatalism; as religious teachers, they upheld the authority of oral tradition as of equal validity with the written law.

The name of Sadducees has been traced either to Zadok the high priest in Solomon's time, or, with less probability, to Zadok a disciple of Antigonus of Socho, whose teaching, derived from Simon the Just, was wrested into a denial of future rewards and punishments. They were rather a caste than a sect. Admission to the Pharisaic party was not only open but eagerly welcomed; whereas the priestly and aristocratic Sadducees were rigidly exclusive, and insignificant in point of numbers.

In their treatment of religious questions the Sadducean scribes held to the letter of the Mosaic revelation, and denied the authority of the oral tradition: they taught complete freedom of the will in moral action: they were opposed to the Pharisees as to the belief in angels and spirits; they refused also to accept the doctrine of immortality as a deduction from the Pentateuch. Politically, the Sadducees were as a party open to foreign influences, and it was through them that Hellenic culture spread in Israel. Such a policy could have little weight of resistance against the overwhelming tide of patriotic enthusiasm stirred and ruled by Pharisaic guidance. Eventually the party of the Synagogue and of the new learning prevailed over the party of the Temple and of ancient custom.

Less conspicuous in public life, and dwelling principally in secluded settlements on the shores of the Dead Sea, the Essenes nevertheless exercised a considerable influence, and represented, though in an extreme fashion, one tendency of the post-exilic reform. Although the name, like that of the Pharisees and Sadducees, appears late in history, the type of asceticism practised by the Essenes may be regarded as part of the same movement from which Pharisaism originated. The Essenes are not mentioned in the New Testament, nor is it probable that there is any trace of their influence on Christian life and teaching at that early period, many of the practices which the Essenes followed, celibacy, isolation, silence, ceremonial ablutions, abstinence from animal food, being common to most forms of asceticism. Some tenets which the Essenes professed were derived from Persian influence, such as a dualistic theory of good and evil, the symbolism of light, the adoration of the sun, and the worship of angels. But it was in regard to the sacrificial system that the Essenes separated most widely from the ordinary religious life of the Jews. The Essenes abstained from sacrifices, and from the Temple worship, and refusing to acknowledge the Aaronic priesthood or the Levitical order, they had priests and ministers of their own.

The Zealots can hardly be reckoned as a separate party, at any rate at this epoch. They represented one extreme side of the Pharisaic movement as the Essenes represented another. At first the points of difference may have been small. It required the stimulus of the Maccabean struggle to ripen their 'zeal' into the fanaticism of later times.

Through the influences and the means of discipline here briefly traced the nation was trained in a wonderful and exceptional manner for the determined assertion of national independence. Never had the morale of a military race reached a loftier height. The Jew possessed—by whatever name we call it, faith, zeal, enthusiasm—a spirit of divine strength which alone enabled him to 'overcome the armies of the aliens.'

APPENDIX ON THE NATIONS SURROUNDING ISRAEL.

By W. ROBERTSON SMITH, D.D., PROFESSOR OF ARABIC, CAMBRIDGE.

The most comprehensive list of foreign nations known to the Hebrews is that given in Gen. x. in the form of a genealogical table of the descendants of Shem, Ham and Japheth. The descendants are nations not individuals (vv. 5, 20, 31), and broadly speaking they form three geographical groups, the northern nations (Japheth), the southern nations (Ham), the middle nations (Shem). Of the northern nations Madai represents the Medians and Javan the Ionians. Eastern peoples called all the Greeks Ionians, and under this general name our chapter also includes Kittim (Cyprus), Dodanim—or rather, as it is read in 1 Chron. i. 7, Rodanim (Rhodes), and the remoter lands of the Mediterranean, viz. Elishah (perhaps the Iaconian coast and islands) and Tarshish, that is Turdetania in south-western Spain, which was known in the East at an early date from the Phœnician trade and colonies beyond the Straits of Gibraltar. The other names of the northern group are more or less obscure, but, so far as they can be compared with Assyrian and Greek data, point to Asia Minor and Armenia. Gomer corresponds to the Assyrian Gimir in Asia Minor, probably in Cappadocia which is called Gimir in Armenian; Tubal (Assyrian Tabal) and Meshech (Ass. Muski) are identified with the Tibareni and Moschi of Herodotus, in the mountains S.E. of the Black Sea. Tubal and Meshech appear again in Ezek. xxvii. 13 as trading with Tyre in bronze and slaves. Togarmah (ibid. ver. 14) supplied horses and mules, which would suit either Armenia or northern Asia Minor. Magog in Ezek. xxxviii. is the land of Gog, which appears along with other nations of the far north as the last and most formidable enemy of Israel and is generally taken to mean the Seythians; but it is not certain that the geographical horizon of the Hebrews extended north of Asia Minor across the Black Sea.

Of the southern nations in Gen. x. 6, 7, Cush is the dark-skinned race of Eastern Africa south of Egypt; to Cush ver. 7 reckons also the peoples of S. Arabia (Yemen), which from very early times had a close connexion with Africa and sent forth colonists to it. Mizraim is the usual Hebrew name for Egypt; Phut, which is repeatedly mentioned by the prophets, is taken by ancient and probably sound tradition to mean the Libyans; and Canaan, the pre-Hebrew population of Palestine, includes the Phœnicians. The details in vv. 8–19 appear to belong to a document originally distinct but not less ancient or valuable than the main scheme of the chapter.

In the account of the middle nations or sons of Shem critics also distinguish two sources; the main scheme of the chapter embraces only vv. 22, 23, 31. Here the nations included are Elam (Elymais and Susiana) on the Persian Gulf, Asshur (Assyria) north of Babylonia and mainly east of the Tigris, Arphaxad (Arrhapachitis), Lud (Lydia) and Aram, that is the Aramaeans or Syrians, to whom are reckoned in detail a variety of minor peoples whose places cannot be determined with any certainty. This narrow scheme covers the whole range of Hebrew geographical knowledge down to the time of the Captivity, and many of the remoter nations were known to the old Hebrews only through the Phœnician traders; as may be seen by comparing Gen. x. with Ezek. xxvii. The further East lay quite beyond their horizon; thus India (Sind, Heb. Hoddu) is first mentioned in Esther i. 1; for though Solomon's fleet on the Red Sea brought back Indian wares it is not certain that it went further than the ports of S. Arabia, which from an early date were depots for the merchandise of India and East Africa; and though some have supposed that Ophir is really the Malabar coast, it is at any rate reckoned as part of S. Arabia in Gen. x. 29. In what follows we may confine ourselves to those foreign nations that had an influence on the history of Israel.

The land of Israel, from its geographical position, holds a very important place in the history of the ancient world. If we leave out of account the extreme East, which had a quite separate existence, we find at the dawn of history two great centres of empire and civilisation whose origins are lost in the twilight of extreme antiquity. One of these was in the lower valley and Delta of the Nile, the other in the alluvium of the Euphrates-Tigris valley. In each case a broad tract of very fertile country nourished a dense population and produced that superfluity of the means of life which encourages luxury and makes the progress of the arts possible. And in each case the absence of natural barriers in the shape of mountains and deserts, separating tribe from tribe and city from city, led at an early date to the formation of great kingdoms, rich and strong enough to engage in schemes of foreign conquest. Thus Egypt on the one hand, and Babylonia and Assyria on the other, are the main factors in the oldest history of Western Asia. Between them lay Syria and Canaan, broken up by natural causes into a number of small nations quite unable to cope with these empires, and therefore exposed by turn to the influence of each of the great powers, and forming the battlefield on which they ultimately disputed for sovereignty. All communication, whether in peace or in war, between the rival empires of the Nile and the Two Rivers had to pass through Canaan, which was traversed from north to south by the trade routes connecting Asia with Africa. For the huge triangle of the Syro-Arabian desert, with its base of 900 miles from Suez to the head of the Persian Gulf, and its apex 400 miles to the north, cut off communication in a straight line between Babylonia and Egypt, and forced the traffic from east to west to ascend the Euphrates till it fell into the routes leading southward to Canaan from the Mesopotamian uplands. Of these the lower crossed the Euphrates at the ford of Thapsacus (Tiphshah, 1 Kings iv. 24) near the modern Rakka, and thence passed in a south-westerly direction, mainly through deserts, by way of Rezeph (2 Kings xix. 12, now Rosafa) and Tadmor or Palmyra (1 Kings ix. 18), to Damascus. The other road left the Euphrates higher up, at Carchemish (Europus, now Jerabis), struck the valley of the Orontes, and ascending that river reached Canaan by way of Hamath (now Hama) and Baalbek, whence one road leads to Sidon and another to Damascus. The entrance into Canaan proper from Damascus was at Laish or Dan, and here before the Hebrew conquest there was an independent trading settlement (Judg. xviii. 7, 27). Canaan itself was traversed from north to south by several great routes, inland or along the coast, converging at Gaza, and entering the desert at Raphia, whence there were four marches to the Egyptian frontier at Pelusium (Exod. xiii. 17). Thus between Canaan and Egypt there lay only a short desert, offering no great obstacle to invasion, while between Canaan and the Assyrians and Babylonians the way was long and circuitous, and great cities had to be conquered before the empire of the Two Rivers could come into touch with Palestine. Hence the relations of Canaan with Egypt go back to patriarchal times, while Assyria hardly came into direct contact with Israel till the eighth century B.C.

The kingdom of Egypt, or in official style of "Upper and Lower Egypt," the former answering to the Biblical Pathros, and having Thebes for its capital, while the latter embraced the Delta and the district of Memphis (Noph, but in Hosea ix. 6 Moph), was formed by the union under a single sovereign (the Pharaoh, i.e. "Great House") of a number of districts or nomes which were often divided by local jealousies and even by religious antipathies. The internal policy of the Pharaohs through many centuries was directed to overcome these forces of disunion and strengthen their own prerogative by a well organized central administration and by the elaboration of a state religion, which united all the local gods in a single pantheon, or even represented them as merely various forms of the supreme sun-god Ra, whose offspring the Pharaohs claimed to be. The person of the sovereign was clothed with sacred dignity, church and state were closely knit together, and the priests formed a most influential class and a chief stay of the throne (cf. Gen. xlvii. 22). Under strong sovereigns this system had marvellous success; the nobles were kept under control and the peasants, always industrious and frugal, drew riches for their masters from a soil of surpassing fertility. This wealth, together with the system of forced labour, which was not too oppressive if confined to the season when agriculture was suspended, enabled the rulers to execute great public works, canals for irrigation, strong cities for defence, and royal monuments—especially tombs and temples—that are still among the wonders of the world. The state religion was much occupied with thoughts of the life after death, and Osiris, the god of the dead, is the most prominent of all Egyptian deities. The safety of the soul after death was believed to depend on the care taken of the dead body. Hence the practice of embalming and the pains spent on providing safe and splendid tombs. The great pyramids themselves, the oldest of Egyptian monuments, are only the tombs of early kings whose chief care in this life was to provide homes for themselves in the life to come.

The system of Egyptian statecraft, allied as it was with religion, and elaborated through many centuries by subtle princes and priests, moulded the national life into rigid forms and produced a unique and very imposing civilisation as conservative and self-sufficient as that of China. The prosperity of a state in which everything depended on the sovereign and on the bureaucracy and hierarchy around him, while the mass of the people were little better than contented serfs, stood on no sure basis, and the history of Egypt is marked by frequent changes of dynasty, and sometimes by periods of prolonged disorder, in which the kingdom was ready to resolve itself into a number of mutually hostile principalities. But the inhabitants always readily fell back into their habit of abject submission to the Pharaoh, who was adored as a personality more than human, and the wealth and imposing organization of the kingdom gave it a great name in the world, and considerable defensive strength, long after its expansive force was gone, and its institutions really effete and unfit to cope with new emergencies. In the 13th century B.C. Egypt was visibly a decadent power, yet five hundred years later Isaiah vainly preached to his countrymen its helplessness as a stay against the tide of Assyrian conquest (Is. xxx. seq.).

The Pyramid builders, who reigned at Memphis at least three thousand years before Christ, were followed by a series of princes who reigned with great splendour in Thebes. Then came a time of decay and foreign invasion, when the land was conquered by the Hyksos or Shepherd Kings. Who these were is unknown; to judge by their portrait statues they were not Semites, and in manners they became quite Egyptian. But they probably came from the East and opened a way into Egypt to many Semites, especially Canaanites, for from their time the signs of Canaanite influence on the Egyptian language and religion are multiplied. The chronology of the time is too vague to allow of any certainty, but it is not impossible that it was under the later Hyksos that the Hebrews settled in Goshen. The Hyksos were at length expelled by a revival of the Theban kingdom (17th dynasty); their last stronghold fell before Ahmes (Amosis) the first king of the eighteenth dynasty, and then Egypt entered on a career of Asiatic conquest under a series of warlike kings. Thothmes III., the greatest king of this dynasty, was master of all Syria, advanced victoriously to the Euphrates and even took tribute from Mesopotamia; and the cuneiform tablets found at Tell el-Amarna, containing despatches from Mesopotamian princes to later Pharaohs, shew that Egyptian influence was dominant as far as the Euphrates for several generations after the victories of Thothmes. There was no organized Egyptian empire in Asia, the Pharaohs being content to form alliances with the local sovereigns and receive gifts from them. Gradually, as the 18th dynasty drew to a close amidst internal troubles, the foreign influence of Egypt was narrowed, and the Cheta formed a power in Coele-Syria (the Orontes valley) which seems to have been allied with Egypt on equal terms, while Canaan and Phoenicia were still dominated by Egyptian influence.

The name of Cheta (Assyrian Chatti) seems to be the same as the Biblical Heth. The Hittites were a branch of the Canaanites (Gen. x. 15; Ezek. xvi. 3), and in the Bible the name includes all the Canaanites as distinguished from the Aramaean or Syrian nations that lay north of Canaan from the Orontes to the Euphrates (1 Kings x. 29; 2 Kings vii. 6). In the times of the Hebrew kings the Aramaeans predominated in the southern part of this district; their power however seems to have been of comparatively recent origin, and in old times the Canaanite population reached from the boundaries of Palestine to Carchemish on the Euphrates. But at Carchemish and Hamath sculptured monuments have recently been found of a type which is not Semitic and which re-appears in Asia Minor. The race which erected these monuments seems to have spread from Cappadocia, and at some period descended upon Syria and penetrated as far as Hamath. Now the great empire of the Cheta, which met Egypt on equal terms, apparently drew its armies not merely from Syria but from more northern lands, and the features of Cheta warriors on the Egyptian monuments resemble those on the monuments of Hamath and Carchemish. Thus it seems probable that the power of the Cheta empire, in a region which both before and after this time was divided between a multitude of small Semitic states, was due to the temporary domination of invaders from Asia Minor who had made the Canaanites their vassals.

The rise of a new dynasty in Egypt under Seti I. and Ramses II. led to fresh schemes of Asiatic conquest, and to a long and bitter war with the Cheta. The Egyptian monuments claim brilliant victories, but peace was at length made between Ramses and the king of the Cheta, and was followed by an alliance of the two powers on equal terms as before. Though Ramses was unable to renew the conquests of Thothmes, his reign of 67 years was splendid, and its latter peaceful part was marked by many great public works. Having so much to do with Asia, he lived and built much in the eastern Delta, especially at Zoan. Many writers identify him with the Pharaoh of the oppression, for whom the Israelites were compelled to build the store-cities of Pithom and Raameses (Exod. i. 11), and his son Merenptah (Merenptah) with the Pharaoh of the Exodus. But though Egypt rapidly declined from the reign of the latter sovereign, it retained its power in Palestine for several generations, and the Bible knows nothing of Egyptian power in Canaan at the time of the conquest. Fifty years after Merenptah's death we still find a vigorous and martial Pharaoh, Ramses III., who, among other exploits, rescued Egypt from an invasion in which the Syrian nations took part, but, as it would seem, only in the train of conquering immigrants from Asia Minor and other northern regions who had first broken up the kingdom of the Cheta and swept south through Canaan. Egypt held her own for the time, but at such cost that she never regained her old strength, and soon ceased to have anything to do with Canaan. Then, it would seem, the Hebrews entered from the east and occupied the inland parts of the country, when the Canaanites were weak and divided, while probably about the same time the Philistines from Caphtor (Amos ix. 7), i.e. from Crete and perhaps also from Caria, began to occupy the sea-coast south of Phoenicia. For the Purostata or Pulostata appear among the enemies of Ramses III.; and their name is plausibly identified with that of the Philistines. The power of the Philistine league with its five cities, Ashdod, Gaza and Ascalon on the coast, Gath and Ekron inland, was on the increase during the time of the Hebrew judges, and in the days of Saul they threatened to become lords of Canaan. At this time, whatever their original race, they were thoroughly Semitic in language and religion. On the other hand the fact that they did not, like the Canaanites and Hebrews, practise circumcision, seems to shew that they had never come under Egyptian influence. Though their power was broken by David they retained their national independence till they were conquered by Tiglath-pileser in 734 B.C., and even after this date were ever the foremost in revolt against their foreign lords.

From the Hebrew and Philistine settlements down to the era of Assyrian conquest in the 8th century B.C. Egypt had little influence in Canaan. Solomon allied himself by marriage with a Pharaoh, probably the last sovereign of the 21st dynasty, and had his help in conquering Gezer, one of the last strongholds of the Canaanites on the Philistine border, while Shishak (Sheshonk), the first Pharaoh of the following dynasty, and a man of foreign origin, made a raid on Rehoboth of Judah, and also (as the monuments tell us) on Jeroboam's kingdom, but effected no permanent conquest. In truth Egypt was now an effete power; the dynasty of Shishak gradually fell to pieces, the land was divided among local princes, and in the early part of the 8th century Upper Egypt fell under the sway of the Ethiopian (Nubian) kings of Napata.

The period of Egyptian influence in Syria, from the expulsion of the Hyksos to Ramses III., was not less than four or five centuries. Its permanent results appear in Phoenicia, the only part of Palestine which was not conquered either by the Hebrews or by the Philistines. Phoenicia is the coast land between Lebanon and the Mediterranean, extending from the Philistine territory of Ekron to the mouth of the Orontes. The Phoenicians were Canaanites and called themselves so, and their speech differed only dialectically from Hebrew, or as the Bible calls it, the language of Canaan (Is. xix. 18). Holding the sea-coast, and devoting themselves from an early period to fishery, trade, and manufacture, they became the great commercial people of antiquity, distributing the wares of Egypt and Babylon, as well as their own manufactures (especially glass and purple stuffs), to the whole world, and planting trading stations or colonies all over the Mediterranean, and even at Tarshish in Spain beyond the Straits of Gibraltar. The colonization of N. Africa and Spain began soon after the Hebrews entered Canaan, and may have been aided by the Canaanites dispossessed by Israel, but Carthage, the greatest of all Phoenician settlements, which ultimately disputed the sovereignty with Rome, was not founded till 814 B.C. and is not mentioned in the Bible. The commercial greatness of the Phoenicians was firmly established in the time of Egyptian domination, and they always kept up close commercial relations with Egypt (cf. Is. xxiii. 3). Their arts and civilisation shew many marks of Egyptian influence, and it was from Egypt that they learned to make glass and enamel. Probably also the old Semitic alphabet, which came to the West through the Phoenicians, and so is known as Phoenician, was derived from the Egyptian hieroglyphics. The influence of Egypt on the civilisation of the Hebrews, which was much less than is often supposed, and has left no perceptible traces on their religion and laws, seems to have been all at second hand, through the Phoenicians and Canaanites; for the Hebrew herdsmen in Goshen, on the borders of the Delta, were much less fit than the city dwellers of Canaan to learn from a settled people with an old and complex civilisation.

The Phoenician civilisation itself was only in part Egyptian. The Canaanite stock to which they belonged and which the Egyptians, when they first entered Asia, found in possession of all Palestine and Coele-Syria, was one branch of that great group of kindred nations which we call Semitic and which also embraced the Arabs, the Babylonians and Assyrians, the Aramaeans, and the Hebrews; in short, all the nations of Arabia, Syria, and the valley of the Euphrates and Tigris as far as the Armenian mountains. Babylonia was the seat of an independent and very ancient culture, and the Canaanites, who both in language and religion have points of intimate contact with the Babylonians, owed much to this native Semitic civilisation. As the Canaanite Hittites in old times touched the Euphrates, the way was open for continued intercourse with Babylonia, with which the Phoenicians maintained a steady trade, and whence probably they derived a chief source of their wealth—the art of making a purple dye from the shell-fish called murex.

The Israelites in Canaan soon formed friendly relations with the Phoenicians, who supplied a market for their wheat and other produce (Ezek. xxvii. 17). This alliance was profitable to both parties and was carefully maintained by the ablest Hebrew kings, David, Solomon, Ahab. All through Canaan the traders were not Israelites but Phoenicians; in Hebrew a "Canaanite" means a tradesman (Hos. xii. 7), and there was a colony of Phoenician merchants outside the walls of Jerusalem down to the days of Josiah (Zeph. i. 11). The Phoenicians constituted a number of small states ruled by the kings of the great cities, but the Hebrews had most to do with the people of Tyre and Sidon, who are called Sidonians from the name of their first capital, though in the time of David the seat of the kingdom had been transferred to the island city of Tyre, the most famous of all the Phoenician towns. Hiram I. of Tyre, son of Abibaal, the ally of David and Solomon (969–936 B.C.), was a great prince who did much for the adornment of his capital and rebuilt the temples of the two chief Tyrian deities, Melcarth, the Baal of Tyre, and his female partner Astarte. His alliance with Israel resulted in the temporary opening of the Red Sea to a joint navy of the two powers which gave a new trade-way to S. Arabia and perhaps to India. The next king of Tyre mentioned in the Bible is Ethbaal or Ithobal (1 Kings xvi. 31) the father-in-law of Ahab, who was priest of Astarte, and came to the throne by slaying his predecessor in a time of much internal disorder. His reign was long and prosperous (887-856 B.C.), but the end of Tyrian greatness was near. The Assyrians were approaching the Mediterranean, and from 876 onwards the Phoenicians found it prudent or necessary to appease them by occasional payments of tribute. From the middle of the following century however Assyria aimed at permanent conquest, and Tyre had its full share in the bloody and persistent warfare that ensued, suffering a five years' siege from Shalmaneser, about the same time as the siege of Samaria (724-720 B.C.). The Assyrian power on the Mediterranean coast was never thoroughly consolidated; revolts broke out from time to time, and about 650 B.C. Phoenicia seems to have been again independent, but with crippled resources and power; her Spanish colonies had fallen away (Is. xxiii. 10) and the Greeks had begun to press hard on the Phoenicians in the islands of the Mediterranean and to supplant Tyre in the Egyptian trade. Still Tyre was strong enough to resist Nebuchadnezzar for thirteen years (587-574) and apparently to capitulate on easy terms (Ezek. xxix. 17 seq.). In 538 it passed from the Chaldeans to the Persians, and about the same time Carthage declared its independence. The Persians generally treated the Phoenicians with favour on account of the importance of their fleet to the empire, and left them a great measure of self-government; the extinction of Phoenician nationality may be dated from the fall of Tyre before Alexander the Great in 332 B.C.

Having spoken of the Philistines and Phoenicians, who lay between the Hebrews and the Mediterranean, we must now look at the other near neighbours of Israel. At one time the Canaanites or (as some of the Old Testament documents call them) the Amorites held all Palestine on both sides of the Jordan as far as the desert. In the time of Moses they still held the district of Gilead on the left bank of the river, but east and south of Mount Gilead the ancient Zamzumim and Emim (Deut. ii. 10 seq., 20 seq.) had already been displaced by the children of Lot, a race closely akin to the Israelites and divided into the two nations of Ammon and Moab. The Ammonites were settled east of Mount Gilead, from the Jabbok southwards, and in the time of the Judges they laid claim to the Israelite settlements in Gilead (Judg. xi.), but were repulsed by Jephthah and again by Saul (1 Sam. xi.), and finally reduced to subjection by David (2 Sam. x. seq.), after a war in which the Ammonites made common cause with them. They regained their independence, however, soon after David's death and maintained it, as allies of their Aramaean neighbours and bitter enemies of Israel, till they fell under the power of Assyria and Chaldaea (Amos i. 13 seq.; Zeph. ii. 8; 2 Kings xxiv. 2; Ezek. xxv. 2 seq.). Nor were they less hostile to the Jews after the Captivity (Neh. iv.; 1 Macc. v.). Even under foreign rule the obstinate little nation retained its individuality for two centuries after Christ, till it disappeared absorbed by the advance of the Arabs. The capital Rabbath Ammon received a Greek colony and the name of Philadelphia from Ptolemy Philadelphus, but the old name reappears in the modern Amman. The Moabites to the south of Gilead were a larger nation, extending beyond the Arnon to the Wady 'Ahsa in the Arabah south of the Dead Sea. In the time of the Judges they acted with the Ammonites against Israel, and like them they were subdued by David (2 Sam. viii. 2) and revolted soon after, but were again reduced by Omri. The defeat and death of Ahab at Ramoth-Gilead enabled their king Mesha to throw off the yoke once more. Jeroboam the Second subdued them for a time (2 Kings xiv. 25, cf. Is. xvi., quoted by Isaiah from an older prophet, who seems to refer to Jeroboam's victory), and they then passed successively under Assyrian and Chaldaean rule, always retaining a bitter hatred to Israel. They were finally swallowed up by the Arabs, whose gradual advance on these regions is already foreshadowed in Ezek. xxv. 8 seq.

The revolt of the Moabites after the death of Ahab (2 Kings i. 1) is known to us in more detail from the famous Moabite Stone (found in the year 1869 and now in Paris), a block of basalt which Mesha inscribed with the record of his exploits and set up in the high-place which he built at Dibon in gratitude to his god Chemosh for the victory granted him over all his enemies. Chemosh was angry with his people and the land was enslaved for forty years; then again he led them to victory, and at the divine command Mesha smote the cities of Israel with extermination and offered their spoil to the national god. Chemosh, we see, was felt to be the true divine king of Moab just as Jehovah was of Israel; the religion is what that of Israel would have been without the spiritual teaching of the prophets.

The language of the Moabite Stone is practically the Hebrew of the Old Testament, differing from it much less than even Phoenician does. All three are Canaanite dialects; and as neither Moab nor Israel acknowledged kinship with the Canaanites, while the latter did count kin with the Aramaeans, whose language was much more remote from Hebrew, it is to be concluded that the Hebrew nations (Israel, Moab, Ammon, Edom) adopted the speech of the Canaanites after their immigration into Palestine. But the change of language probably dates from the time before the descent of Israel into Egypt, when the ancestors of all four peoples still lived side by side. The Canaanite influence on Moab is also seen in religion, e.g. in the worship of Baal-Peor.

Edom, which has just been named as the fourth Hebrew nation, dwelt beyond Moab in and near the Arabah or trough-like valley that runs from the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Akaba—a land mainly waste, whose inhabitants must live by their sword (Gen. xxvii. 40). Here the Edomites were preceded by the Horites or "cave-dwellers," whom they conquered (Deut. ii. 12) but did not wholly destroy. From Gen. xxxvi. 2 (where for Hivite we must read Horite, cf. v. 20–24) it appears that the Edomites intermarried with the Horites, but also with the Hittites (i.e. Canaanites) and with the Ishmaelites, so that they formed a sort of intermediate race between the inhabitants of Palestine and the Arabs of the Syrian and Sinaitic deserts. They were a rude and warlike people, and though conquered and almost exterminated by David rose again under Hadad in Solomon's reign (1 Kings xi. 14 seq.), and maintained their national existence sometimes under kings who were Judæan vassals, and sometimes, especially between the reigns of Joram and Amaziah (2 Kings viii. 20 seq., xiv. 7), as an independent state. The possession of Edom was of consequence to Judah because Elath on the Gulf of Akaba was the port for the Red Sea trade, while the stronghold of Sela (Petra) was probably already an important point on the overland route to Arabia. Elath was finally lost to Judah in the time of Ahaz (2 Kings xvi. 6). The Edomite king Causmalak paid tribute to Tiglath-pileser along with his neighbours of Ammon and Moab; from his name and similar proper names of later date it has been conjectured that Caus was the national god of Edom, as Chemosh was of Moab and Milcom of Ammon. In the last days of the kingdom of Judah the Edomites were distinguished above all the enemies of the Jews for their bitter hostility (Obadiah ver. 10 seq.; Ezek. xxv. 8, 12 seq.; Lam. iv. 21) and occupied the southern parts of the Judæan country (Ezek. xxxv. 10 seq., xxxvi. 5). In 1 Macc. v. 65, we find them in possession of Hebron, while their old seats had at this time been long occupied by the Nabataean Arabs. They were finally subdued and forcibly proselytized by John Hyrcanus (ca. 126 B.C.), and it was from one of the Edomite (Idumean) families thus incorporated with Judaism that the Herodian dynasty sprang.

On the south and east the cultivable land of Canaan passed off into deserts habitable only by nomadic tribes like the modern Bedouins, who lived partly by pasture and by the caravan trade which they guided through the wilderness, but partly also by pillaging wayfarers and making forays into the settled country. Thus southern Canaan was long harassed by the Amalekites, who lived in the desert of Paran between the Arabah and the Mediterranean, and at one time seem to have ranged as far north as Mt Ephraim (Judg. v. 14, xii. 15). The Amalekites were at constant war with the Hebrews from the time of Moses (Exod. xvii. 8 seq.), till their power was broken by Saul and David (1 Sam. xv. 7, xxvii. 8, xxx.; 2 Sam. viii. 12) and their last remnant destroyed by the Simeonites (1 Chr. iv. 43). Some of the other tribes of this region however formed friendly relations with Israel, notably the Kenites, the tribe of Moses's father-in-law (Judg. i. 16, iv. 11), who attached themselves to Judah and settled in the Judæan wilderness. Some other families of S. Judah, e.g. the Jerahmeelites (1 Sam. xxvii. 10, xxx. 29), who were still distinguished from the Judæans proper in the time of David, seem to have been of nomad origin. More important than these small tribes however were the great nomadic peoples of N. Arabia to the east of Canaan and the Arabah, which the Old Testament speaks of sometimes by the names of individual hordes or confederations, sometimes under the general name of "Children of the East" or, in later books, "Arabians." The Arabians of the Bible do not include the great trading peoples of S. Arabia, Sheba (the Sabæans of classical authors), Dedan (on the Persian Gulf), Hazarmaveth (Hadrarnaut), and so forth, which in Gen. x. 26 seq. are reckoned as sons of Joktan. These southern or Yemenite Arabs had a great civilisation, and held in their hands the overland trade between the Indian Ocean and the Mediterranean (Ezek. xxvii. 15, 20 seq.) in the wares of the far East, gold and incense. To keep the caravans open they planted trading stations and colonies in the oases of N. Arabia, which are perhaps referred to in Gen. xxv. 3, for here Sheba and Dedan appear to our surprise among the tribes of N. Arabia. But in general a sharp distinction is made between the Joktanite nations and the northern nomads who were not merchants but shepherds, camel-drivers and robbers. The book of Genesis recognises two great groups of these nomads, the children of Keturah and the children of Ishmael, and regards both as akin to the Hebrews through their father Abraham. Of the Keturæans (Gen. xxv. 1–4) the most important are the Midianites, a powerful confederation of tribes, from whose predatory excursions Canaan suffered much till their power was broken in their great defeat by Gideon and in another which they sustained in the Moabite country at the hand of the Edomites (Gen. xxxvi. 35). After this they are hardly mentioned, though their name was preserved down to the middle ages in the town of Madian S.E. of Elath on the Red Sea. The Ishmaelites again were originally dwellers in the wilderness of Paran (Gen. xxi. 21) and had relations of affinity with Egypt, whose influence was great in early times in that region. But Gen. xxv. 12 seq. (written after the Captivity) gives the name of Ishmaelites to a group of twelve tribes and nations spread over the eastern desert and extending into the heart of Arabia as far as the trading posts of Dumah (Dumaetha, now Jauf) and Tema (now Teima). So used the name practically includes all the Northern Arabs, who at the time when the list in question was written were already pressing hard on the settled peoples of Canaan and preparing to swallow up the lands east of the Jordan. Some of the tribes in the list are known to us from classical authors;

Kedar answers to the Cedrei, Jetur to the Itureans (Luke iii. 1) a bold robber tribe which in the time of Christ was settled in Lebanon and the Antilibanus, while Nebaioth "the firstborn of Ishmael" is perhaps to be identified with the rich and powerful trading people of the Nabataeans, who in the time of Christ formed a great kingdom with its capital at Petra, and not only swayed all North Arabia but held Damascus. The Aretas of S. Paul (2 Cor. xi. 32) is the Nabataean king Aretas IV. The kingdom was destroyed by Trajan A.D. 106. The Nabataeans were true Arabs, but their numerous inscriptions are written in Aramaic, shewing that their civilisation was borrowed from the Aramaeans, a race whose early influence in North Arabia—presumably exercised through trading colonies in the oases—is attested by inscriptions found at Teima, of which the oldest is assigned to the 6th cent. B.C.

The Arameans (Aram, Gen. x. 22), or Syrians as the English Bible calls them, were not a single nation but a widespread branch of the Semitic race. Their oldest seats were in Mesopotamia (Aram-Naharain or Aram of the Two Rivers), where in the book of Genesis we find the Syrian kinsmen of the Hebrews settled in the district of Haran (Carrhae, now Harran). From an early date there were many Aramaeans in Assyria and Babylonia, and in these countries the Aramaic language finally prevailed over the old Assyrian and was only displaced by the Arab conquest. On the other hand, the Aramaeans crossed the Euphrates and, pushing aside the old inhabitants of the Orontes valley, were settled in the time of David as far south as Damascus and Beth Rehob on the southern skirts of Hermon (2 Sam. viii. 3 seq., x. 6 seq.). These immigrants who, according to Amos ix. 7, came from Kir (a district whose position has not been determined), were not yet strong enough to resist David, but Damascus regained its independence under Solomon and soon became the centre of a powerful kingdom, which pressed hard on Israel from the days of Ahab downwards, and reduced the house of Jehu to the last extremity. When the Assyrians advanced on Canaan the first brunt of their attack fell on the Syrians, and the relief thus given to Israel seems to be alluded to in 2 Kings xiii. 5. At length, in 733 B.C., Damascus fell before Tiglath-pileser II. and the Aramaeans lost their political independence. But their language, which was already that of a great part of the empire of Nineveh, continued to spread in the ruin of Assyrian and Persian conquest. Aramaic was the diplomatic speech of Palestine in the time of Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 26), and under the Persians it was the official language of the provinces west of the Euphrates—even of Egypt. In Palestine after the restoration the Jews themselves gradually forgot their old Hebrew and adopted Aramaic as the language of common life. The dialect called Hebrew in the New Testament is not the language of David and Isaiah, but a form of Aramaic, which at that time was the only Semitic tongue spoken in Asia outside of Arabia, and the literary language, used on inscriptions, of N. Arabia itself as far as the northern Hijaz.

We must now look at the great Eastern empires of Assyria and Babylonia, before which all the old states of Syria and Palestine fell one after another. Babylonia or Shinar (Gen. x. 10) is the alluvial country on the lower course of the Euphrates and Tigris, of which Babel or Babylon was the chief city. Assyria, or Asshur, occupied the Tigris valley to the north of Babylonia, above the confluence of that river with the great Zab. Its boundaries cannot be exactly fixed, but its centre lay on the left bank of the Tigris, where the great city of Nineveh stood, opposite Mosul. Babylon and Nineveh were long rivals, but they had a common civilisation, of which the southern alluvium was the original home. Here the oldest kingdoms were formed at a date not less remote than the beginnings of the Egyptian state, and the cities of Babylonia, as we learn from Gen. x. 10 seq. as well as from the monuments, were older than those of Assyria. The language of the Babylonian and Assyrian empires was Semitic, but in the southern country the Semites seem to have been preceded by another race from whom they acquired many things in their culture and religion, and to whom the origin of their peculiar cuneiform system of writing is generally ascribed. In process of time Assyria became the stronger power, and after the Egyptians retired from Mesopotamia it began to push forth beyond its original limits. In the latter part of the 12th cent. B.C. the great conqueror Tiglath-pileser I. carried his victorious arms over all the regions from Lake Van to the Euphrates, and crossing that river penetrated as far as the Phœnician coast; but these conquests were not permanent, a period of deep decline followed; the monuments are silent for more than a century, and when they speak again about the close of the 10th cent. we find Assyria engaged in re-establishing its lost sovereignty in Mesopotamia. The great conqueror Assurnazirpal (884–860) consolidated his kingdom throughout the country of the Two Rivers to the borders of Babylonia, and took tribute from the western princes as far as Phœnicia, while his successor Shalmaneser II. made many wars beyond the Euphrates. In 854 B.C. he defeated a great confederation of Syrian states with Damascus at its head, and in 842 he took tribute from Jehu king of Israel. But for another century the Assyrians were mainly occupied in consolidating their power in the north and east, and no sustained attempt to incorporate Syria in the empire was made till Tiglath-pileser II. (745–727), after subduing Babylonia and breaking the power of the Alarodians in Armenia, engaged from 742 onwards in a series of expeditions to the west. In 738 he took tribute from Damascus and Samaria (cf. 2 Kings xv. 19); in 734 these powers revolted and the result of a fresh war was the destruction of Damascus, the depopulation of Gilead and Naphtali (2 Kings xv. 29), and the acceptance of Assyrian suzerainty by Judah. There was now no independent state between Assyria and Egypt, nor had the latter power, torn by war between the Ethiopians of Napata and the princes of the Delta, been able to intervene to check the progress of the victor. But when Tiglath-pileser died, the Ethiopian So or Sebech (2 Kings xvii. 4) had made himself lord of all Egypt and begun to foment a revolt in which Syria was involved, together with Philistia and Samaria, and which occupied the whole reign of Shalmaneser IV. (727—722) and the first years of his successor. The siege of Samaria, begun by Shalmaneser (2 Kings xvii. 3 seq.), was concluded by Sargon (722—705), a valiant prince, who smote the Egyptians at Raphia (720), and maintained and extended his borders on all sides. There was again a rising of the Philistines in 711 (Is. xx.), but once more the Egyptians failed their friends in the time of need. On Sargon's death a fresh revolt broke out through all the empire, and Merodach Baladan of Babylon sought alliances even in Judaea (2 Kings xx.). If the Egyptians had been active Assyria might have been ruined, but while they encouraged the rebels they were so slow to take the field that the new king Sennacherib (705—681) had time to crush the rising in the east and then appeared in Palestine (701). Once more the centre of the revolt lay in the Philistine country supported by Hezekiah of Judah; but the rebels could do nothing without Egypt, and the siege of Ekron was formed before an Egyptian army appeared on the scene and was defeated in a great battle at Eltekeh. All Palestine now lay at the feet of the Assyrian; one man alone, the prophet Isaiah, who had never ceased to warn the Judeans against the vanity of their reliance on Egypt, remained undaunted and encouraged Hezekiah not to surrender his stronghold. The prophet's confidence was justified; a great disaster fell on Sennacherib's host (2 Kings xix. 35), and he was obliged to return to Nineveh, leaving Judaea humbled indeed but in possession of some measure of self-government. Sennacherib was assassinated in 681 (2 Kings xix. 37), and from this date the Bible has little to say of the Assyrians. But their power was still mighty under Esarhaddon (681—669), who invaded and conquered Egypt, and his son Assurbanipal. The latter lost Egypt but otherwise maintained the empire in outward strength till his death ca. 626 b.c. After this the fall came swiftly. The Assyrians, powerful to destroy, never shewed themselves able to build up a stable political structure. They ruled by terror, crushing their enemies by fire and sword or weakening them by wholesale deportations to other parts of their empire. Their subjects never ceased to be the foes of their masters, and the whole course of the empire was marked by incessant revolts. The Babylonians in particular rose again and again, and on the death of Assurbanipal finally recovered their independence. Meanwhile the Median tribes to the N.E. of Assyria had been consolidated into a kingdom with Ecbatana (Achmetha, Ezra vi. 2, now Hamadan) as capital, and became lords of all the Iranian tableland, Persia (to the south of Media proper) acknowledging their suzerainty. Their king Cyaxares now began to press on Assyria. For a time their progress was interrupted by a great invasion of "Scythian" nomads, who overran Asia as far as Palestine and are probably alluded to in Jer. iv.—vi. But this diversion was only temporary and left Assyria exhausted. Again the Medes advanced in alliance with the Babylonians, and Nineveh fell, ca. 607 b.c. Assyria proper and the northern provinces fell into the hands of the Medes, while Syria lay open to be seized by Nabopolassar king of Babylon. On this side however another claimant for empire had appeared in the person of king Necho of Egypt, who in the last days of Nineveh had advanced through Palestine to the Euphrates (2 Kings xxiii. 29 seqq.) and made Judah his vassal. Against him Nabopolassar sent his son Nebuchadnezzar, who in 605 smote Necho in a great battle at Carchemish (Jer. xli. 2). The death of Nabopolassar checked the progress of the victor, but Nebuchadnezzar advanced again as soon as he was confirmed in his kingdom, and at the close of the century was lord of all Syria to the Egyptian border. The Palestinian nations were still impatient of the yoke, and Egypt, under Necho's successor Apries (Pharaoh Hophra, Jer. xli. 30), was still ready with offers of help. But Nebuchadnezzar's hand was too strong. Jerusalem was destroyed on a second revolt, Tyre too fell after a long struggle (Ezek. xxix. 17 seq.), and Egypt was humbled, though not permanently enslaved. Nebuchadnezzar's chief concern in his reign of 44 years (604—561) was however to strengthen and beautify Babylon (Dan. iv. 30), whose walls and great temple of Bel were among the wonders of the ancient world. With all this splendour the Babylonian empire was nothing more than a short epilogue to that of Assyria, ruled by the same methods and equally incapable of accomplishing anything permanent in politics. The succeeding kings from Evil Merodach (2 Kings xxv. 27) to Nabonnedus were not even great warriors, and in 538 Babylon fell almost without a struggle before Cyrus king of Persia, who was welcomed not only by the captive Jews (Is. xlv. 1) but even by the people of Babylon, and at once entered on the whole inheritance of the empire. Cyrus had already overthrown the Median empire and the kingdom of Lydia in Western Asia Minor, and on the east his conquests extended into Afghanistan, while his successor Cambyses subdued Egypt. Henceforth all Western Asia was united in a single hand, and the Jews who returned to rebuild Jerusalem had before them no possibility of political independence, and could give effect to their sense of nationality only under the form of an exclusive religious community.

One result of this was the formation to the north of Judaea of the rival community of the Samaritans, to whom a few words may in conclusion be devoted. The foreigners whom the Assyrians introduced into Samaria had partially adopted Jehovah-worship (2 Kings xvii. 24 seq.), and since the time of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 19) the mixed population, which no doubt included many Israelites of the lower orders, had even begun to recognise Jerusalem as the centre of their worship (Jer. xli. 5). On the restoration they desired to share the work of rebuilding the temple. But the leaders of the Jews looked askance on a mixed people of doubtful orthodoxy, and the breach so caused became final at the time of Nehemiah. In 432 B.C. a priest of Jerusalem was expelled because he had married a daughter of the Horonite Sanballat (Neh. xiii. 28), and by him apparently the Pentateuch was carried to the Samaritans, who founded a rival Mosaicism with its temple on Mount Gerizim. The Samaritans like the Jews thrived under the strict but wholesome discipline of the Law, which they have retained down to the present day in the original text—written in a peculiar letter—and in Aramaic and Arabic translations. With the Jews they maintained a bitter rivalry both at home and in the diapora. There were Samaritan synagogues in Egypt and even in Rome under the empire; and at Cairo and Damascus, as well as in their original homes, they maintained themselves down to modern times. They are now a very small community with its centre at Nablus (Shechem), where they still have a synagogue.

C. HISTORY OF THE PROGRESS OF REVELATION AND OF THE MESSIANIC HOPE.

BY THE REV. V. H. STANTON, D.D., FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, ELY PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

The Progress of Revelation does not consist only in the fulfilment in the New Testament of the promises of the Old. It is to be traced through changes as gradual as the coming of day, wherein we distinguish first the grey dawn, then the horizon reddening, the sky filling with light, objects becoming distinctly visible, then the first level rays of the sun which at last attain to the full splendour of noon. Naturally, in speaking of this progress our thoughts will chiefly turn to the Old Testament, before the great culmination in the manifestation of the Christ, the Incarnate Word of God. Even in the New Testament, it is true, a certain progress may be observed. Our Lord's self-revelation and the unfolding of all the divine knowledge which it was the purpose of His coming to communicate, were gradual during the years of His Public Ministry. After His Resurrection and Ascension it was the work of His apostles, primarily, by the aid of the Divine Spirit, to enter into and set forth the full meaning and effect of Christ's Incarnation and teaching. But the whole could not be apprehended at once, and different stages are to be observed in the apostolic teaching. Nevertheless, these were very rapidly passed through—within the lifetime of St Paul and St John—so that it is less important to distinguish them. Moreover, each aspect of the work and teaching of Christ there presented is perfect, absolute, so far as it extends. The simple teaching of the Sermon on the Mount on the Heavenly Father and the Ideal of the Christian character is final in its own way, as truly as are the more recondite discourses of the Gospel according to St John.

On the other hand, the Old Testament literature extends over a period of a thousand years, or more, and refers to a considerably longer time than that; and the revelation of divine truth which it contains was made "by divers portions and in divers manners." It is of great consequence that we should understand this gradual communication of light and knowledge in the Old Testament, and its true relation to the New. From want of this understanding men's minds have been perplexed with regard to the Bible, both in ancient and modern times. The Gnostic heresies of the second century afford the first great example of this; while modern unbelievers, especially among the less educated, owe many of their objections to the same cause. Believing Christians, on the other hand, have too often been unable to meet such objections satisfactorily, and have themselves given occasion for them, from their non-recognition of the facts, and of the true principles of Biblical interpretation. We also suffer a great loss if we do not perceive the actual method which God has chosen for His guidance and illumination of the human race. We should never forget that in the Old Testament we have the history of a process of divine education, the history of a nation whom God called to a special knowledge of Himself, in order that they might be witnesses and teachers of divine truth to other nations, and a stock which should bear Christ, according to the flesh, and upon which the Christian Church should be grafted. The most enlightened among them apprehended the character of God, and their own duty and calling, and the hope of their nation, only by degrees. Fresh points were continually added, and with the course of time and growing experience they saw deeper into what they had already learned.

It is, moreover, to be borne in mind, that the progress of which we speak is not uniform. Many confusions and mistakes have arisen from overlooking this. In studying the history which the books of Holy Scripture supply, there are three distinct threads to be followed. First the unfolding of Divine Revelation itself, conveyed especially in the utterances of prophets in their moments of inspiration, and outstripping often what they themselves could understand at the time; then, the measure in which the generality of the godly, and the prophets themselves in their ordinary consciousness, had made divine truth their own; and lastly, the history of the religious condition of the masses of the people, which was not only frequently far below that of its spiritually-minded portion, but also subject to many relapses.

Hence the subject with which we are about to deal is a complicated one. But there is the further difficulty that very different views are held at the present time on critical grounds as to the relative dates of many of the books, or of portions of them. It will not be possible to discuss these questions here; nor will the truth of those broad features of the Sacred History to which our inquiry is confined be materially affected by the final results of criticism. We will examine the general character of the progress made in respect to (i) the Idea of God; (ii) Ideas of Morality; (iii) Belief in a Future Life; (iv) the Messianic Hope. The state of knowledge and faith in regard to all of these was necessarily closely connected, but it will be most convenient for the purposes of this brief sketch to view them separately.

I. The Idea of God. The records contained in the first eleven chapters of Genesis, embracing the period down to the Call of Abraham, contain some most important lessons, but considering the length of this period they are very scanty, and do not allow us more than a few glimpses into the early religious history of mankind. We learn that, from the first, man was constrained to acknowledge the duty of obedience to divine commands (Gen. ii. 16 and iii.), and obligations to his fellow-men, the neglect of which God would avenge (iv. 1-16). The distinction begins to be manifested between a godly and a wicked seed (Gen. iv. 17-26 and v.); the point is marked at which the habit of worship commenced (iv. 26), and certain men stand out, even in those early ages, as living emphatically in the consciousness of the Divine Presence (v. 24, vi. 9). Violence and corruption were, however, for a time triumphant, and the tendencies of man when unrestrained by law and unassisted by grace prevailed till the earth was visited by a signal judgement, the foreshadowing of every succeeding one and of the final Divine Judgement upon sin (Gen. vi. and vii.). After this mankind is started on its new career with a few simple laws resting on divine sanction, and a knowledge of God as the God of Nature, who causes all her forces to observe due measure and to minister to man's need. Yet even this He does as matter of covenant;—He pledges Himself to it as the faithful Ruler and Friend of man (viii. 20-ix. 17). There follow the genealogies, and the account of the multiplication of languages, of chaps. x. and xi. But these few narratives do not enable us to answer questions as to the extent or mode of primeval revelation, or why it was that both before and after the Flood the darkness so largely prevailed over the light. It may be worth while to observe, before we leave these early chapters, that they contain expressions about God which are more strongly anthropomorphic than any in later parts of the Bible, e.g. Gen. vi. 6, xi. 5-7. The 'Lord's repenting Himself of the evil' in later books (Exod. xxxii. 12, 14; 2 Sam. xxiv. 16; Jer. xxvi. 3, &c.) is little more than a forcible way of saying that His pity stayed the further course of punishment. His 'repenting Himself that He had made Saul king' (1 Sam. xv. 11) is more analogous to Gen. vi. 6, but not so strong as the "it repented the Lord that He had made man, and it grieved Him at His heart" of the latter passage. Again, the "And the Lord came down to see" &c. of Gen. xi. 5-7 is more crude than the description of the coming down of the Lord on Mt Sinai, for the signs of the manifestation of His Majesty to the children of Israel. Other passages (Ps. xviii. 9, cxliv. 5; Is. xxxi. 4, &c.) are manifestly poetical. Man can never indeed rise above language drawn from the analogies of human nature. But as time has gone on, there has been a clearer consciousness that such language is metaphorical, and a fuller sense of its inadequacy; a distinction has been drawn between those aspects and feelings of human nature which are the opposite of the Divine (namely all that imply change), and those which are some feeble reflection of the divine attributes. The language which it is often necessary and suitable to use in speaking of God to young children explains and justifies the language used in a simple and childish age. For example, the idea of God's 'repenting that He had made man' would bring home vividly to the mind at that stage that His action towards man depends on man's conduct.

A fuller and more continuous narrative, so far as the chosen race is concerned, begins from the Migration of Abraham; and at this point also there is a great step forward in religion. In becoming separated from his kindred, and going forth across the Euphrates, Abraham leaves behind all thought of the plurality of gods whom his fathers, and perhaps he himself, had worshipped (Josh. xxiv. 2, 14), either in place of, or more probably in some kind of subordination to, the One God, whom he now knows as El-Shaddai, 'God Almighty' (Gen. xvii. 1, xxviii. 3, xxxv. 11, xliii. 14, xlviii. 3, xlix. 25; Exod. vi. 3). The falsity, the nullity, of other gods is not at present dwelt upon; but virtually, if not dogmatically, there is to be for Abraham and his descendants but One God, of whose absolute supremacy, and right to their sole allegiance, there can be no doubt. The very fact that they look upon Him as the God of their family and tribe, not as the God of a particular locality, tends to impress the lesson of His Omnipresence and Omnipotence. For they are wanderers, and yet wherever they go they are to believe that God is with them, and to trust His power to help them.

God's dealings with the Patriarchs, and especially with the two whose characters and histories were the most remarkable—Abraham and Jacob—impressed this belief through divine communications to their hearts as well as in the experiences of their lives. The Migration of Abraham is itself a great religious act, a venture of faith in obedience to a Divine Call. And all the subsequent course, of him and his descendants, is overshadowed by a Divine Presence, which at times becomes clearly manifest in actual revelations. It was in this simple, practical manner, as we infer from the Book of Genesis, not as a speculative tenet, but as a conviction with regard to the duty of the particular family and individuals, that the foundations of the monotheism of Israel were laid. When at a later time expressions are used by men eminent for their allegiance to the God of Israel, which seem to concede some kind of reality to other gods, so far as other nations are concerned (Judges xi. 24; 1 Sam. xxvi. 19), the language is evidently partly ironical. Still it is probable that it could not have been used when once the nullity of any god but the God of Israel had become familiar as a formal statement. That allegiance to Him, which from the first they had learned, essentially involved this denial of the reality of other gods; and it remained only that they should become fully conscious of it.

That there can be for them one only God, who exercises an effective and ever-watchful Providence over them, is the great lesson of the Patriarchal period. But this faith was not retained by the children of Israel generally amid the temptations, miseries and oppressions of the sojourn in Egypt. In such circumstances it must have been in great measure lost, as after-history, beginning with the wanderings in the wilderness, shews. To form and establish this faith in the people, and then to enlarge and enrich it, was the aim of God's guidance and training for centuries, by the agency of His inspired and loyal servants. Long was the conflict with their sensualism, coarseness, and stubbornness, the progress but slow, and marked by many times of great darkness, sometimes following rapidly upon times of reformation.

This training of Israel as a nation opens, at the Exodus, with a new Revelation of God, embodied in the new Name of the God of their forefathers (Exod. iii. 13–15, vi. 2–9). As we are so often reminded by the use of the term in the Old Testament, the Name of God is the Idea of Him, the thought of Him as an object of knowledge, trust, and worship, and hence it comes to stand sometimes even for God Himself (e.g. Ps. xx. 1; Prov. xviii. 10). Thus to learn a new name for God is an extension of the knowledge of Him. And since the true knowledge of God depends on His self-revelation, it belongs primarily to God to communicate a name, or names, for Himself. The name revealed to Moses is indeed most significant, and is that which has been ever since the one most characteristic of the Old Testament Revelation. The language of Exodus (vi. 3) is so express that we must suppose it to have been first given, or first brought into regular use, at this time; and its employment in the Book of Genesis must therefore be due to a writer, or editor, of a later time. The true pronunciation of it, as is now very generally agreed, is Yahveh; it is a noun formed from the third person of the Hebrew tense called the imperfect. The effect of the word is to represent the life of God "not as an existence at rest, but as one always becoming, thus always making itself more known"; His existence is a "continual, living activity."

Very soon after His living power has been manifested in the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt, the Ten Commandments with other laws are given as the expression of His will. Thus morality is founded upon religion; men must be righteous and holy to be acceptable to a holy and righteous God. This is one of the broad characteristics which distinguish the religion of the Old Testament from all heathen religions (Lev. xix. 2; Pss. xi. 7, xv., are some of the passages in which it is most definitely expressed), and it is easy to see how important it is.

In the primitive and patriarchal times God Almighty was the object of trust and reverence to individual men (comp. Gen. xxxi. 42) as the overruling Providence of their own lives. Under Moses the great transition was made. The Covenant-God of the fathers of the race becomes the Covenant-God of the newly-formed nation, and faith in Him the basis of the whole national life. The sense of their relationship to Him is strengthened by the fuller declaration, through the new name, of His living, active presence; while His attribute of holiness is emphasized in a way it never had been before.

It was the work of the Prophets to enlarge still further and render clearer the knowledge of God, and to bring home to the minds of the people of Israel how intimately it concerned them to know and obey Him. They dwell upon His attributes and trace His working and the indications of His character in the past history of the nation, the records of which it was one of their functions to preserve. They set forth too in their predictions how certainly He will punish or bless different courses of action. Often the relapses of the people, which were the occasion of the ministry of the prophets, were made, as error has so often been made, to help forward the knowledge of the truth. Yet it is evident even in the earliest prophets, whose prophecies have come down to us, Amos and Hosea, that they are proclaiming no really new faith, but calling on the people to be true to that which has been the faith of their fathers. That is to say, such elements of their teaching as were in any sense new were in perfect harmony with the old, were but the fuller working out of what was implied before, or supplied that which made it more self-consistent and complete. It would be impossible here to discuss in detail the relation between the prophetic teaching and the faith of earlier ages. But we will endeavour to summarize what was contained in the Faith of Israel, developed as we find it in the prophets. And for the purposes of this brief sketch the Psalms may also be compared. At the same time we will notice in what respects even this high conception was still limited.

(1) The belief in the One God as the Creator of heaven and earth at once puts a difference between the faith of Israel and all heathen systems, whether religious or philosophic. But (2), He is not only Creator, He is also Sustainer. He upholds the framework of the world, and directs and controls the powers which He has called into being; all living things depend on Him for their preservation in life. For these two closely connected articles of faith, see e.g. Amos iv. 13, v. 8; Jer. x. 12, 13, xxxiii. 20; Is. xl. 22, li. 13; Pss. viii., civ. (3) Nor were the thoughts of the chosen people confined to this visible order. There is a spirit-world which is subject to God; innumerable angels pay Him adoration and execute His commands. This faith is expressed in the title Jehovah Zebaoth (Sabaoth), or 'of hosts,' a name which does not occur in the Pentateuch, Joshua, or Judges, but which is specially common in the prophets. Is. vi. 1—5 is the passage which helps us best to enter into its meaning. (4) God is holy; this most truly expresses what God is in Himself, and we have already seen how profoundly this conviction characterized the Faith of Israel. The 'jealousy' attributed to God in the Old Testament is the necessary consequence of His holiness. (5) God exercises a Moral Government over men. It has been specially seen in His providential rule over His chosen people, manifest in their history; with regard to other nations it is viewed chiefly in connexion with the judgements which He will inflict on them for their wickedness and their oppression of Israel. This article of faith is part of what is expressed in the title of 'King,' which has a peculiarly full meaning when used of God's relation to Israel, but which is also applied to describe His rule over all the earth (Is. xliii. 15; Jer. x. 10; Zeph. iii. 15; Zech. xiv. 9, 17; Mal. i. 14; Pss. x. 16, xxiv. 10, cxlv. 1). He is also called Lawgiver and Judge (e.g. Is. xxxiii. 22). (6) The principle of this Government is righteousness. God Himself is called righteous, and the conduct must be righteous which will win His favour (Amos v. 24; Is. i. 16—20; Jer. xii. 1; Ezek. xviii.; Dan. ix. 14; Pss. xi., l., cxlv. 17). (7) He is faithful. This is the sense in which His truth is often spoken of. This attribute is displayed even in the permanence of the course of Nature; and it gives ground for the sure confidence that He will perform

His covenant with David and with Israel (e.g. Mic. vii. 20; Jer. xxxi. 35—37; Is. xxv. 1; Mal. iii. 6). (8) He is tenderly compassionate to His people (Hosea xiv.; Joel ii. 13; Is. lxiii. 15, 16). Thus was Israel schooled. It remained that the conception formed of God's peculiar relations to His chosen people should be extended to all mankind.

Different prophets laid most stress on different aspects of the divine character, according to differences of age and circumstances and personal experience. Yet there is no reason to doubt that the faith which has been indicated, in all its main outlines, would have been acknowledged by all; more or less clearly it is implied in all. As regards the essence of the conception it is not possible even to draw a distinction, for example, between the prophets before and those after the Exile.

That event, however, made a great change in the religious life of the people. Up to that time there was always a strong tendency to indulge superstitions, which seem to have been indigenous among them, and which connected themselves at all times with the worship at the high places. They also felt the fascination of the still more corrupt worships of Baal and Ashtoreth, and of Molech, the gods of the surrounding nations. At times these latter become so predominant that the whole battle of the faith is against them, as in the age of Elijah and Elisha. Through the severe discipline of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Captivity, the inclination to idolatry was at length rooted out, and the correct formal profession of allegiance to the true God established and secured, by the work of leaders raised up to restore the national life and worship, at the Return.

Before concluding this brief sketch two further points must be noticed in which preparation was made for that fuller knowledge of the character and nature of God which was to be granted when Christ came. God in the Old Testament is specially revealed as the God of the nation, the chosen nation, of Israel. It is His guidance of, and judgements upon, the nation that are set before us. But in many passages, more particularly in the Psalms, there are most striking examples of a consciousness of the relation in which He stands to the hearts and lives of individual men. The circumstances of the Exile, when the national life was for a time in abeyance, and pious souls, deprived of the impressive worship of the Temple, were thrown back upon the simpler exercises of prayer and reading of the Law, must have powerfully fostered this more individual view of religion. It found its consummation when Christ made God known as the true Father of every human being, in whose presence, and with whom, each is to live in the loving obedience and confidence of a son.

Yet one more point. The doctrine of the Unity of God is the most distinctive feature of Old Testament teaching; yet the idea of God presented is such as leads up to the mysterious and ineffable Trinity in Unity. There is a twofold current of thought in regard to the Being of God; He is unfathomable, and yet He reveals Himself. In this connexion we may note, especially, (a) the 'Glory of Jehovah'—the Shekinah, as it was called by Jews of a later time (Exod. xvi. 10, xxiv. 16; Num. xvi. 19; 2 Chron. vii. 1—3), which is a symbol of the 'light unapproachable' in which God dwells; and (b) the remarkable language concerning 'the Angel of Jehovah,' who is distinct from Jehovah, and yet so truly represents Him, that Jehovah and His angel are spoken of interchangeably [Gen. xvi. 7, 11, 13, xxii. 11—15, xxxii. 29—31 (comp. w. Hos. xii. 4, 5); Exod. iii. 2—7]. A still more important, if less striking, self-manifestation is God's declaration of His will throughout by His prophets. Again, the conception of God's relation to the world is not like that of some bare monotheistic systems; the world and God are not regarded as of wholly alien nature, and the life of the world, and above all of the human spirit, is in some sense an effluence of the life of God (Gen. ii. 7; Ps. civ. 27—30). Yet God is not merged in the world as in Pantheism. The general tenor of Old Testament language is opposed to such a view; and in the later times, when Pantheistic ideas were becoming dangerous, it is especially guarded against by the doctrine of the Divine Word, which is spoken of as mediating between the hidden God and Creation (Ps. cxlvii. 15, 18, 19). In like manner the doctrine of the Divine Wisdom, which from the beginning had dwelt, and which ever dwells, with God, which works in the world and enlightens men, helped to indicate God's connexion with, and yet separation from, the world and men. This doctrine is sketched in Proverbs viii. and Job xxviii., and dwelt upon more fully, and extended, in the Books of Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus in the Apocrypha.

II. Ideas of Morality. We have noticed the intimate connexion in the Old Testament between the setting forth of moral obligations and the revelation of the character of God. It is therefore natural to turn next to the moral teaching of the Old Testament. We do so with the caution that here it is most important to remember the progressive character of revelation and of the divine education of man.

In no questions, probably, do we find it harder to place ourselves at the point of view of a bygone age than in those of morality. For we feel that moral principles must be absolute things—the same everywhere and at all times. We think, therefore, that they ought to present themselves to the human conscience always as the same. In truth the germs of all moral ideas are everywhere the same. The Moral Sense, when undepraved, perceives the existence of rights in others which ought to be respected, and a certain personal worth in the individual himself, dictating clean, high-minded, self-respecting conduct. But the more exact ascertainment of what the rights of others are, and full conception of the claims of morality upon the individual, are matters of slow growth. Our ideas on these points are largely affected by the general advance of human society. The prevailing customs and institutions influence the individual judgements of men. Conscience is not a faculty which by its own inherent powers of intuition determines all the cases presented to it. Rather, like a judge who decides according to a code and to precedents, it administers a law supplied, if it knows and relies upon no higher guidance, by the views prevailing in the particular age and country. Thus the private moral judgements of the mass of men will never be far in advance of these views, and even the loftiest minds will be affected by them.

Apart also from the nature of men's moral perceptions, we have to consider the extent to which the habit of acting upon these perceptions has become ingrained in their characters. We are often struck forcibly by the startling moral contrasts which we meet with in the history of barbarous or semi-barbarous ages. Noble and chivalrous deeds are found side by side with deeds of violence and baseness among the same people, and even as the acts of the same man. And we come to see how long a discipline men need to give them the power of controlling the sudden impulses of passion.

Such is the general manner in which Morality is affected by the progress of society. Let us consider the relation of Revelation to Morality in early ages. In the first place, as man is provided with the means, through conscience and experience, of attaining to no small degree of moral knowledge, Revelation cannot communicate in this regard what is otherwise wholly unknown. So far as it enjoins moral precepts, it will lay down in a more full and complete form what has been partially recognised independently, or will command it with a more imposing and constraining authority. Take for example the announcement of the divine vengeance upon blood-shedding (Gen. ix. 5, 6), and the sixth commandment. Horror of this sin, and a sense that there is a divine retribution for it, have been felt in some degree among those to whom this express divine utterance has not come.

Further, men have been left to ascertain, as time went on, the true sphere of application of different laws; and this may even have rightly varied in different ages. The original statement of the primary laws could not be hampered with exceptions, or exact definitions. The majesty of their enunciation depends in great part upon their simplicity and conciseness. To the command "Thou shalt not kill," the great majority of mankind have admitted legitimate exceptions in the cases of punishment for crime, self-defence, and rightful war. The view held among the Israelites as to the cases to which the law did not apply was coloured by the state of society and the prevailing ideas as to man and his rights, and no divine decree directly and immediately altered this.

So far as laws divinely given did enter into details, while they softened the harshness of existing institutions, they were necessarily based on them, and they refrained from imposing a standard of which men would have failed to recognise the justice. Thus the unfree servant and maid, though protected, are not treated as having equal rights with the free (Exod. xxi. 20, 21, 26, 27; and again compare Lev. xix. 20). This is the principle indicated by our Lord, "Moses for the hardness of your hearts," &c., Matt. xix. 8. Again, we cannot fairly judge of the measures permitted for the enforcement of punishment, without considering what practicable means existed for securing substantial justice. In a state of society where there could be no organized police, it would be the best thing to sanction the system of the avenging of blood by the next of kin, an escape for the innocent being so far as possible afforded by the Cities of Refuge (Num. xxxv. 9—end). The duty of the avenger might even need to be insisted on. The right measure of punishments must also depend in part on the means for their application, and on the need for the repression of particular classes of offences. Thus the lex talionis (or 'law of equivalents,' 'an eye for an eye,' &c., Ex. xxi. 23—25; Lev. xxiv. 17—22) may seem severe to us, but might not be so when crimes of violence were common. The simplicity of the award was also a merit, and like all fixed penalties it set a limit to vengeance.

Moreover, without compromising the unique divine character of Holy Scripture, we acknowledge a human element in the communication of the Law, as we do in the utterances of the prophets. The Divine Voice was to the lawgiver a stimulating and overruling inspiration, but it did not destroy the use of his own ability, and his knowledge of previous customs and laws. This appears a more reverent view than that which would attribute directly to God the enunciation of commands of a manifestly imperfect and temporary nature. God used the human agent for doing a work for which he was fitted by his very limitations.

Some acts of imperfect morality, or such as for us would be highly immoral, are divinely commanded or approved in Scripture. These require a separate notice.

a. The command to Abraham to sacrifice Isaac. God did not intend that Isaac should be slain; but this is not a full explanation of the incident. The real difficulty lies in the fact that God is represented as approving of Abraham's willingness to sacrifice his son. And this, which is the great point of difficulty, is also the key to a right view of Abraham's state of mind. For we cannot but infer that the persuasion to which he yielded, however it came to him, was not malign or superstitious. It was not such as he ought necessarily to have resisted. The spirit which animated Abraham made his act essentially different from the sacrifices of children to Molech. At the same time the existence of human sacrifices in neighbouring nations no doubt facilitated the temptation to Abraham, by suggesting the question whether he was ready, in order to prove his devotion to God, to do what they would for their gods. Moreover, the idea that the sacrifice of his son's life would in itself be an immoral act would not occur to him, or would not press itself upon him as it would on any parent now. The value of human life was not then so fully recognised, while a father was regarded as having the power of life and death over his children. We can understand, too, how he would distrust any considerations which dissuaded him from the act, because he knew how strongly the feelings of his own heart and his personal aspirations pleaded on that side. Could he give up to God that life far dearer to him than his own, and in which the fulfilment of the divine promises and his own far-reaching hopes had been bound up? This was the question which repeated itself again and again within him. And this he was found able to do, through his magnificent faith. He felt assured that, dark as the way was to sense, God, who had given him Isaac as the means of the fulfilment of the promise, would make good His word.

b. Wars of extermination. That God should permit a wholesale destruction of life, in which the innocent are involved with the guilty (Deut. xx. 16, 17, 18; 1 Sam. xv. 3), is not a difficulty specially introduced by the Old Testament. It is what we see in the case of earthquakes, pestilences, and various catastrophes. To hold fast to the belief in the divine love and justice in spite of such facts as these is the great trial of faith. But that men, and not simply forces of nature, should be used as the agents in such a destruction was only possible so long as the act was not against their own conscience. That it was not, was due to the lower regard for life, and to an absence of the sense of each individual's independent right to his own life, and a habit of contemplating the responsibilities and fate of the children as bound up with those of the parents. Hence, also, it was thought natural and fitting to visit punishment not only upon the individual wrongdoers, but upon their families, when it was necessary to make any signal example of retribution (Josh. vii. 24, 25; Dan. vi. 24). The abominable wickedness of the nations of Canaan made a terrible punishment just, and the destruction of at least all the adult members necessary that the Israelites might be preserved from corruption (Lev. xviii. 24—28; Deut. vii. 1—6). Non-combatants could not be excluded, for the women of the land were the chief source of corruption (Num. xxxi. 1—18). Nor, horrible as the idea is to us, was there any special cruelty in destroying children. They would be unconscious of their impending fate up to the moment when it overtook them; while if they had been suffered to live, they might have proved a cause of trouble.

c. The deed of Jael. We are not told that this was done in consequence of any direct command from God. The difficulty lies in the warm commendation which it receives from Deborah, an inspired prophetess, Judges v. 24-31. The deception and treachery involved in the act make it revolting to us, largely because of our sense that even the life of an enemy ought not to be taken in war without giving him a chance of defending himself. But the conduct of a woman like Jael, in the circumstances of her country and time, ought not to be judged by our standard. It is a great mistake to look only upon the repulsive side of such an act, and to forget the high and noble enthusiasm which may have moved her to it. The warm and true sympathies of her heart seem to have been with the Israelites, the worshippers of the One and Holy God, the object of whose war was to obtain deliverance from the idolatrous and abominable Canaanites. The opportunity was given her of striking a decisive blow for this great cause, and she nerved herself to do it.

Another class of objections is founded on the fact that the characters of some of those who receive the most signal marks of divine favour, and are made the channels of divine communications, are marred with great sins (e.g. Abraham's conduct to Hagar, and in the matter of Pharaoh and Abimelech, Jacob's deceit, David's adultery and murder). No approval of these acts is expressed in Scripture; they are even in some instances sternly condemned, or, as in the case of David and Jacob, entail consequences of misery. Still it is urged as a difficulty that men guilty of such heinous faults should be held up on the whole as objects of reverence. Travesties of their lives and characters are very common in infidel publications designed for the less educated. This form of attack implies an entire lack of the power of placing ourselves at the point of view of men of other ages and in other states of society. There may be great elements of nobleness, making the character on the whole a very lofty one, while some virtues are as yet imperfectly developed and some passionate and cruel instincts retain considerable power. And if we are to judge fairly of the criminality of individual actions we must take into account the strength of the temptations to which men were subjected, through the absence of the restraints from without which are so beneficial to ourselves. There may also be exceptional potentialities for moral and spiritual growth in characters marked by serious inconsistencies.

So far of the moral precepts of the Law and their fitness to educate the people. But more important still was the indirect effect throughout Israel's history of the revelation of the true knowledge of God and of man's relation to Him in quickening their moral perceptions. The covenant into which they had been brought with the All-Holy God imposed upon them the necessity of being righteous and holy, as the condition of pleasing Him; and of this they were continually reminded by the prophets. The high calling of man, and especially their own high calling, was set before them, and their idea of it, and of its obligations, was continually being raised; while their sense of sin was deepened by all the ceremonial of purification and of sacrifice. It will have been observed that the instances of deeds and characters, whose imperfect morality causes special difficulty, all belong to the earlier ages, the Patriarchs, the Judges, and the early Monarchy. In spite of the depravity of the mass of the people at many subsequent times, and the wickedness of many of the kings, an unfailing power of moral recovery was displayed, and there was true moral advance in the better part of the nation. The saintly character became more complete and consistent. The chief point of difficulty which we meet with in later Old Testament times is the language of the Imprecatory Psalms. Even if all the principal of these (the 7th, 35th, 69th, and 109th) were, according to their inscriptions, to be attributed to David, there would remain, for a later age, such a passage as Jeremiah xvii. 18. The writers of these passages of Scripture seem, however, at least to have no intention of avenging their own cause, but to have learnt to commit vengeance to the Lord. Their enemies are also manifestly wicked men, who were oppressing a representative of Jehovah, king, prophet, or saint, which gave to the sufferer both a reason to expect, and title to claim, their punishment. This circumstance helps to fit these psalms to be used even now as denunciations of wickedness in common worship by the Church of God. Nevertheless this language forcibly reminds us how much higher was the law which Christ brought in. He taught most emphatically the imperfect and preparatory nature of the moral standard under the Old Testament. Christians have been mainly occupied with tracing the fulfilment in Him of the prophecies, and of the ceremonial law. But it is in regard to the Moral Law that He Himself more particularly exemplifies the principle which He has 'come to fulfil' (Matt. v. 17-48).

III. Belief in a Future Life. To pass from the subject of Moral Ideas to that of the existence of belief in a Future Life is not a violent transition; for such a belief may exercise a powerful influence upon morality, not only as a motive, but in determining the estimate of the relative importance of duties. In our Christian moral teaching the thought of the Judgement to come and preparation for a better world are seldom long absent. On the other hand, it must strike every observant reader of the Old Testament, that the rewards and punishments held out therein as motives to virtue and godliness relate almost solely to this present world. A belief in continued existence after death was not altogether wanting, even in the earlier times. Such an expression as 'gathered to his people,' which appears not to mean simply 'buried in the family sepulchre,' shews this. (Gen. xxv. 8, 17, xxxv. 29, xlix. 29, 33; Num. xx. 24, 26, xxvii. 13, xxxi. 2.) At a later time we have such a comparatively full description of Sheol, the place of the dead, as that contained in Isaiah xiv. 9 ff. But it is always regarded as a dim, joyless region; the existence there is a death in life. A difference between the lot of the righteous and the wicked is not dwelt upon. It is the death which falls unexpectedly upon the wicked, the way in which they are blotted out from the face of the earth and from all honourable memory, not the thought of their punishment in another world, which is used to warn and rebuke unbelief. (Pss. vi. 5, lxxxviii. 10-12, cxv. 17, 18, lxxiii. 18-20.)

The rewards and punishments of this life are motives especially applicable in the earlier stages of moral education. They appeal to natures in which foresight is as yet little developed. And on the whole they are verified as regards the more rudimentary virtues of control of the bodily appetites and respect for the rights of others. The practice of these does tend to secure earthly prosperity, and their neglect to banish it; whereas sense can supply no adequate inducement for striving after the more refined and lofty moral ideals. Thus lessons of prudence as regards this life must always enter into the training of children; and in the world's childhood it was needful that they should be prominent.

Yet the connexion between godliness and prosperity, vice and calamity, though manifest to an unusual degree both in the national and individual life of the Israelites, and adapted to the requirements of their moral training, was yet often hard even for them to trace. But the very imperfections in the visible order of Providence were designed to lead them to a higher moral level. As time went on those 'obstinate questionings' caused by the experience and observation of the seeming failures of justice, which still often harass us so much, oppressed with terrible weight the mind of one sacred writer after another. Again and again they recur in the Psalms, forming even the main theme of the 73rd; while the same great problem, treated from many sides, is the one subject of the Book of Job. Through such conflicts of the soul men were prepared for a higher hope, and were taught to find a deeper consolation and reward in reliance upon God and in the sense of His favour. And at times when their communion with God is most close and they feel that nothing save the living knowledge of God can satisfy the human spirit,—one and another psalmist is permitted to rise to the faith that a full and eternal fruition of the Divine Presence will be vouchsafed, in comparison with the joy of which their present affliction shall be of no account (Pss. xvi. 8-11, xvii. 14, 15, xlix. 14, 15, lxxiii. 23-26).

Towards the end of the time covered by the Old Testament Canon the more definite faith in a resurrection began to be formulated. Hosea vi. 2; Isaiah xxvi. 19; Ezek. xxxvii. refer to the restoration of the nation, but they may have prepared the way for the belief in individual resurrection. Job xix. 26 cannot be quoted, because, according to the most probable rendering, it expresses a belief, not that the sufferer will rise, but that in another world he will be allowed the enjoyment of the vision of his vindication by God. The doctrine of a resurrection is, however, unquestionably to be found in Dan. xii. 2, 3. It was much dwelt on among certain sections of the Jews in the century and a half preceding the Coming of Christ (e.g. see 2 Macc. vii. referred to in Heb. xi. 35; and notice the doctrine of the Pharisees in the time of our Lord and of St Paul). But this faith was held in a coarse materialistic form. By the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, and by His teaching, and that of His apostles, it was purified and exalted, and for the first time placed on a sure foundation, so that 'life and immortality' were in truth 'brought to light through the Gospel' (2 Tim. i. 10).

IV. The Messianic Hope. Though the hope of life for the individual after death was thus for the most part vague and dim under the Old Dispensation, there was another sense in which hope in the future was strong, and ever growing clearer and fuller. More and more as time went on all believing souls yearned for the fulfilment of God's promises through the Redemption of Zion and the Coming of a perfectly righteous King. The term Messianic Hope expresses the expectation of the Coming of a God-sent King; but it is commonly for convenience used also to describe the more general hope with respect to Zion. The latter existed sometimes without the former, but the development of the two cannot be considered apart. In tracing the growth of the Messianic Hope, the chief passages must first be noticed which, since the Old Testament Scriptures were illuminated by the Coming of our Saviour, have been held to be Messianic prophecies. Then the history of the actual expectation of the Messiah in pre-Christian times must be traced in the principal stages of its formation.

Christian Faith has long been accustomed to regard Messianic prophecy as beginning from the earliest chapters of the Bible, in the promise with respect to the Seed of the Woman, Gen. iii. 15. And rightly so: for these words foretell that man should overcome the powers of evil, though himself suffering in the conflict. And this was only finally and perfectly fulfilled in the Son of Man. He is the Representative of our race. In Him the divine idea of the being and true destiny of the race was realized, and in Him therefore all that was divinely pledged concerning the race was accomplished. (We may remark in passing that it is in this way that Ps. viii. applies to Christ; see its interpretation, Heb. ii. 6 ff.) Such predictions had an important part to play in instructing Christian hearts after the Christ had appeared; but their Messianic sense does not seem to have been perceived beforehand. They did not help to form the Hope of the Messiah. At least they do not belong to the main line of the development of this Hope in Israel's history, which Hope is the expectation of a King who should reign over them as the perfected people of God. With this expectation the name is first connected. The longed-for King becomes known as the Messiah even before Christian times. Other ideals are tributaries to the principal stream and finally mingle with it. But their point of junction (speaking broadly) is not till after the Coming of our Lord. The expectation of the Messiah, in the strictest sense, is however closely connected with all the hopes for the future of Israel as a nation. They all helped to foster, and in a sense culminated in, the conception of the Person of the King. Its actual historic growth may therefore, perhaps, fairly be considered to begin with the special blessing on Shem, Gen. ix. 26, 27, to whose race the nation of Israel belonged.

And it is at least to be traced from the covenant with Abraham, which assured and promised unspeakable blessings to his descendants as a race chosen by God (Gen. xii. 1-3, xvii. 1-22, xviii. esp. v. 18, xxii. 15-18, xxvi. 3-5, xxviii. 3, 4). Yet the specific promise—"in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," is to be understood as a prophecy of Christ only in the same way as the promise of Gen. iii. 15; though here He is the representative of a more limited body, of the family selected out of the race. That is to say, the words are spoken primarily of the nation descended from Abraham as a whole; but their perfect fulfilment is seen only in Him, who in His sacred humanity is the perfect flower of the nation. Jacob's blessing on Judah, again (Gen. xlix. 8-12), is Messianic in a general sense. The view that in this passage Shiloh means the Messiah is not well founded. (See the uncertainty of the rendering shewn by the alternatives given in the margin of the Revised Version. There is also no evidence that the name Shiloh was, before the Christian era, or for some time after it, a name for the Messiah.) Balaam's predictions in Numbers xxiii. and xxiv. also, are Messianic in the same way as the prophecies preceding.

There remains one prediction to be noticed before we leave the Pentateuch. It is that of Moses: "The Lord God shall raise up unto you a prophet like unto me." This promise nourished one of the principal of those tributary ideals, to which allusion has been made. It received partial fulfilment in the successive members of the great race of prophets whom God sent to His people. Such partial fulfilments are indicated in the context of the original promise (Deut. xviii. 20-22). They were but partial, because not even the greatest of them was 'like unto,' i.e. the equal of, Moses. After prophetic inspiration had for some time ceased there arose a yearning expectation of the coming of a prophet (1 Macc. xiv. 41, comparing iv. 46 and ix. 27). We see signs of this hope in the time of our Lord, but the prophet was still not identified with the Messiah (Matt. xvi. 14; Luke ix. 7, 8, 9, 19; also Mark vi. 15; John i. 21, 25, vii. 40, 41). Christian Faith first saw that this office, too, was fulfilled in Jesus and formed part of His Messiahship (Acts iii. 22, vii. 37).

We come now to the most important stage of all in the history of the great hope of Israel, that of God's Covenant with David. From this time the office and character of the Messiah are distinctly prepared in the King of David's line, ruling by God's appointment and might, and standing to God in the relation of a son to a father (2 Sam. vii. 12, 13, 14). It has sometimes been customary to give the name Theocracy (or, 'Government by God') only to the period preceding the establishment of monarchy. But in reality the divine sovereignty over Israel was not rendered less effective by that change in their outward constitution. God used the errors and unfaithfulness of the people (1 Sam. viii. x, xii.) to work out His own great purpose. After giving them in Saul a king after their heart, a king of commanding stature, but without the necessary moral qualities, He gave them a king 'after His own heart.' And in David, and all worthy descendants of his, God came nearer to the people than ever before. It is to be observed that as yet it was not made clear that there should be One perfect King, the final, eternal satisfier of every need. But hopes and aspirations which could only find satisfaction in such an One were being ever more fully fashioned. This view of the relation of the Davidic kingship to the Messianic Hope is illustrated and confirmed by the history of the word Messiah itself. It means 'Anointed One,' and could be applied to any one specially commissioned by God (e.g. Ps. xvii. 50 runs in the Hebrew 'to His Messiah, to David'). Then in course of time the thoughts connected with the name came to be so exalted, that it was reserved as a title for the One who would fulfil every hope. We have here the second great principle which will enable us to understand the true character of Old Testament prophecy. Before we had the principle of the fulfilment in Christ as the Representative of the race, or nation. Here we have the principle of Type and Anti-type. Or we may, if we choose, bring the two cases under one law and indicate both their connexion and their difference thus. Both classes of prophecies may be said to be typical prophetic; but whereas in the former case the type is shadowed forth in the calling of a collective body, and may on this account be more difficult to trace; in the latter it is exhibited in an individual, or a succession of individuals, and is consequently more clearly expressed. The same traits in Messiah's character are in part foreshadowed in both cases. The nation of Israel, as well as the king, was God's son (Ex. iv. 22; Hos. xi. 1). The nation, too, had been chosen and called for a special purpose (Deut. iv. 37, &c.). In connexion with this view of the nation other features of great importance will presently appear. When speaking of types, it is, however, carefully to be noted what kind of type we have in view. The types that have been made most familiar through popular religious teaching are fanciful, allegorical applications of circumstances in the lives of individuals in the Old Testament, or secondary features of ancient ritual. Allegorizing of this kind has been very common in the Christian Church from an early age, and has its justification, if a fictitious value is not attributed to it; but, comparatively, little of it is to be found in the New Testament. On the contrary, the type, to which in the present context we are alluding, is that of an office, the great office of the Theocratic King.

An important group of psalms must be referred to at this point. Ps. lxxxix. directly alludes to the Covenant with David described in 2 Sam. vii. Ps. ii. gives us, as it were, a new rendering of that covenant, though the meaning remains essentially the same. Ps. xl. has a striking meaning in this connexion, if on the strength of the idea sketched in Deut. xvii. 18-20 we may specially apply its language to the king. On that supposition it opens to our view the profound purport of the covenant with David, in the claims it laid upon the chosen king, and foreshadows the complete devotion of Him whose 'meat it was to do His Father's will.' In Ps. xlv. 6 there are other possible renderings of the phrase, "Thy throne, O God," which prevent us from taking it as proof that a Messiah was already expected who should be in a strict sense Divine; but the whole psalm is undoubtedly a most lofty description of the God-given glory of His anointed King. Ps. lxxii. is an exceedingly rich description of the blessings of the reign of the king that should be. Ps. cx. is on more than one account most interesting. We have in it the most vivid presentation of the truth that the looked-for king is God's Vicegerent, while here alone in the Old Testament, if Zech. vi. 13 be excepted, on which see below p. 170, a priestly character is attributed to the king. These psalms are prophetic in a higher degree than the narrative of the Covenant in 2 Sam. vii. For although they start from that covenant as their ground, and though their song may have been awakened by the birth of an heir to the throne, or the accession or marriage or some great event in the reign of an actual king, and may thus in a sense have had a present reference; yet with extraordinary power and intensity they hold up the image of the Ideal King and yearn for His appearing.

The importance, in regard to the Messianic Hope, of the earliest prophets whose prophecies were committed to writing, Amos and Hosea, lies chiefly in the pictures they give of the purification of Israel by discipline and judgement, their internal reunion, and the rich blessings which God would pour down when, in fulfilment of His Covenant, He should have perfectly united His people to Himself. Many traits from these descriptions obtained a permanent place in the conceptions that were formed of the times of Messiah. We cannot in this short sketch stay to notice a tenth part of such descriptions in the subsequent prophets. We must leave it to our readers to do this in their study of the Old Testament. For without some idea of their extent, there can be no adequate sense of the intensity of the confidence and yearning with which the blessings of the great future were looked for in Israel. So far as the promised bliss is represented in the form of earthly felicity, we have now learned to take the language figuratively. The foretold blessings have in part been fulfilled at the first coming of the Christ; in part we wait for their fulfilment at His Second Coming (Amos ix. 11-15; Hosea ii. 14-23). In these two prophets the connexion of these blessings with the reign of a king of the family of David is indicated but it is not prominent. There is one passing reference to it in each (Amos ix. 11; Hosea iii. 5).

We may conveniently notice the prophet Joel at this point, though very various views are held as to his date, some critics placing him even before Amos and Hosea, others after the Exile. Besides the remarkable prophecy of the outpouring of the Spirit of God, quoted by St Peter on the Day of Pentecost (Joel ii. 28-32; Acts ii. 16-21), this prophet supplies the great image of the Day of the Lord as a Day when He shall sit in judgement upon the nations of the earth, the enemies of Israel, in the valley of Jehoshaphat (Joel iii. 9-17).

We pass now to Isaiah and Micah, and meet here, more especially in the former, with an immense advance in the conception of the Messiah. The prophet, indeed, evidently looks for the birth and reign of the expected King as an event in the near future, and sees in it the solution of the troubles of his own times. But it is upon one pre-eminent individual, rather than upon David's house, that his hopes are centered; while in the loftiness of his language concerning this expected Deliverer and the fervour with which he looks for His coming, he seems to place Him at a height altogether above the kings of the present and the past. Whether he understood the meaning of his own words or not, he is undoubtedly prompted to use expressions which point to One more than man.

In connexion with these prophecies a new class of predictions,—undoubtedly treated as such in the New Testament—comes before us for the first time. These are particular incidents connected with the appearing and life of the Messiah. The instances in the prophecies now before us are His birth from a virgin (Is. vii. 14; Matt. i. 22, 23), at Bethlehem (Micah v. 2; Matt. ii. 5, 6), and the chief scene of His opening ministry (Is. ix. 1, 2; Matt. iv. 12-16). Similar is the prophecy in Zechariah ix. 9, of the King coming to Zion, riding upon an ass. These are not explained by what has been said of the foreshadowing of His Office. But it will be best to reserve any remarks upon them till they can be considered together with more examples of the same kind.

Other prophecies which foretell the rise of a great and righteous King of David's line, or more generally the restoration of David's house, are those of Jeremiah (xvii. 25, xxii. 4, xxiii. 5, 6, xxx. 9, xxxiii. 14-26) about the time of the going into exile, of Ezekiel (xxxiv. 23, 24, xxxvii. 24, 25) during the Exile, and of the latter part of Zechariah

(xii. 7—xiii. 1) of more doubtful date. Jeremiah shews the spiritual character of the Coming Dispensation with special clearness, in a passage which is made to take an important place in the argument of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Jer. xxxi. 31—34; Heb. viii. 7—13, x. 15—18). With this compare Ezek. xi. 19, 20, xxxvi. 25 ff. Ezekiel also represents the restoration of Israel by a new and striking figure (ch. xxxvii.), and foretells the destruction of the heathen forces hostile to her in language which has lent traits to the visions of the Book of Revelation (Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix.; Rev. xix. 17 ff., xx. 7 ff.).

It will have been observed that the prophecies quoted above from the Book of Isaiah were from the earlier chapters. But chaps. xl.—lxvi. are of the highest significance in regard to Messianic prophecy. Many devout students believe that these chapters, together with one or two other passages in the earlier part of the book, belong to the time of the return from Captivity, and that they were incorporated with the prophecies of the great prophet of Hezekiah's time. Some of the grounds for this opinion are the allusions therein contained, the new point of view, and the style of the Hebrew. Be this as it may, what proved to be a most vital aspect of the character and work of the true Messiah is here foreshadowed under the image of the 'Servant of Jehovah.' The title itself is applied to our Lord by St. Peter (Acts iii. 26, iv. 27, 30); and He Himself appears to allude to it in the parable of Luke xiv. 15—24 (though the word there used is 'slave' or 'bondservant'). In the mind of the prophet this character does not appear to be in any way connected with that of the promised King. He starts from the idea of Israel, conceived as fulfilling its calling among the nations of the earth, and realizing its true relation to God (ch. xlii. 8 ff., xliii. 1 ff., xlv. 1 ff., &c.). But when he speaks of the Servant as 'given for a covenant of the people,' and as having a ministry to Israel as well as to the nations, and as a Vicarious Sufferer, it may be questioned whether it is an adequate exposition that he has here in mind simply the godly stock, the better part of the nation, which after being purified by trial truly represents the whole, for whose sake God blesses the whole, and whose sufferings, meekly borne, have atoned for the sins of the whole. It may well be thought that the image of an individual Sin-bearer must here have risen before him.

From the 53rd of Isaiah it is natural to turn to the 22nd Psalm, which has been generally felt to be second to it alone in the clearness with which the sufferings of the Messiah are foreshewn. Some commentators believe that the same Servant of Jehovah, the people of Israel, the subject of many passages in the latter part of the Book of Isaiah, is the speaker designed in this psalm; and that through this personification there is portrayed the nation's experience of affliction, and God's purpose in it, the mission of Israel and her great and spiritual hope.

There is nothing in the psalm itself which directly bears out this view, and it seems more probable that a prophet is here speaking in his own person. Yet evidently his are no private sorrows. He suffers because of, and through, the sufferings of his people; his first thought with regard to the reinvigoration of his own faith is, that it shall be for their comfort and instruction; his hopes are all centered in their restoration and the extended glory of the Name of Jehovah. Thus while the cry and the hope of the nation find utterance, and its true calling finds fulfilment, in the individual prophet, he becomes even more directly and distinctly typical of the Christ than the personified nation could be. Psalm lxix. is another to which similar remarks in great part apply, though the individual element is here larger. The Messianic character of other psalms is the same. Take for example the 16th, in which the unspeakably great and precious inheritance of the godly man, the blessing he finds in the discipline of trial, his life-purpose and his hope, are so wonderfully set forth. In the words expressive of the last, St. Peter has taught us to see a prophecy of the Resurrection of our Lord (Acts ii. 27, 28). Another, and indeed the chief, set of parallels with particular incidents in the life of our Lord, connected this time with His Passion, is brought before us in Psalms xxii. and lxix.

The explanation of prophecies of this kind may lie, not in a prevision granted to the prophet, but in the fact that coincidences were ordained by Divine Providence in order to help men to recognise the Christ when He came, and also to mark Him out clearly as the true object of Old Testament prophecy. In order that they may have cogency these parallels in detail with the Old Testament must be found in the case of some character generally typical of the Christ, or in some passage, the main scope of which is prophetic of the times of Redemption. Anything relating to the Theocratic King eminently fulfils this condition, as also do any traits in such a portraiture as the 22nd Psalm. So in a lesser degree any true prophet might be a type, and thus, for example, the correspondence in the price set upon our Lord with that set upon the prophet Zechariah, and the use made of the money, are justly noted (Zech. xi. 12, 13; Matt. xxvi. 15, xxvii. 7—10).

There are two passages in the Book of Zechariah which are of importance in relation to the general conception of the Messiah's office. If the rendering of ch. vi. 13 adopted in the text (not in the margin) of the Revised Version be the correct one, the priestly character of the Messiah-King is here asserted. The only other passage in the Old Testament which can be compared with it is Ps. cx. 4. Zech. xiii. 7 represents the judgement of God as falling, for the sake of the people, on the King, the Shepherd of the people, whom, according to the covenant with David, He had brought into close fellowship with Himself. Thus, though far from being so fully descriptive as Isaiah liii.

or Ps. xxii., this passage is more directly predictive of the Messiah's sufferings; for it is the King suffering, and suffering for His people, that is set before us. The same holds good of Dan. ix. 26, xi. 22.

The prospect of the Return from captivity and the restoration of Jerusalem awoke the strains of prophecy to their highest power and intensity. We have seen how at the very beginning of the Exile Jeremiah looked forward to the Return, and in connexion therewith to the blessings of the new covenant. Before the Captivity had lasted long, Ezekiel set forth the restoration of Israel under the new and striking figure of a resurrection. He also describes so minutely the arrangements and measurements of a restored temple, that some have thought that he was giving what he intended to be directions for the building. But in parts of his description he plainly rises into the language of symbolism (e.g. ch. xlvii.), and the whole may therefore probably have a symbolical meaning. The last chapter of Zechariah also contains a remarkable prophecy both of judgement and redemption. But it is in a portion of the Book of Isaiah, which we have already found characterized by the figure of the Servant of Jehovah, that the prophet, in stirring up the hearts of the Israelites for the great act of faith involved in the Return to their desolated land, is led to set forth spiritual glories in language which anticipates the seer of the Apocalypse, and in which we find adequate expression for many of our highest Christian hopes.

One remarkable feature in these and other prophecies, belonging to, or primarily relating to, the times of the Captivity and Return, is the wider horizon shewn in the setting forth of God's gracious purposes in regard to the Gentiles. It had been necessary that strength and tenacity should be first imparted to the character of the Israelite nation, in order to enable them to retain the lessons which God designed to impress upon them, and to preserve their existence and fulfil their calling. This was one principal aim of all their earlier training. They were made to feel their separation from all other nations and the peculiar relation in which they stood to Jehovah as His chosen people. In some respects they learnt the lesson only too well. They turned their privileges into sources of self-gratulation and contempt for other nations, instead of seeing in them a call to discharge a mission towards mankind. Hence arose the narrow exclusiveness of the Jewish character, as we see it depicted both in the New Testament and in classical literature. With this in our minds, we are forcibly impressed when we meet in the prophets with forecasts of the conversion of the Gentiles, which seem like an anticipation of that Gospel which was afterwards specially committed to St Paul. Israel had not long felt the pressure of the great nations of antiquity bordering upon the Holy Land when we meet with a prophecy of this nature (Is. ii. 2; Mic. iv. 1). At the later period in their history at which we have now arrived, the calling even of the most distant nations to be worshippers of Jehovah, and the true position of Israel among the nations as the prophets of the knowledge of God and ministers and priests of holy things, are dwelt upon in the most glowing words (Is. xlix. 6, lxi. 6, lxvi. 23; Zech. xiv. 9; Mal. i. 11, &c.).

In the Book of Daniel we see the effect of contact with other nations in a somewhat different way. This book marks a new stage in the history of prophecy. In the case of earlier prophets, 'the Word of the Lord' comes to them and they declare it; in Daniel visions, mostly of a symbolical character, are shewn to the seer, and their interpretation is communicated to him. The form of the prophecy is therefore called Apocalyptic (from Apocalypse, revelation, or unveiling). Visions, with the symbolism naturally belonging to them, begin to be common in Ezekiel and Zechariah; but in Daniel they assume a new prominence. What concerns us now, however, is the theme of the visions in Daniel. This is the relation of the kingdoms of this world which successively arise, to the establishment of the Kingdom of God, and the goal to which God is leading human history.

We have already referred in passing to one of the prophecies in this book, relating to the Person of the Messiah. One of its most remarkable visions, that of "one like unto a son of man" brought to the Ancient of Days to receive power and glory (ch. vii.), must not be passed over. The interpretation given of the vision (vv. 15-27), and the general analogy of Old Testament prophecy, would suggest that primarily the exaltation of the kingdom of "the saints of the Most High" is here the subject. It is symbolized by the human form, in contrast to the other kingdoms whose brute force is symbolized by beasts. If so, the application of the vision is transferred to our Lord, as it is by Himself, on the ground of His being the Head and Representative of that holy kingdom, the One in whom all its power resides and from whom its grace and glory now. But it is possible that some glimpse of this realization of the vision may have been granted to the prophet himself. In other places in his prophecies, heavenly beings appear with whom the fortunes of earthly kingdoms are mysteriously connected (x. 13, 20, 21, xii. 1). This may have afforded to his mind the suggestion which enabled him to conceive the idea of the heavenly Head and Representative of the Kingdom of God.

The prophet Malachi, who is placed last in the canon, and who has been generally supposed to have lived some considerable time after the Return from captivity, foretells the coming of a great prophet who should prepare the way for the Lord's Day of Judgement and Redemption (Mal. iii., iv.). We have already alluded to the fact that this hope of a prophet became characteristic of the period 'between the Testaments'; the hope of a king of the house of David seems at this period to have faded, at least at certain times or in certain portions of the Jewish world, if not indeed generally. Thus throughout the Apocrypha there is no reference to the hope of the Messiah.

But for a century, or so, before the Coming of our Lord this hope had been reviving, and had even been gaining in definiteness. The Messiah was more clearly separated in thought from all other kings of David's line. It was expected that He would bring a complete and final deliverance, and His appearing was beginning to be associated with the ushering in of a new world. Of this we have evidence in Jewish documents, as in the Psalms of Solomon and certain portions of the Book of Enoch, and of those portions of the Sibylline Oracles which are pre-Christian, as well as in other documents contemporary with the apostolic age. Moreover the books of the New Testament themselves offer proof sufficient. The psalms recorded in the first two chapters of the Gospel according to St. Luke—the Magnificat, the Benedictus and the Nunc Dimittis—are the most beautiful examples of the Hope of Israel, which was nurtured in saintly souls, through the teaching of the Scriptures and of the Spirit of God, under the Old Dispensation. There are also many indications in the Gospels of the nature of the current Messianic expectations of the Jews. And the whole mode of our Lord's manifestation of Himself and of the preaching of the apostles, and its effect, cannot be understood on any other supposition than that these expectations were widespread.

The hopes of the mass of the people were fixed on the prospect of deliverance from their enemies, and material good things which should follow. Pious hearts dwell on the putting away of national sin, on internal union, peace, and the establishment of a righteous rule. Yet in looking for the Messiah, it was only the Kingly ideal that was present to their minds. As we have already implied, those other ideals of the Suffering Servant of Jehovah, and the Priest, and the Prophet, which equally foreshadowed Him and in reality were prepared that they might be fulfilled in Him, do not seem to have been regarded as Messianic beforehand. They did not go to form the actual prevailing conception of the Messiah before He came. The indications of their connexion with the King-Messiah in the Old Testament are so slight that we cannot be surprised that they should not have been understood. But seen in the light of their fulfilment in Jesus Christ all became plain. All the different images together found in Him their highest realization. Yet again, such foretastes as men had enjoyed of the kingdom of God and the expectation of its full triumph prepared their hearts for Christ's proclamation of it, while the coming in of the new dispensation taught them that things spiritual and eternal are the substance of which things temporal are the shadow. And so they learned to look for the fulfilment of Old Testament hopes concerning the redemption of Zion and future blessedness of Israel, first partially in the Christian Church, and finally and fully in the "Restitution of all things."

2. NEW TESTAMENT.

a. SYNOPSIS OF GOSPEL HISTORY.

BY THE REV. A. CARR, M.A.

PART I. THE NATIVITY AND EARLY YEARS.

	ST MATTHEW	ST MARK	ST LUKE	ST JOHN
1. The Preface of St John	1. 1—13 ^a
2. The Preface of St Luke	1. 1—4 ^b
3. The Birth of St John the Baptist announced	1. 5—25
4. The Annunciation to Mary	1. 26—38
5. The Salutation of Mary. The Magnificat	1. 39—56
6. Birth of St John the Baptist. The Benedictus	1. 57—80
7. Appearance of an Angel to Joseph in a dream	1. 18—25 ^c
^a This Preface, peculiar to St John, indicates the scope of his Gospel. 1. The life and work of Christ are viewed as a revelation in part of an eternal fact. 2. The later date of the Gospel is implied by a statement of positive truth against growing error.
^b This Preface is most valuable, (1) as indicating the existence of many oral or written Gospels; (2) as throwing light on the sources and origin of St Luke's Gospel. The language and style exhibit scholarship and literary skill.
^c Note the citation of prophecy in this passage in accordance with St Matthew's plan.
8. The Nativity of Jesus	1. 25 b, d	2. 1—7 ^d	1. 14 ^d
9. The Genealogies	1. 1—17 ^e	3. 23—38 ^e
10. The Announcement to the Shepherds	2. 8—20
11. The Circumcision and Presentation in the Temple	2. 21—38
12. The Visit of the Magi	2. 1—12 ^f
13. The Flight into Egypt	2. 13—15
14. The Children slain at Bethlehem	2. 16—18
15. The Return to Nazareth	2. 19—23	2. 39, 40
16. Jesus, 12 years of age, goes up to Jerusalem	2. 41—52

^d The birth of Jesus Christ is now placed by the best authorities in the year 4 before the commonly received date. The determining points are, (1) The first rule of Quirinus (Luke ii. 2); (2) The accession of Tiberius; (3) The death of Herod. ^e St Matthew traces from Abraham, the father of Israel, St Luke (the Gentile Evangelist) from Adam, the father of the human race. ^f The insertion of this and the following incidents (13, 14) by St Matthew again connects the N. T. with O. T. prophecy (see Numb. xxiv. 17; Hosea xi. 1; Jeremiah xxxi. 15).

22. The Marriage at Cana.....				2. 1-11 ^f

^a Very little in this section peculiar to St Matthew or St Mark. St Matthew strikes the first note of the 'Kingdom,' St Luke connects his Gospel with external history. The quotations, as usual in the common tradition, nearly follow the LXX. ^b Here the Synoptics exhibit a close verbal agreement combined with independence of treatment. St Luke has the two special points (1) 'in a bodily shape,' and (2) 'while He was praying.' ^c The short and vivid narrative of St Mark is drawn from a distinct source, but 13 b agrees verbally with Matthew 11 b. ^d This testimony includes the Baptist's account of the Saviour's baptism and of his own mission. See sec. 17. ^e It is characteristic of St John to choose for his narrative the inner, spiritual, first call of the apostles. The Synoptists relate the second, external call of four. ^f Narrated by St John as a typical manifestation of power.

33. Dwells in Capernaum.....	4. 13-16 ⁱ		4. 31, 32 ⁱ
34. The (second) Call of Peter, Andrew, James and John: the first group of four in the Apostolic College.....	4. 18-22 ^k	1. 16-20 ^k	5. 1-11 ^k

^g This important event in the chronology of the Synoptists is narrated retrospectively by St Matthew and St Mark. ^h The point of time is marked by St Matthew and St Mark by the imprisonment of the Baptist. The cause of imprisonment is narrated afterwards. There is clearly a reason for not interrupting a sequence on the temptation. ⁱ St Matthew proving that Jesus is the Christ points out the prophetic significance of this sojourn in Galilee. St Luke, true to his motive, sees in rejection at Nazareth and acceptance at Capernaum a forecast of the Christ rejected by Jews, accepted by Gentiles, and a fulfilment of the O. T. instances cited by Jesus. This connexion is an instance of what is meant by 'in order,' St Luke i. 3. ^k St Matthew and St Mark are here nearly identical. St Luke verbally coincides in the last verse only, and inserts the incident of a miraculous draught of fishes. The passages, however, are probably to be regarded as parallel. The fuller treatment by St Luke would be a result of careful inquiry from 'eye-witnesses.' The way in which Simon Peter is introduced as a known person points to a separate tradition.

35. Heals a Demoniac in the Synagogue.....		1. 21-28 ^l	4. 33-37 ^l
36. Heals Peter's wife's mother and other sick folk.....	8. 14-17 ^m	1. 29-34 ^m	4. 38-41 ^m
37. The Retirement of Jesus.....		1. 35-37 ⁿ	4. 42, 43 ⁿ

^l This is an interesting parallel. The narrative goes on the same lines though the choice of words differs. In the words of Jesus, however, and in those of the demon the parallel is close. ^m The parallel sequence is noticeable here: in all these the time—sunset—is given. Here is undoubted evidence of a common original—probably a common Greek original. ⁿ One of the passages which exhibit exact reminiscence of St Peter; the first note of the Petrine leadership is named by St Mark, 'Simon and those with him.'

45. Restores the withered hand on the Sabbath.....	12. 9-13 ^t	3. 1-5 ^t	6. 6-10 ^t

^o One of the most marked instances of parallelism. The special acts and words of Jesus are described in identical terms. St Matthew places this miracle after the Sermon on the Mount, and first in a series of various miracles, proving power to do as well as to teach. If the Sermon on the Mount were removed from the text St Matthew's sequence would appear identical with that of the other Synoptics, a most interesting example of the manner in which this Evangelist inserts the discourses of Jesus in the 'Catechetical' order.

^p Another instance of close parallelism, especially in the words of Jesus. In St Matthew the miracle is displaced, coming last in the series. The other two Synoptists preserve the same sequence in all this section. ^q A singularly close parallel, with clear evidence of common original. Note too the Synoptic sequence is complete. The call of Levi is preceded and followed by the same incidents in the three Synoptists, although there appears to be no necessary connexion of thought.

^r As usual in our Lord's sayings the Synoptic report is almost identical.

^s Here Mark and Luke continue the sequence. There is a large proportion of common matter. But both St Matthew (vv. 5-7) and St Mark (v. 27) have peculiar points of importance. The parallel is precise in the deeply important saying Matt. xii. 8, Mark ii. 28, Luke vi. 5, which concludes the scene.

^t The triple parallelism is less complete here, but the rare verbal form for 'was restored' common to the three accounts incontestably proves an identical source, and, but with slight exception, the whole of St Mark's narrative is paralleled either by St Matthew or St Luke. St Matthew (v. 17) cites that part of the Lord's argument which applies specially to the Jews.

50. Jesus heals the Centurion's Slave	8. 5-13 ^x		7. 1-10 ^x

^u St Matthew and St Mark closely parallel. St Luke differs.

^v The sequence maintained in St Matthew and St Mark. St Luke inserts the choice of the Twelve as taking place at this point. The mode of narrative differs considerably in several points.

^w St Matthew inserts the names of the apostles before recording the Lord's charge to them. St Luke probably names them in stricter historical order. Some expressions peculiar to St Mark in this account are very noticeable.

^x St Luke adds particulars to the narrative. The words of Jesus and of the centurion are preserved with little variation in the two accounts.

^y Note that St Luke having selected this incident omits a similar one recorded in the other Gospels.

^z The charge is reported in words nearly identical. In the rest St Matthew and St Luke are closely parallel. In St Matthew vv. 32-37 are peculiar to that Gospel.

^c The parallelism is close. St Matthew and St Mark have each a special point in the action of Jesus. See Mark v. 34; Matthew v. 49.

of Jairus	9. 18-26 ^l	5. 21-43 ^l	8. 40-56 ^l

^d St Luke is here briefest of the three. Nearly all his words find a place in the other Synoptics, while the fresh matter is nearly all common to St Matthew and St Mark. ^e v. 12, peculiar to St Matthew here, is found in a different connexion in St Mark iv. 25. ^f The different context of the parallel in St Matthew is noteworthy and suggestive. ^g The one parable peculiar to St Mark. ^h The points of difference in the report of the parables are slight but interesting. St Matthew cites Isaiah in reference to teaching in parables. ⁱ This is one of the most interesting of the parallelisms: the actual verbal points of contact are few, and St Mark and St Luke have important peculiarities of expression, yet the sequence of acts in the narrative is identical. ^k The sequence observed in the Synoptics of these two miracles manifesting power over the physical and spiritual world is noticeable. It would be a natural connexion in a catechetical form. There is little verbal coincidence in the first part of the account. Here St Mark has some striking peculiarities. The description of the miracle itself is nearly identical in the three. ^l Between sec. 61 and sec. 62 St Matthew inserts very instructively a third miracle—the healing of a paralytic, a discourse on forgiveness, his own call, and discourses on the Pharisees and on fasting. In (a) St Mark's narrative is full, exact, and graphic. St Luke's shorter narrative has much in common with St Mark. St Matthew gives one interesting note, 'within herself,' v. 21. The healing words of Jesus are identical in the three accounts. (b) Here too St Mark has the fuller account, of which the greater part appears either in St Matthew or St Luke, but not in both. His most important special point is the quotation of the Aramaic words v. 41 'Talitha cumi.'

^m Added by St Matthew as a further instance of the Lord's manifestation by miracles. For the sequences in St Matthew see sec. 53. ⁿ The correspondence is close between St Matthew and St Mark. The precise form of the narrative is probably due to St Peter or St Matthew. St Luke, according to his principle, omits an incident similar to the first rejection at Nazareth. See sec. 32. ^o From a comparison of the parallels stated in the first column this description of the circuit appears to be a formula with St Matthew. ^p St Matthew's account is the most complete. His peculiar points have a close relation to the special purpose of his Gospel. ^q An instance of a parallel report with one word only common to the two. Each makes special points of interest. ^r Subject-matter not wholly paralleled in either, but partly in both of the other Evangelists. One of the instances where St Mark's report is divided between the other two. Found not in both, but partly in each of the other Synoptics. ^s Where the accounts correspond the resemblance is close. The additional matter furnished by St Mark is considerable, and seems to imply separate and exact testimony: probably of one who had lived at Herod's court. ^t A parallel of great interest as comprising the four witnesses. The motive of St John's inclusion of this Galilean incident is clear from the context in his Gospel. St Matthew and St Mark correspond closely. In the account of the actual distribution—omitted by St John—the Synoptics agree verbally. St John's narrative is to a great extent independent both in words and style. ^u St Matthew and St Mark closely correspond. Certain crucial expressions are common to the three, but St John has much that is independent. ^x A closely parallel passage. St Mark, however, has some interesting points of his own.

^y The explanation needed for Gentiles is peculiar to St Mark, as also the very important statement in v. 19. In the list of sins there are suggestive differences. With these exceptions the two reports are nearly identical. ^z (a) The words of Jesus, except the actual words of healing, are nearly identical in the reports. The accessory circumstances differ. The absence of this incident in St Luke's Gospel is somewhat difficult to understand. (b) Many particulars added by St Mark, among them the special case of healing the deaf man who stammered.

^a The report is clearly from a common source. The correspondence is complete. St Luke omits, refraining from repeating similar instances. Note sequence in Matthew and Mark, from sec. 73-75. ^b An instance where difference of names occurs, pointing to some special local circumstances of the writers or readers. ^c There is almost verbal identity between St Matthew and St Mark. This falling short of absolute identity points to a common oral source rather than a common written source.

^d In this important section the questions of Christ and the answers are nearly identical. A marked instance of close correspondence in a crucial incident. ^e The whole of this section is closely similar in the Synoptical accounts, a note of its deep importance. St Luke omits the rebuke of St Peter, and the important words Matt. xvi. 17-20 belong to that Gospel alone. ^f With the exception of two or three striking expressions the reports of St Matthew and St Mark are identical. St Luke's narrative has many independent touches. Where the accounts are closely parallel is in the words of St Peter and the Divine Voice.

^g This section is remarkable for many vivid descriptive points peculiar to St Mark. In each Gospel there is much diversity from the other two. They only quite coincide in the parallels St Matthew v. 17, St Mark v. 19, St Luke v. 41. There is a special interest in the description of St Luke the physician. ^h St Mark is the most comprehensive in (a), extending the words of Jesus with St Matthew, and noting their effect with St Luke. (b) Peculiar to St Matthew. (c) The same incident differently reported except in the Lord's words about the child. ^k St Mark here contains St Luke's report, and adds some words of Jesus v. 39. ^l Here St Mark finds a nearly complete parallel in St Matthew, though the context in St Matthew differs in part. The words of Jesus on offending the little ones are preserved with little variation by the three. ^m The context in St Luke is different, and suggests a different line of thought. One of the passages which seem to show that our Lord repeated sayings in varied connexion. ⁿ The saying in (a) preserved with little variation. (b) Peculiar to St Matthew. ^o The two first instances are reported in almost identical language. The third belongs to St Luke alone.

In the report of the Lord's Prayer there are differences both in expression and in subject-matter.

The last two vv. belong to St Luke alone. ^t Here vv. 1, 2—12 find parallels in St Matthew and St Mark. See sec. 54 vv. 2—9 in St Matthew. See sec. 47. ^u For the closely parallel passage in different connexion see Matthew vi. 25—33. ^v The correspondence here is less close. The teaching is somewhat different. ^w The parallelism is rather of subject-matter than of verbal coincidence. ^x Here St Luke inserts Parable of the Mustard-seed: see sec. 58 (e).

^a The parallels are to be found in the Sermon on the Mount, St Matthew vii. 13, 14, 21—23, and in a passage following the cure of the Centurion's servant, St Matthew viii. 11, 12. But the correspondence is rather of thought than of words, and accords with the utterance on different occasions. ^b The identical report of these words on widely different occasions raises the question of repeated sayings with singular distinctness. If the saying was uttered once only its true historical position is doubtless where St Matthew has placed it. And yet the thought of the prophet dying in Jerusalem makes it beautifully apt in St Luke's context. ^c This parable is similar to one related St Matthew xxii. 1—10, the framework in parts is verbally parallel, but the incidents and teaching differ materially. ^d For vv. 26, 27 comp. St Matthew x. 37, 38. vv. 34, 35 are rather closely paralleled: St Matthew v. 13, 14; St Mark ix. 50. ^e A parallel to (a) is in St Matthew xviii. 12—14, but the lesson differs in the two contexts.

^k The very close correspondence here shews the importance of this weighty judgement. Here after long separation St Matthew and St Mark join in sequence. ^m Once more the Synoptic correspondence becomes very close. St Matthew contains a slight addition, and St Mark has two special points of interest. The identity of this record marks how highly treasured the words were. ⁿ The whole of this passage is closely parallel and in sequence. ^o St Mark has only the words which introduce the parable. ^p This prediction is more definite and detailed than those which precede. St Luke, by omitting all mention of the chief priests and scribes, throws into prominence the share of the Gentiles in the Passion: an instance of the manner in which the Evangelists adapted their narrative to their special readers. ^q In (a) the introduction differs, but the body of the narrative agrees closely. In (b) the identity of the source is clear. ^r This parallel exhibits one of the prominent instances of discrepancies in the Synoptics. The points of contact are so many that the supposition of distinct incidents is impossible. On the other hand the points of difference are so marked as to point to a diversity of sources. ^s The harmonists regard these as parallels: but there are important points of difference both in regard to the occasion and context and to the incidents of the parables.

^a Here there is the great interest of a fourfold comparison. In the Synoptics the same sequence is observed, and the points of contact are numerous; yet each Evangelist has characteristic points of separate description. St John connects the joyous recognition of the crowd with the raising of Lazarus. ^b (i) The reports of St Matthew and St Mark are nearly identical. St Mark adds one short note v. 13 b. St Luke omits. (ii) The Synoptic correspondence is very close: St Matthew and St Mark all but identical. St Luke is more brief. (iii) Independent accounts. ^c The parallel report is nearly identical. St Mark cites further words on prayer.

^d The report is identical, except for slight verbal points. ^e St Matthew's report is the longest, and draws the lesson for the Jews more markedly. The occurrence of a single word (for the vineyard) not elsewhere found in St Mark points to an independent source or narrative. The quotation from the Psalm (St Matt. v. 42 and parallels) is in identical words. ^f The correspondence is very close. The reports go on the same lines, only differing in a few special words; but these give a peculiar character to each narrative. ^g Here both statement and refutation are in almost identical terms. ^h St Matthew and St Mark nearly identical, though each closes the incident in a special way. St Luke's parallel was on a different occasion. See sec. 95. ^k The parallelism of (a) is very close. (b) Very close at one point; St Mark and St Luke nearer in accordance than St Matthew with either. The rebuke is greatly extended in St Matthew's report.

^l Here too St Mark and St Luke draw closely together, St Matthew omitting the incident. There is hardly one word in St Luke's report not contained in St Mark. ^m In this long and deeply important parallel the greater part is in the triple Synopsis. Of the rest most finds a place in the parallels of St Matthew and St Mark, but each of the Evangelists has peculiarities, both of words and expressions, in addition and variation, which deserve careful study. ⁿ St Mark and St Luke are in close agreement. The common Synoptic matter is small. ^o The parallel in St Luke sometimes cited by the harmonists belongs to a different occasion. The accidents alone correspond, not the essence of the incident. St Matthew and St Mark are here closely agreed. St John gives an independent narrative. All agree verbally in the important words of Jesus, St Matthew v. 11 and parallels; St Mark, however, has an addition here. ^p Here there is a close but not complete parallel. St Luke and St John have each their special mode of narrative. (b) confined to St Luke vv. 24-30. ^s In this deeply important parallel St Matthew and St Mark are in close, almost identical correspondence. St Mark adds the remarkable episode of the young man with the linen cloth gilt about him. St John also has a special report. ^y The remarks on sec. 159 apply here for (a) also. ^a See remarks on sec. 137-161. ^b All agree in the report of Pilate's opening words. St Matthew and St Mark agree throughout. St Luke has a general agreement but a fuller report; the definite statement of the charge belongs to him alone. St John's account is the most special and of the deepest interest. ^c St Luke (having alone narrated the mockery by Herod's soldiers) omits the mockery in the Praetorium where the other Synoptists agree closely. The Synoptic accounts have much in common, but St Luke as before shews independent sources. ^d This incident, recorded by all the Synoptists, is variously given by each. ^e This incident, peculiar to St Luke, is characteristic of his research and of his pathos. ^f The sequence and subject-matter agree, but each has special evidence to give. ^g v. 28 in St Mark's report is spurious. ^h St Matthew has an addition v. 43—otherwise is identical with St Mark. St Luke's report is independent, but is governed by the Synoptic sequence. He alone records the story of the penitent robber vv. 39-43. ⁱ The darkness and the rending of the Veil of the Temple are described in identical words by the Synoptists. For the rest St Matthew and St Mark agree very closely, St Luke again being independent of their authorities. The incident of the centurion is given by each with characteristic differences. ^k Here each Evangelist has special points, there is little trace of a verbally common source. St Mark has a nearer relation to St Luke than in other parts of the Passion.

NOTE A. ON THE MIRACLES AND PARABLES IN THE GOSPELS.

(1) Miracles are an essential element in the mission of Jesus Christ. They were not only divine acts, but also a part of the divine teaching.

Christianity is founded on the greatest of all miracles—the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. If that be admitted other miracles cease to be improbable.

It is not necessary to regard miracles as deviations from the order of nature or the laws of nature. All that can be truly asserted is that the causes of which miracles were the results are unknown to us. But it is certain that the advance of science discloses causes of acknowledged facts. Therefore ignorance of the cause of a fact is not evidence against the fact.

A miracle may be regarded as the manifestation of a hitherto latent divine force. And as by miracles Christ revealed latent natural forces, so by the same means He revealed latent possibilities of spiritual life.

That miracles are contrary to experience may be admitted. For the point to be proved is not that miracles are agreeable to experience but that the miracles of Christ happened once in experience. It is here that the sceptical argument fails. The origin of life was contrary to experience once, but the fact is undeniable.

Miracles then, and above all the miracle of the Resurrection, rest upon historical evidence which was tested in the first age of Christianity; not by an ignorant and credulous people, but by many who were slow to believe, who were gifted with a cultivated intelligence and powers of reasoning and who were willing to die for their faith.

A chain of results has happened in exact conformity with the attested facts. Without these facts that chain of results is inconceivable—customs, rites, institutions, festivals, remain to this day traceable to the events of the life of Christ and to His teaching, especially to the miraculous act of His Resurrection; and of these customs no other reasonable explanation has ever been given.

The purpose of miracles. (1) It may be gathered from the Gospels that miracles were put forth (a) as evidence to the faithful Jews that Jesus was the Christ, a proof of His Messiahship (St Matthew xi. 4, 5). (b) As evidence of divine power exhibited in visible results (St Luke xi. 20); and (c) by inference, as evidence of divine power working secretly where no visible proof could be given, as the act of forgiveness, which is in itself a miracle, an act of creative energy (St Matthew ix. 2-7). (2) Hence miracles are parabolic and instructive, setting forth by symbol such divine truths as the result of sin, and the cure of sin;

the energy of faith; the curse of impurity; the destiny of Israel; the law of love. (3) Miracles are also proleptic or anticipatory. By them Christ has traced out the lines of Christian charity or energy in works of love, and inspired the physician's skill. (4) Lastly miracles were and are a response to faith, and its best encouragement. They were never wrought without prayer, need felt, and faith.

Names of miracles. The names by which miracles are designated in the Gospels exhibit the different aspects under which they may be viewed.

They are called 'signs' (semeia), as being visible tokens of an invisible power or agency. They are 'powers' or 'mighty works' (dynamis), because they are rightly regarded as acts of an almighty power; again they are called simply 'works' (erga), the natural results of the Messiah's presence among men. Lastly they are 'wonders,' 'marvels' (terata), or acts which excite astonishment without impelling any inference, or rousing deeper feeling. The word 'miracle' itself meaning a wonderful work is not used except in conjunction with the designations given above.

Miracles peculiar to the several Gospels.

St Matthew. (1) The cure of two blind men (ix. 27-31). (2) The demoniac who was dumb (ix. 32-34). (3) The stater in the fish's mouth (xvii. 24-27).

St Mark. (1) The deaf and dumb man healed, vii. 31-37. (2) The blind man at Bethsaida, viii. 22-26.

St Luke. (1) The miraculous draught of fishes, v. 4-11. (2) The raising of the widow's son, vii. 11-16. (3) The woman vexed with a spirit of infirmity, xiii. 11-17. (4) One afflicted with dropsy, xiv. 1-6. (5) The ten lepers, xvii. 12-19. (6) The healing of Malchus, xxii. 50, 51.

St John. (1) Water made wine, ii. 1-11. (2) The nobleman's son, iv. 46-54. (3) The impotent man at Bethesda, v. 1-16. (4) The man blind from his birth, ix. (5) Raising of Lazarus, xi. 1-45. (6) Miraculous draught of fishes, xxi. 1-24.

(2) Parables. (a) Most great teachers, especially Oriental teachers, have used some form of parable or myth in their instruction: but none so exclusively as Jesus at one period of His ministry. In His early Galilean circuits the Evangelists record that "without a parable spake he not unto them."

From our Lord's words (Matthew xiii. 13-15; Mark iv. 12; Luke viii. 10) we learn the reason for this method. The parable conveys to the hearer religious truth exactly in proportion to his faith and intelligence; to the dull and unintelligent it is a mere story—"seeing they see not"—to the instructed and spiritual it reveals the mysteries or secrets of the kingdom of heaven.

In this the parable exhibits the condition of all true knowledge. He alone who seeks finds. It possesses moreover, especially in the East, supreme attractiveness of form. It is suited alike to simple and learned. The variety of its imagery charms many classes and many minds, teaching all to find divine truth in common things. Divine wisdom has been justified; for no teaching has impressed itself more deeply on man than the lessons of the parables.

(b) The word itself, 'parable,' is Greek in origin and means a setting aside by side, a comparison. In it divine truth is explained by comparison with things. The Hebrew word meshal, which 'parable' is used to translate, has a wider significance, and is applied to the balanced metrical form in which teaching is conveyed in the poetical books of the Old Testament. See Matt. xiii. 35.

(c) Interpretation of parables. It is important to distinguish between the interpretation of a parable and the application of a parable. The only true interpretation of a parable is the meaning which it conveyed, or was meant to convey, when first spoken. The application of a parable may be infinitely varied in every age and circumstance. In many cases too the meaning grows and deepens by the lessons of history and by the teaching of science. The parable of the leaven or the mustard tree or the drag-net is clearer in the light of ecclesiastical history, the parable of the fig tree or the corn growing secretly gains force by scientific knowledge.

But if the true and original meaning of a parable is to be grasped it is important to disregard the light of after ages and to consider its context and setting. The thought to which it is linked, the connexion in which it is placed, the persons to whom it is addressed, give the clue to the right interpretation. Other rules of interpretation are (a) not to force a meaning on subordinate incidents; (b) not to regard as parallel parables which are connected by superficial likeness of imagery; (c) to bear in mind that the same illustration has not always the same significance; leaven, e.g., signifies a principle of good as well as a principle of evil; (d) to remember that the comparison in a parable is not complete, does not touch at every point: the characters of the unjust judge or the unjust steward or the nobleman who went into a far country—recalling the infamous Archelaus—do not concern the interpretation of the parable. The parable draws a picture of life as it is, not as it ought to be, and compares certain points in this picture with heavenly doctrine. (e) To observe the proper proportions of a parable, not to make the episode more prominent than the main line of teaching.

(d) Classification of parables. Parables may be arranged according to their scope as prophetic or moral, according to their imagery as being pictures drawn from history or from nature or from contemporary life or customs, or according to the occasions on which they were delivered or the persons to whom they were addressed.

But the greatest importance should be attached to the grouping of the parables by the Evangelists themselves. In St Matthew three main lines of teaching are illustrated by parables. (a) The Church of the future—its planting and growth, internal and external—the enthusiasm for it—the mingling within it of good and evil—the final judgement of it (ch. xiii.). (b) The Jewish Church and nation, its history, and the causes of its fall (ch. xxi. 18, 19, 23-xxii. 14). (c) The ministry of the Church. Parables of the Passiontide, addressed especially to the apostles, on work and watchfulness (ch. xxv. 1-30).

The parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard (ch. xix. 30-xx. 16), in answer to a question of the apostles, may be classed under (a).

St Mark follows the lines of St Matthew in (a) ch. iv. 1-34, and (b) ch. xii. 1-12; but in each division fewer parables are reported, in (b) one only. In (a) however occurs the one parable peculiar to this Gospel.

St Luke also omits the parables of the Passion (c), but comp. xii. 35-48, xix. 11-28, and illustrates (a) and (b) less copiously than St Matthew. His independent reports however are numerous. These may be classified generally as illustrating:—1. Prayer and earnestness in religious life (xi. 5-8, xvi. 1-13, xviii. 1-8). 2. Forgiveness and the love of God (vii. 41-43, xv.). 3. Reversal of human judgement, as to just and unjust (ch. x. 25-27, xii. 16-21, xviii. 9-14); rich and poor (ch. xvi. 19-31).

Parables peculiar to each Evangelist.

St Matthew. 1. The tares. 2. The hid treasure. 3. The pearl of great price. 4. The draw-net. 5. The unmerciful servant. 6. The labourers in the vineyard. 7. The two sons. 8. Marriage of the king's son. 9. The ten virgins. 10. The talents.

St Mark. The seed growing secretly.

St Luke. 1. The two debtors. 2. The good Samaritan. 3. The importuned friend. 4. The rich fool. 5. The barren fig-tree. 6. The lost piece of silver. 7. The prodigal son. 8. The unjust steward. 9. Dives and Lazarus. 10. The unjust judge. 11. The Pharisee and the Publican. 12. The ten pieces of money.

The parable of the ten pieces of money (mina). St Luke xix. 11-27, is an interesting example of historical groundwork in a parable. But probably in other parables similar historical allusions, now lost, must have added vividness to the narrative. Of these the royal marriage-feast, the Great Supper, the good Samaritan, are possible examples.

NOTE B. ON THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT AND OTHER DISCOURSES IN THE GOSPELS.

1. The Discourses in the Synoptic Gospels are difficult to classify, partly because of the variety of subjects treated in some of the great discourses, partly because portions of our Lord's teaching seem to have been repeated on different occasions. But the following divisions may assist the student.

a. The Church of the future. (7)

The new law in its individual aspect. The Sermon on the Mount. St Matthew v.—vii. 29, comp. St Luke v. 17—26. This discourse was delivered on 'the mount' or high land on the shores of the Sea of Galilee. The sermon 'on the plain' in St Luke's report is probably to be identified with the Sermon on the Mount. 'The plain' is the level spot on the mountain side. The omissions in St Luke are of passages bearing on the Jewish law and therefore less applicable to his Gentile readers.

The Sermon on the Mount may be regarded as a discourse on Righteousness;—a deepening and development of the righteousness of the law, and of the prophetic conception of righteousness, and a contrast to Pharisaic righteousness.

An analysis will exhibit the orderly arrangement of a set discourse which refutes the theory that the sermon is a collection by St Matthew of words of the Lord, spoken at different times.

(2) The Ministry of the Church and the training of the Apostles:—discourses bearing upon the founding, discipline and organization of the Christian Church.

(a) Preparation for the Gospel, teaching about St John the Baptist, St Matthew xi. 2—19; St Luke vii. 19—28.

(b) Instructions to the Twelve, St Matthew x. 1—42; St Mark vi. 7—11; St Luke ix. 1—5.

(c) Instructions to the Seventy, St Luke x. 1—16.

(d) The authority of Christ's Ministers, the power of the keys, St Matthew xvi. 13—28.

(e) Notes of the Church. (1) Self-sacrifice, St Matthew xvi. 21—28; St Mark viii. 27—ix. 1; St Luke ix. 22—27. (2) Humility and the spirit of forgiveness, St Matthew xviii. 1—35; St Mark ix. 33—37; St Luke ix. 40—48. (3) Faith, St Matthew xvi. 5—12; St Mark viii. 13—21. (4) Watchfulness, St Luke xii. 35—43; cp. St Matthew xxiv. 43—51.

b. The Jewish Church. (a) Its grievous sins:—Hypocrisy, St Matthew xv. 1—20; St Mark vii. 1—23; St Luke xi. 37—54. Spiritual pride and hardness of heart, St Matthew xxiii. 1—39, cp. St Luke xiii. 24, 35, also St Matthew xi. 20—24; St Luke x. 13, 14; St John xii. 40—42. Covetousness, St Luke xii. 15—21. Rejection of the Messiah, St Matthew xi. 20—24, xii. 41, 42; St Luke iv. 21—27, xi. 31, 32.

(b) Its controversy with Christ:—On demoniacal possession, St Matthew xii. 22—45; St Luke xi. 14—26. On the Sabbath, St Matthew xii. 1—21; St Mark ii. 23—iii. 6; St Luke vi. 1—11. On tribute to Caesar, St Matthew xxii. 15—22; St Mark xii. 13—17; St Luke xx. 20—26. On the future life, St Matthew xxii. 23—33; St Mark xii. 18—27; St Luke xx. 27—39. On eating with sinners, St Matthew ix. 10—13; St Mark ii. 15—17; St Luke v. 29—32. On fasting, St Matthew ix. 14—17; St Mark ii. 18—22; St Luke v. 33—39. On signs, St Matthew xii. 38—40, xvi. 1—4; St Mark viii. 11—13; St Luke xi. 29, 39.

c. The fall of Jerusalem, the end of the world and the last judgement, St Matthew xxiv. 1—xxv. 46; St Mark xiii.; St Luke xxi. 5—36. In this great prophetic discourse it is difficult to fix the reference of particular passages with certainty. Many events are common to those two great crises in human history. In St Matthew's report v. 5—22 of ch. xxiv. seem to relate more immediately to the fall of Jerusalem, from v. 23—41 to the end of the world.

11. St John. The discourses of Jesus recorded by St John differ in form and motive from the Synoptic reports. They are such as came to be better understood and more enlightening as the Church advanced in experience. Again they deal with subjects requiring higher intelligence and thoughtfulness for their comprehension than could be found among the unlettered crowds of Galilee.

Ch. iii. 1—15. The discourse with Nicodemus. Here Jesus preaches the Gospel to a thoughtful scholar, a Rabbi possessing authority as a member of the Sanhedrin. He first sweeps away the unspiritual Jewish conception of the kingdom; then sets forth the meaning and the necessity of the new birth. Only by water and the Spirit, only by baptism (as men would clearly see afterwards), could any one enter the kingdom. Baptism is an elementary, earthly truth. Beyond are deeper mysteries, the Incarnation and the Atonement.

Ch. iv. 5—42. The woman of Samaria. This discourse like the last contains a revelation of the spiritual character of the kingdom of God. It is of supreme and special interest, (1) as addressed to an alien, one outside the Covenant, (2) as containing a declaration of Messiahship, (3) as predicting the cessation of the temple-worship, (4) as the self-revelation of the Prophet, who (a) penetrates the secrets of the heart, and (b) predicts the future, (5) as teaching the spiritual nature of true worship.

Ch. vi. 25—66. The bread of life. As the discourse with Nicodemus taught the truth about Baptism, this discourse teaches the truth about the Eucharist. The three points which make this conversation momentous in the history of doctrine are: (1) the teaching on the mode of the Atonement; (2) the teaching on the Eucharist in relation to the atonement; (3) the statement of Election—the drawing of the Father—combined with human freedom.

The reference to the gift of Manna is characteristic of the way in which the incidents of the Old Testament are cited in this Gospel; see ch. iii. 13, 14.

At the Feast of Tabernacles Jesus again delivers discourses of which, it would seem, fragments only are preserved, chs. vii., viii. In these the prevailing notes are (a) Christ's revelation of Himself to those who are in spiritual sympathy with the Father and with Him; and impossibility of revelation to those who do not know the Father. (b) A contrast between the external and earthly knowledge of Jesus and the deeper, spiritual knowledge of Him. (c) Christ the living Water—the same figure as in ch. iv., but with changed circumstances and with special associations. (d) Christ the Light of the world. Again there is a twofold reference (1) to the ritual of the Feast, and (2) to the history of Israel, viii. 12. (e) The revelation of Himself in the Passion. (f) True freedom, and true sonship. A further teaching of the meaning of history.

Chapter x. 1—18. Christ the door of the fold. Christ the Good Shepherd.

This discourse springs from the circumstances of the preceding miracle. The immediate application is to the Pharisees, who are the robbers and the hirelings. Other inferences from the parable reach to the future of the Church. (1) The Oneness of the Church. One flock—One Shepherd—One Door. (2) The revelation of Christ to His own. The sheep know the voice of the Shepherd. (3) The expansion of the Church by the admission of the Gentiles as a result of the Atonement. (4)

Sheep and Pastor can enter by one way only, by Christ Himself.

Chs. xiii.—xvii. The Discourses at the Last Supper. xiii. (1) Lessons of humility (12—20); (2) of love (31—35). xiv. Comfort to the disciples in their Lord's departure. (1) The promise of heavenly rest. (2) The promise of the Comforter. (3) The promise of Christ's own presence. (4) The promise of peace.

Ch. xv. (1) The close and living union with Christ is illustrated by the similitude of the Vine and its branches. (2) Love of the disciples to one another, and to the Father and the Son.

Ch. xvi. (1) The future of the Church—tribulation and the final reward. Sorrow naturally followed by gladness—a law of the Christian life. (2) The Mission of Christ. (3) The Confession of the Apostles. (4) The Victory of Christ.

Ch. xvii. The intercessory prayer of the Christ—the great High Priest—for Himself, for His disciples, for His Church.

III. HISTORY OF THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

BY THE REV. J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., NORRISIAN PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY.

The History of the Apostolic Age begins with the Ascension of the Lord, and ends with the death of S. John. This space of about seventy years may be broadly marked out into three periods: the first fifteen years including the formation of Jewish-Christian Churches; the next twenty-five years the formation of Churches wholly or in part Gentile; and the last thirty years the close of the age and the consolidation of the Church. In each successive period a great Apostolic figure predominates—S. Peter, S. Paul, S. John: and a great city is the central point of his activity—Jerusalem, Antioch, Ephesus.

A. THE FORMATION OF JEWISH-CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

1. The Church within the walls of Jerusalem.

Pentecost was the birthday of the Church. From day to day since the Ascension the eleven Apostles, together with the mother of the Lord and His brethren and about a hundred disciples besides, had been waiting in prayerful expectation of some great event. The Apostolic circle had been completed by the election of Matthias to take the place of Judas. At length on the tenth day, as they were all assembled, a sudden sound was heard like a violent gust of wind, an appearance as of a fiery tongue was seen to rest on each disciple, and they all "began to speak with other tongues." A crowd of Jews and proselytes quickly gathered, many of whom had come from distant lands to keep the feast. They were amazed to find that although the speakers were Galileans their ecstatic praises sounded to every hearer in his native tongue. Some who were out of sympathy compared it to the unintelligible jargon of a drunken revel. Peter repelled this taunt, and addressed himself to the earnest questioners. This, he said, was Joel's prediction come true at last—the promised Spirit of God, which Jesus had received and thus poured out; that Jesus whom they had killed and God had raised again; who was their Messiah—and yet they had crucified Him. In answer to his appeal three thousand persons were added by baptism to the original band of disciples.

Those who were thus bound together in a new brotherhood in no way severed themselves from the national unity. But while the Temple and its regular services remained as before the sphere of their public devotions, their distinctive position as believers was marked in a fourfold manner. 'They persevered,' we are told, 'in the teaching of the Apostles,' which would explain to them more and more their new privileges and duties; 'and in the fellowship,' that is to say, the new bond of membership, which expressed itself, for example, in a common meal; 'in the breaking of the bread,' in accordance with the command of the Lord Himself; 'and in the prayers,' those specially Christian devotions with which they would supplement their Temple worship, as they met in little groups in private houses. It would seem as though their new enthusiasm, at first at any rate, claimed all their time and energies for praise and prayer and instruction in the faith: but yet there was no lack of daily bread even for the poorest among them: for the wealthier gladly supplied their needs, even selling their possessions for this purpose and counting nothing as their own. A strange joy pervaded the whole brotherhood, and its numbers continually increased. There was no thought of separation from the sacred commonwealth of Israel, and the new 'sect,' as it was termed, enjoyed universal esteem.

The first incident of note occurred as Peter and John were ascending to the Temple Court for prayer at three o'clock, the hour of the evening sacrifice. At the Beautiful Gate they healed a lame man, who thereupon entered with them to return thanks to God. When a crowd gathered in Solomon's portico, Peter explained to them that the Name of Jesus had wrought the cure: Jesus, whom they had killed, but God had raised from the dead; Jesus, who would return as their Messiah, as Moses and the prophets had foretold. They were interrupted by the Sadducean Temple authorities, who were troubled at this persistent assertion of the resurrection of the dead. Peter and John were imprisoned until the next day, when they were examined before the Sanhedrin as to the miracle. Peter again ascribed it to the Name of Jesus, "whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead." They were finally dismissed with a warning never to speak or teach again in that Name. On their return a prayer for boldness of utterance was at once answered by a fresh manifestation of the Holy Spirit.

This first opposition came not from the Pharisees, who formed the national party, and could have little to complain of in these devout and loyal Jews; but from the chief priests and Sadducees, the materialistic aristocrats who hated enthusiasm and feared the democracy. Indeed for five or six years we have no hint of any breach with religious Judaism. The new movement would naturally be regarded as a revival of the best Jewish life, though what its ultimate direction might be was as yet far from clear. The cautious attitude of the Pharisees is well marked by the famous utterance of their greatest Rabbi on the next occasion of Sadducaic interference. A fresh series of miracles and the growing popularity of the Apostles had induced the high priest and his fellow-Sadducees to arrest them a second time. The full Sanhedrin, which was assembled to try them, learned to their dismay that their prisoners were at liberty and were preaching in the Temple Courts. They were sent for and brought in, and Peter once more repeated his assertion of the resurrection of Jesus whom they had put to death. Upon this Gamaliel requested that the Apostles should be withdrawn, and then warned the infuriated council that as other enthusiastic movements had failed so too would this fail: unless indeed it were of God; and then—what of those who opposed it? This speech saved the lives of the Apostles, who were scourged and set at liberty. After this both in the Temple Courts and in private houses they continued to teach unmolested for several years, until a wholly new crisis arose.

For the present dangers far more serious than any outward opposition were threatening from within, as the result of growing numbers and continued popularity. It was the custom for wealthy believers to sell their estates and lay the proceeds at the feet of the Apostles. Although there was no formal community of property, large offerings were thus made to a common fund, from which could be supplied the daily tables and other common needs. Barnabas was a notable instance of such generosity. Ananias and Sapphira aimed at a like credit without an equal sacrifice; and their sudden deaths marked the peril of insincerity to a corporate life.

This common fund occasioned another difficulty, the cause of which, however, lay in a distinction which had grown up since the Dispersion between 'Hebrew' and 'Grecian' Jews. The Jews of Palestine had retained a dialect of Hebrew as the language of common life, whereas those who lived in other countries had for the most part forgotten Hebrew and spoke Greek instead. In Jerusalem these Hellenists or 'Grecian' Jews were regarded somewhat as outsiders by the 'Hebrews.' It was inevitable that in the close contact of the new brotherhood this distinction should be a source of trouble. So at length it proved to be in connexion with the common tables. Complaint was made by the 'Grecians' that their widows received less attention than the 'Hebrew' widows in this daily ministration. The harmony which had hitherto prevailed was thus endangered; and the danger was one only too likely to recur. The Apostles refused indeed to quit their work of instruction to attend to the tables in person; but they invited the whole body of believers to select seven fit persons, whom they promised on their part to appoint over this business. It is remarkable that common consent seems to have chosen all these officers from the aggrieved section: at any rate they all bear Greek names, and one was a proselyte.

After this kindly settlement the number of the brethren continued to increase, though no effort seems to have been made to extend it beyond Jerusalem; and their loyalty to the Jewish worship may be gathered from the statement that 'a great multitude of the priests were obedient to the faith.' Hitherto uninterrupted success had attended the labours of the Apostles. Except that they had been twice warned and once scourged, no serious opposition had been offered to them. Their religious conduct as pious Jews was irreproachable: their popularity was at its height. Now in a moment all was to be changed. A storm of persecution broke from a fresh quarter: the believers were scattered to the winds; only the Apostles were left.

This sudden transition was brought about by the work and death of Stephen. One of the Seven, and almost certainly a Hellenist, Stephen saw further into the destiny of the new movement than any other man of his time. He felt that it could not remain shut up inside the walls of Jerusalem, or even confined within the limits of Judaism. What he said to arouse suspicion we are not told, but we may infer something from the false charges brought against him of having spoken against the Holy Place and against Moses. It is unlikely that he used the expressions attributed to him; but his keensighted opponents were not wrong in their estimate of the general tendency of his teaching. At length his fellow-Hellenists, failing to refute his arguments, roused the populace by denouncing his doctrines as subversive of Judaism. This was the first time that a believer in Jesus had been charged with disloyalty to the national faith. Stephen when examined by the Sanhedrin defended his position from the early history of the nation; on the one hand proving that God's revelation of Himself had never been confined to one Holy Place, and on the other hand drawing a parallel between the rejection of Moses by their fathers and their own rejection of Christ. The trial was broken off by a tumultuous rush upon the speaker, who was hurried out of the city and stoned. In the persecution which followed the whole Church was involved, and all except the Apostles fled from Jerusalem. The chief persecutor was a young Pharisee, named Saul, a pupil of Gamaliel. This fact marks the new stage on which the Church had now entered. For a breach had been made with religious Judaism—with the Pharisees and the people, and not merely with the Sadducaic priestly authorities.

2. The Church dispersed throughout Palestine.

The larger thoughts of Stephen were the prelude to the first widening of the Church. His work was carried on by the dispersion which followed his death. The first step was the admission of Samaritans, who were regarded by the Jews as half heathen, although they worshipped the God of Israel and expected the coming of Messiah. Philip, another of the Seven, preached in Samaria, and the Apostles hearing of this in Jerusalem sent out Peter and John, who not only sanctioned his work, but themselves also evangelized many Samaritan villages. Philip was now guided to take a further step in baptizing an Ethiopian eunuch, a Gentile who had journeyed to Jerusalem to worship the God of Israel: and it is probable that he pursued the same course when he visited the Greek populations of the coast cities between Ashdod and Caesarea.

But Stephen's true successor was not Philip, but Saul, who meanwhile was carrying persecution as far as Damascus. Outside this city he had a vision of the Lord Himself, which changed the whole current of his life. From the blindness which followed it he was released by a believer named Ananias: and at once he proclaimed in the synagogues his belief in Jesus as the Son of God. After a while he went away into Arabia, but returned again to Damascus (Gal. i. 17). Here he continued preaching with great success, until a plot was formed against his life, and his disciples secretly sent him away. He now went up to Jerusalem, for the first time since his conversion three years before, and he was introduced by Barnabas to Peter and James. He disputed with the Hellenists, as Stephen had done, and they endeavoured to kill him. The brethren then sent him away to Caesarea, and thence he went to Tarsus, his own home. The Church throughout Palestine now enjoyed peace again, and its numbers increased.

About this time Peter himself was miraculously guided to take a formal step towards wider comprehension. Visiting the towns of the Sharon, he had healed the sick at Lydda, and raised the dead at Joppa. Here he was prepared by a thrice-repeated vision to 'call no man common or unclean.' The vision was scarcely ended when he was summoned to go to Caesarea to visit a Roman centurion, named Cornelius, who though a Gentile worshipped the God of Israel, and had himself seen a vision directing him to send for Peter. To him and to his Gentile friends Peter boldly declared that Jesus Christ was Lord of all men, and would save all who believed on Him. As he spoke the Holy Spirit descended on all the hearers, and the admission of the Gentiles was signalized by a repetition of the scene of Pentecost. Peter hereupon felt that baptism into the Christian brotherhood could no longer be denied to them, and he even ventured to sit down to meat with them. This was the strongest measure which had yet been taken, and Peter was called upon at Jerusalem to justify his action in eating with uncircumcised men. His full narration of all the facts silenced opposition for the time.

Meantime a movement northward of the dispersed believers had carried the Gospel as far as Antioch, the third city in the world and the meeting-point of East and West. News of this too reached Jerusalem, and Barnabas was sent to visit the new Church. After a while he went on to Tarsus to find Saul, whom he brought back with him to Antioch. Here they remained for a year: then Agabus arrived with other prophets from Jerusalem and predicted a universal famine. A collection was made on behalf of the brethren in Judaea, and was sent to the elders by the hand of Barnabas and Saul. In Jerusalem the Church at this time was being oppressed by Herod Agrippa. He killed James the son of Zebedee, and imprisoned Peter, who however was miraculously released. Shortly afterwards Herod died of a painful disease at Caesarea, A.D. 44.

This date closes the First Period of the Apostolic History, during which Jerusalem is the central Church, and S. Peter is the prominent Apostle. We now pass on to Antioch and S. Paul.

B. THE FORMATION OF CHURCHES WHOLLY OR IN PART GENTILE.

1. S. Paul's First Missionary Journey.

The Church of Antioch after solemn prayer and fasting selected Barnabas and Saul from among its prophets and teachers, to send them forth as its Apostles on a special mission. They took with them John whose surname was Mark, and sailed to Cyprus, where they preached in the synagogues. At Paphos the Roman proconsul Sergius Paulus asked for instruction. A Jewish magus named Elymas sought to divert him from his object, but was struck blind by Saul, who from this point onwards is spoken of as Paul. The Apostles now sailed for Perga in Pamphylia, where John left them, preferring to return to Jerusalem. They went up the country to the Pisidian Antioch, and on the sabbath-day Paul addressed by invitation those who attended the synagogue service. On the next sabbath all the city came to hear. When the Jews became jealous and opposed his teaching, Paul solemnly declared that since they refused the Gospel he should now turn from them to the Gentiles. To these they preached with success, until the opposition of the Jews forced them to retire eastward to Iconium. Here they spoke again in the synagogue, and both Jews and Gentiles believed; but the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles endeavoured to stone them. Moving still eastward to Lystra Paul healed a lame man, and the heathen population imagining that Jupiter and Mercury, in accordance with a local legend, had come down to visit them, prepared to offer sacrifices to them. When Paul discovered their meaning, he proclaimed to them the true God, but the disaffected Jews who had followed in his track induced the people to stone him. He was left for dead, but recovered and went on the next day to Derbe. After this they returned along the same route to Perga, appointing elders in each city, and sailed back by sea to Antioch. Here they reported their labours, and especially the conversion of the Gentiles.

2. The Controversy at Antioch and the Conference in Jerusalem.

At Antioch there were many Gentile believers; and a necessity seems to have arisen for some new name by which to describe a sect which could comprise both Jews and Gentiles. It was doubtless in scorn that they were termed Christians or 'Messiah-men' by their heathen opponents, though in time they adopted the title themselves. Soon after Paul's return there arrived from Jerusalem certain zealous Jewish Christians who insisted on the submission of the Gentiles to the Mosaic law of circumcision. After much strife and discussion Paul and Barnabas and certain of the other party were appointed to go up to the Apostles and elders in Jerusalem about the matter. Paul first held a private consultation with Peter and John and James the Lord's brother; and they fully approved his position and recognised him as a fellow-Apostle, whose mission was especially to Gentiles. A public conference followed, at the close of which James, who appears to have held a position of prominence, advised that on the one hand it should be made quite clear that Mosaic rites were not obligatory in the case of Gentile believers; but that on the other hand they should be urged to abstain from certain things which would make it impossible for loyal Jews to hold any intercourse with them. These things were meats offered to idols, blood, things strangled, and fornication. This was agreed to, and embodied in a formal letter from the whole Church in Jerusalem. Bearing this letter, and accompanied by two prophets, Judas and Silas, who were charged with a like message, they returned to Antioch, where the decision was welcomed with great joy. Peter followed shortly afterwards, and at first held free intercourse with the Gentile believers, as he had done once before with Cornelius at Caesarea. But when certain Jewish Christians arrived with some commission from James he withdrew from this intercourse through fear of the party of the Circumcision. The rest of the Jews, including even Barnabas, followed his example. Paul saw that this action would practically force the Gentiles to submit to circumcision if they wished to secure a position of real equality with the Jewish believers. It was thus contrary to Peter's expressed conviction as well as to the spirit of the letter from Jerusalem. He therefore openly rebuked Peter for what he termed his hypocrisy, and succeeded in vindicating the cause of Christian liberty (Gal. ii.).

3. S. Paul's Second Missionary Journey.

When this great controversy was now settled for the Church of Antioch, Paul proposed to Barnabas that they should revisit the scenes of their former labours. But when Barnabas insisted on taking Mark a second time with them, Paul could not consent; and while the two former set sail for Cyprus, he chose Silas as his companion and went overland to Derbe and Lystra. There he found Timothy, a young convert, whom he desired to take with him in his work. His mother was a Jewess, and on that ground, although his father was a Gentile, Paul circumcised him to avoid giving needless offence to the Jews in those parts. He then journeyed to the north-west, into the Phrygian and Galatian country. There he was delayed by an attack of sickness (Gal. iv. 13), which resulted in the foundation of a Church among these Celtic settlers. At length, being prevented by divine monitions from journeying to the south-west, he reached the coast at Alexandria Troas. A vision which he had in this place led him to cross the sea to Europe. Landing at Neapolis in Macedonia he went up the country to Philippi. This was a Roman colony, and there was no synagogue. Still Paul first sought for Jews, as his custom was, and found their place of prayer by the river-side. An Asiatic purple-seller, Lydia by name, was his first convert. Another was the Roman gaoler of the prison into which he and Silas were thrown, when a tumult was raised against them, as being troublesome Jews. After Paul had claimed release as a Roman citizen, they journeyed to the south-west, and reached Thessalonica, where there were many Jews. On three sabbath days Paul preached in the synagogue: but most of his converts were Gentiles, and the Jews stirred up the city against them on the charge of disloyalty to the emperor. They escaped by night to Beroea, where they preached with success in the synagogue until the arrival of Jews from Thessalonica. Then Paul was sent away to the coast and sailed for Athens, leaving Silas and Timothy to follow him. He spoke to the Athenian philosophers on the Areopagus, but with little success, and soon went on to the busy trading centre of Corinth. Here he met with Aquila, a Pontic Jew, who had lately come from Italy with his wife Priscilla. With him he worked for some time as a tent-maker, and on each sabbath spoke in the synagogue. Meanwhile he felt great anxiety for the Church at Thessalonica, to whom he had sent Timothy, as he could not visit them himself. When Timothy and Silas rejoined him at Corinth, he wrote first one letter and then another in their joint names to the Thessalonian Church. In Corinth, after a formal breach with the Jews, Paul left the synagogue and taught in the adjoining house of a Gentile named Titius Justus. Encouraged by a vision he continued his work thus for eighteen months, until he was attacked by the Jews and dragged before the proconsul Gallio the brother of the philosopher Seneca. Gallio dismissed the case with contempt, and shortly afterwards Paul set sail for Syria. As far as Ephesus he was accompanied by Aquila and Priscilla. In that city he spoke to the Jews in the synagogue, and when they urged him to remain longer he promised to return, and so sailed on to Caesarea. He then went up to Jerusalem, as it would seem, in connexion with a vow, and finally returned to Antioch. In this journey, which occupied about three years, he had founded four important Churches, those of Galatia, Philippi, Thessalonica and Corinth. In the meantime Felix had become procurator of Judaea, and Nero had succeeded Claudius as the Roman emperor (A.D. 54).

4. S. Paul's Third Missionary Journey.

Once more Paul started from Antioch, of which we now hear for the last time in the Apostolic age. He first revisited the Galatian Church, and then came down to Ephesus. Since his former passing visit, Apollos, a learned Alexandrian Jew, a follower of John the Baptist, had come to that city full of zeal for his imperfect form of Christianity. Here he had met with Aquila and Priscilla, who gave him further instruction. He had then crossed over to Corinth before Paul reached Ephesus. When Paul arrived he found twelve more disciples of the Baptist in Ephesus. These he instructed and baptized, and they received the Holy Spirit by the laying on of his hands. For three months Paul taught in the synagogue, but he was at length compelled to assemble the believers separately in the lecture-room of Tyrannus. Thus he continued for two years, and so central was his position that 'all who dwelt in Asia,' i.e. the Roman province on the western sea-board of Asia Minor, 'heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks.' His preaching was confirmed by special miracles, and many who had practised magic came and openly burned their books. Apollos now returned from Corinth, where party strife had been using his name in opposition to Paul. A painful case of immorality among the Corinthian believers gave an additional reason for the Apostle's interference. He first sent away Timothy to go to Corinth; but immediately afterwards on receiving a letter from the Corinthians themselves he wrote them his first Epistle. Apollos was unwilling to visit them at this time, and Titus went over to report on its effect. This was in the spring of A.D. 57. After a tumult had arisen in connexion with the worship of the Ephesian Artemis, Paul himself started for Macedonia. He first went to Troas, hoping to meet Titus there on his way back from Corinth; but not finding him he crossed over in anxious impatience to Macedonia. Here at length Titus met him with tidings of the penitence of the Corinthian Church. He at once wrote a second Epistle, expressing his joy, and asserting his Apostolic authority against the attacks of the Judaizing party. For the Judaizers, foiled at Jerusalem and foiled at Antioch, had been at work again in the newly-founded Churches, and were endeavouring to effect their purpose by a personal attack on Paul. Not only at Corinth was this the case, but also in Galatia, where the variable temper of the Celtic converts had been easily worked upon; and their sudden defection called forth just at this time, in the autumn of A.D. 57, Paul's great controversial Epistle to the Galatians. After this Paul came south into Greece, where he remained three months. From Corinth he wrote his Epistle to the Romans, to whom he expressed his intention of shortly visiting their Church on his way into Spain. His present purpose however was to go up to Jerusalem to convey the thank-offerings of the Gentile Christians, in the form of collections made in the various Churches for the poorer Jewish believers in Jerusalem; a matter on which he laid the greatest stress as a substantial pledge of unity between the Jewish and Gentile Churches. He had intended to sail direct from Corinth to Syria, but learning that the Jews were plotting to kill him he returned by way of Macedonia. Timothy and six other companions of the Apostle went on before to Troas. Luke, who on the Second Missionary Journey had come with him from Troas to Philippi, and perhaps had remained in that city ever since, now returned with him after the Passover, and hereafter accompanied him both to Jerusalem and also to Rome. A week was spent at Troas, where Paul restored Eutychus to life. Then while his companions rounded the promontory Paul preferred to walk across it, and joined the ship again at Assos. After this they coasted along to Miletus, purposely avoiding Ephesus, as Paul was anxious to be in Jerusalem at Pentecost. From Miletus however Paul summoned the Ephesian elders, and, conscious of the dangers which he was about to meet, gave them a solemn farewell charge. After a fair passage they landed at Tyre, and stayed a week with the Church there. They then sailed to Ptolemais, and went overland to Caesarea, where they abode with Philip the Evangelist, and were forewarned by Agabus of Paul's imprisonment. Unmoved by the entreaties of the brethren, Paul persisted in going up to Jerusalem, where he arrived at Pentecost A.D. 58. During the four years of this Third Journey he had founded the Ephesian Church, and had written the two Epistles to the Corinthians, and those to the Galatians and the Romans. The whole period is characterized by the personal attack of the Judaizing teachers, and his consequent vindication of his position as an Apostle.

5. S. Paul a Prisoner. A.D. 58-63.

On his arrival at Jerusalem he complied with the request of James and the elders that he should openly shew his loyalty to the Law by a ceremonial purification in the Temple in company with four other Jewish Christians who had a vow upon them. The object of this was to give a practical contradiction to the false rumour that Paul was teaching Jewish believers to exercise the same liberty from Mosaic ordinances which he so strenuously claimed for the Gentiles. When the seven days of purification were nearly completed, the Asiatic Jews spread a report that Paul had brought Gentiles beyond the enclosure which parted the outer court from the Court of Israel. In the tumult which ensued he would have been killed, had not the Roman officer Lysias, who commanded the troops in the Castle Antonia, interfered and arrested him. He was allowed to address the people in Hebrew from the castle steps, until their disorder obliged Lysias to remove him inside. When the Sanhedrin met next day by the order of Lysias, Paul's claim to be a Pharisee suddenly split it into two discordant sections, and he was taken back again to the castle. A plot for his assassination was discovered, and he was therefore sent away by night to Caesarea, the seat of the procurator Felix. The high priest and others came down and accused him; but judgement was deferred, and Paul was kept in prison for two years. From time to time Felix sent for him in the hope of receiving a bribe for his acquittal; but he finally left him bound when he was recalled by Nero in A.D. 60, in consequence of complaints laid against him by the Jews of Caesarea. The new procurator, Porcius Festus, examined Paul, and proposed to try him at Jerusalem. Hereupon Paul appealed as a Roman citizen to be heard by the emperor himself. When Agrippa II. came to pay Festus a congratulatory visit Paul was heard in the presence of the procurator and the king; and they both agreed that he might have been set at liberty had he not appealed to the emperor. Preparations were now made to send him and certain other prisoners to Rome. Luke and Aristarchus sailed with him. They touched at Sidon, and then passing between Cyprus and the mainland came to Myra in Lycia. Thence in another ship they sailed to Crete, where Paul advised them to winter, as the season made sailing dangerous. They went on, however, and were shipwrecked in a great storm on the island of Melita. Three months later they sailed to Syracuse in another ship, and thence to Rhegium and Puteoli; and then went overland to Rome, where Paul at once called to him the leading Jews. They had received no letters respecting him, but were desirous of hearing his own account of 'a sect' which was 'everywhere spoken against.' He reasoned with them at great length, and dismissed them with a solemn warning and a declaration of his mission to the Gentiles. For two years he was allowed to reside in his own hired lodging, in the charge of a soldier but with full liberty to instruct all who came to him. From Rome he wrote his Epistles to the Philippians and the Colossians, as well as a circular letter to the Asiatic Churches addressed in the first instance to the Ephesians. The bearer of the two latter was Onesimus, the runaway slave of Philemon, whom Paul had found in Rome, and now sent back to his master with a beautiful little letter requesting his forgiveness. The five years of his imprisonment were important for several reasons. His sudden removal from the scene of conflict and the sufferings he endured must have produced a reaction in his favour where his influence had been assailed. Greater weight would now attach to the letters he had already written, as well as to those which issued from his confinement. The zeal of his opponents would also cool down, and the Churches would have a breathing space for quiet development.

6. S. Paul's Release, Second Imprisonment and Death. A.D. 63-67.

In A.D. 64 occurred the great fire at Rome, which was followed by the persecution of the Christians. It is probable that Paul had been released and had left the city just before this event. He journeyed eastward again and revisited Corinth, Ephesus, and Miletus, and founded a Church in Crete. It is even possible that he now accomplished his long-intended journey to Spain. While still at liberty he wrote his first Epistle to Timothy, whom he had left in charge at Ephesus during what he supposed would be a temporary absence, and also his Epistle to Titus, whom he had placed in a similar position in Crete, and whom he directed to meet him at Nicopolis, where he expected to pass the winter. Of his second arrest we know nothing; but from his prison in Rome he sent another Epistle to Timothy, written in the immediate expectation of death, in which he charged him to come to him without delay. Tradition assigns his execution and that of Peter to the same year, A.D. 67 (?). The history of this last section is gathered from the Pastoral Epistles. The Book of the Acts closes with the year 63 A.D. Of the Missionary work of the Twelve we have no trustworthy records. Tradition assigns to them various countries as their spheres of labour. There is no doubt that they did not confine themselves to Jerusalem, and they were expressly directed by their original commission to preach the Gospel to all the nations. Mark is briefly noticed again as an approved colleague both of Paul (2 Tim. iv. 11), and of Peter (1 Pet. v. 13). It is probable that under the direction of the latter he wrote a record of the Gospel history.

C. THE CLOSE OF THE AGE AND THE CONSOLIDATION OF THE CHURCH.

1. The Destruction of Jerusalem. A.D. 70.

A great chasm was made in the history of Christianity as well as of Judaism by the Fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The destruction of the Temple involved the final cessation of all sacrifices; and Judaism became henceforward a creed without a ritual, and without a local sanctuary. The tens of thousands of Christian Jews, who looked for the return of Jesus as the nation's Messiah, would feel the shock scarcely less than the rest. Many of them abandoned their city and retired across the Jordan to Pella, thus escaping the horrors of the siege: but multitudes must still have shared the common fate. The only member of the Apostolic band whom we know to have survived the awful crisis was the Apostle John. Not long before it, as an exile on the island of Patmos, he had received visions of impending calamity and final triumph, which he recorded in his Apocalypse and sent to the Asiatic Churches, among whom he afterwards made his home. About the same time the Epistle to the Hebrews, the work of an unknown author, helped to prepare the Palestinian Christians for the abolition of the whole Jewish ritual to which they had hitherto clung.

2. S. John at Ephesus, circa A.D. 70–100.

According to a trustworthy tradition John passed his later years in Ephesus, the great metropolis of Asia Minor. Here he must have written his Gospel and Epistles, which certainly belong to this period. The absence of any note of controversy with Judaizing teachers shews how completely this great struggle was now at an end. After the Fall of Jerusalem the Jewish element became gradually blended with the rest of the Christian Church, and the Apostle's constant exhortation to love seems to have no reference to any such dogmatic differences. He himself survived almost to the close of the century, and thus formed a living link to connect the Apostolic with the Post-Apostolic Age.

LISTS OF HIGH PRIESTS.

Josephus sets down their number as 83, of whom 13 held office between the days of Moses and Solomon, 18 during the existence of Solomon's Temple, and 52 served in the second Temple. MEMBERS OF THE FAMILY OF HEROD CONNECTED WITH
NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY.APPENDIX ON THE JEWISH PEOPLE, THE ROMAN EMPIRE AND THE GREEK WORLD IN THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

BY THE REV. H. M. GWATKIN, M.A., DIXIE PROFESSOR OF ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

In the apostolic age the Roman Empire was the one great power of the world. It included everything between the Euphrates, the Danube, the Rhine, the Atlantic and the northern edge of the African desert. The Mediterranean was a Roman lake. Athens and Alexandria, Marseille and Carthage, Jerusalem and Cordova, lay far inside this vast expanse of country. It was no vain boast of Roman pride, that the Empire was the world. "There went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed." The wild tribes of Germany were no more rivals to the Empire than the Afghans are to England. Even Parthia was no match for Rome, though the King of Kings could muster horsemen from the Euphrates to the Indus. She might snatch a victory when the Roman army of Syria was demoralized with luxury; but a little help from the legions of the Danube was always enough to check her. Still further eastward, belonging almost to another world, was the great and conquering power of China. But Rome and China never came in contact, though for a moment (A.D. 94) they stood face to face across the Caspian.

Rome was not built in a day, nor her Empire in a generation. In remote ages the stern discipline and skilful policy of the old republic laid a solid foundation for her power. The Etruscan and the Latin, the Samnite and the Gaul went down before her; and when the last great enemy was overcome in Hannibal (B.C. 202), the world was at her feet. City by city, province by province, kingdom by kingdom she gathered in her spoil. Her allies sank into clients, and her clients into subjects. Thus Israel was made an ally of Rome by Judas Maccabeus (B.C. 162), and became a client state when Pompeius took Jerusalem (B.C. 63). Rome gave her Herod for a king (B.C. 37), and subjected Judæa to a Roman governor at the exile of Archelaus (A.D. 6). And now, though free cities like Athens might survive, though client princes like the Herods might be suffered to remain, Roman influence was everywhere supreme. The world had settled down to its subjection, and the Empire already seemed an ordinance of nature. The Roman peace replaced the wars of nations, and revolt from Rome was something unimagined in the Gentile world. Israel was the only rebel (A.D. 66-135). No ambition, no resentment of oppression, nothing but the glowing Messianic hope of Israel had power to overcome the spell of the everlasting Empire.

To the emperor's constitutional power there were hardly any limits beyond the understanding that he was to govern by law, and that he was not to be called a king in Rome or to wear the diadem of an eastern sultan. His ensigns were the sword of a Roman general (Rom. xiii. 4), the lictors of a Roman consul. Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14) maintained the forms of the republic, and affected to live as a simple senator among his equals. But he was none the less their master. He sat between the consuls in the senate, and had the right to give his opinion first. He recommended candidates to the people and practically appointed all officials. He was commander of the army and head of the state religion. He could obtain from the senate what laws he pleased, or (in most cases) issue orders of his own. Above all he held the powers of a tribune, which not only made his person sacred, but enabled him to forbid any official act at his discretion. The forms of monarchy soon gathered round its substance. Tiberius (A.D. 14—37) reduced the popular elections to a form, and established a camp of praetorian guards (Phil. i. 13) just outside the city. Caesar's household (Phil. iv. 22) was counted by thousands of all ranks, scattered through the Empire. His tribunician veto was exercised in a regular court, and every Roman citizen might appeal unto Caesar (Acts xxv. 10, 12). His tribunician sacredness was lost in a halo of divinity, for the emperor was a god on earth, and his worship the most real part of the state religion. It was organized all over the Empire, and the oath by Caesar's Genius was the test of true allegiance. Altars were built to Augustus in his lifetime, and most of his successors till past the time of Constantine were formally enrolled among the gods at death.

Augustus and the senate professed to divide between them the care of the Empire. Provinces like Syria, which needed a military force, were governed by Caesar's legates; while quiet countries like Cyprus and Achaia, where no legions were stationed, were left to the administration of proconsuls. All however took their instructions from the emperor, and were equally controlled by him. Caesar had also procurators or financial agents in all the provinces, and in some unsettled districts like Judaea these procurators had the full power of legates, subject to some check from the next governor of a province—in this case Syria. These powers included civil and military jurisdiction. Pilate for example had "power to crucify, and power to release," and the Jews could not carry out a capital sentence (John xviii. 31) without his permission. Unlike proconsuls and legates, who were always senators, the procurators were men of lower rank. Felix was the brother of Pallas, the freedman and favourite of Claudius. "Husband of three queens," he "used the power of a king in the spirit of a slave."

The Empire was defended by five and twenty legions, each consisting of nearly 7000 men (cavalry included), with an equal number of auxiliaries. The Praetorian Guards were 10,000, and there were some unattached cohorts. Thus the regular army of the Empire was about 350,000 men—a small force for a population of perhaps eighty or ninety millions. The legion was divided into ten cohorts, each under its military tribune, and in most cases about 500 strong. One such cohort was stationed in Jerusalem at the Tower of Antonia, from which a flight of steps commanded the temple area. From these steps the tribune Claudius Lysias allowed St Paul to address the multitude (Acts xxi. 40) after his arrest. The whole cohort was employed to seize our Lord (John xviii. 3, 12), in order to make resistance hopeless. Under each tribune were six centurions, so that each centurion had under him nearly 100 soldiers. All the centurions mentioned in the New Testament are favourable specimens of Roman military virtue. It will be enough to name Cornelius, Julius and the nameless officer who watched by the cross. Yet another (Luke vii. 9) won from the Lord a warm approval by his soldierly conception of Him as the emperor of the legions of heaven.

The colonies of Rome did nearly as much as the legions to secure her dominion. They were not countries like modern colonies, but cities. Many of them were founded for military purposes, to command an important road or overawe a disaffected population. Among these were Carthage, founded by Caius Gracchus (B.C. 122), Corinth by Julius Caesar (B.C. 46), Philippi by Augustus, Caesarea by Vespasian. These four were old cities, though Corinth and Carthage had lain in ruins since their destruction by Mummius and Scipio (B.C. 146), and their "foundation" means no more than the despatch of a number of Roman veterans with a new constitution. The colonies were miniatures of Rome herself. They had their praetors (duoviri juri dicundo) like the Roman consuls, and were attended like them by lictors. Municipal affairs were managed by these praetors and the curiales, who answered to the Roman senators. The two praetors at Philippi (Acts xvi.) contrast strongly with the seven politarchs (Acts xvii. 6) of the Greek city of Thessalonica.

As the Empire was built on the ruins of many nations, there was a great variety of peoples within its limits. Broadly speaking, the eastern half was Greek, the western Latin. Italy and Carthage lie on one side of the dividing line, Greece and Cyrene on the other. But this is only a rough statement. In the first place, Greek was known to every educated person in the Empire, and far eastward too towards Babylon, whereas Latin outside its proper region was only the language of officials and soldiers. Moreover, Greek was spread over some parts even of the West. Sicily and southern Italy were full of Greek settlements, and the great colony of Massilia (Marseille) had largely Hellenized the valley of the Rhone. Greek was indeed the language of commerce everywhere. In the third place, Greek was more fully dominant in the East than Latin in the West. No other language was spoken in Greece itself and Macedonia, on the islands and round the coast of Asia inside Taurus. It was only among the Lycæonian mountains (Acts xiv. 11) that St Paul's Greek was not enough. A Gaulish language was spoken in Galatia, but even the Galatian gave his sons Greek names. They did not always speak Greek, any more than Williams the Welshman always speaks English; but the Greek language was fast supplanting the Gaulish. It had tougher rivals in Egypt and Syria. Alexandria indeed was mostly Greek, but the common people of Egypt held to their Coptic. Syriac also shewed few signs of disappearance. In Palestine the Greek element was mostly along the coast and in the Decapolis, though it was also strong in Galilee. Now Latin in the West had scarcely yet supplanted the rustic languages. Phœnician still flourished in the streets of Carthage; and though Latin culture had made a good beginning in Gaul and Spain, there was still much work to be done. Britain was untouched. Its conquest was not seriously attempted till the time of Claudius (A.D. 43), and it was never fully Latinized.

The Greeks were the intellectual masters of the Empire, and divided much of its trade with the Jews. Greece itself indeed was in a deplorable state. Its population had been declining for the last five centuries, and was now a very thin one. Archidamus (B.C. 431) led nearly 100,000 Peloponnesians into Attica, but all Greece (B.C. 280) could muster only 20,000 men to hold Thermopylæ against the Gauls, and in the second century A.D. Plutarch doubts whether even 3000 heavy-armed citizen soldiers could be assembled. There were no cities of any size, but the Roman colonies of Corinth and Nicopolis. Sparta and Thebes were insignificant, and even Athens was only a venerable shadow of her former self. In some respects indeed she was little changed. She still had her Acropolis as full of statues as it could hold (Acts xvii. 16). Her gods were more in number than her men. Pallas Athene still watched lance in hand over her beloved city, and her colossal figure was a landmark for miles out at sea. The venerable court of Areopagus still met on Mars' Hill to watch over the religion of the citizens, and the mysteries of Eleusis were the most respected in the Empire. The people seemed to govern Athens as of old, for she was still in name a free city. She had usually joined the losing side in war, and suffered heavily in the siege by Sulla (B.C. 88), when the groves of the Academy were cut down. Yet Rome always treated her with studious respect, and on a formal footing of alliance and equality. But the old spirit of freedom was utterly extinct. The Athenians had sunk into a people of gossips and flatterers, whose chief political activity was in erecting statues to their benefactors. Among these they counted the Jewish high priest Hyrcanus and the princess Berenice (Acts xxv. 13).

Philosophy however still flourished at Athens. If she was no longer the one great light of the Greek world, she was quite equal to Rhodes or Tarsus, and for the present superior to Alexandria. The Lyceum and the Academy still recalled the memory of Aristotle and Plato. But Stoics and Epicureans were now the chief schools. They both sprang up in the iron age of Alexander's successors, and bear the mark of its despair. They contrast strongly with earlier Greek thought in their abandonment of the old national pride and in the stress they lay on morality. They contrast almost as strongly with each other in that Stoicism owes its stern despairing moralism to Eastern influence, whereas Epicureanism continues under altered circumstances the Greek search for pleasure. To the Gospel they were equally opposed. They resented its lofty claim to be the revelation of the truth which they were wrangling over. But their criticism of its doctrines came from different points of view. The ideas, for example, of a God and Father in heaven and of the personal action of a Son of God among men were equally offensive to the Stoic with his pantheistic fatalism, and to the Epicurean who saw no need for gods at all, or in any case for gods who meddle with the world. The humility and tenderness of Christianity was equally opposed to the self-sufficing pride of the Stoic, and to the Epicurean's ideal of refined and tranquil pleasure. The resurrection of the dead was equally absurd, whether the soul is corporeal as the Stoics held, or whether it is nothing without the body—which was the Epicurean theory. The schools were not at their best in the apostolic age, for Athens was rather under a cloud. But such as they were, they fairly represent the best heathen thought of the time.

Greece itself however formed but a small part of the Greek world. Even in the sixth century before Christ her colonies bade fair to establish her supremacy in Asia and Italy; and though their growth was checked by Persia and Carthage, they still commanded a vast extent of coast. They covered the entire shore of the Ægean and the islands as far as Cyprus, fringed the Black Sea more than half way round, and even touched the coast of Africa. Sebastopol is on the site of one colony; Cyrene was another. The larger part of Sicily was Greek; so also much of the coast of Italy south of Naples. Further west was the great colony of Marseille, which became a centre of Greek influence along the eastern coast of Spain and up the valley of the Rhone. But the greatest victories of Greece were won in the age of her decay. Macedonia was her conqueror indeed, but the disciple and protector of Greek culture. The main result of Alexander's conquests was the spread of Greek civilisation in three successive regions outward into Asia. The country inside Mount Taurus became in course of time thoroughly Greek, and remained so till the Turkish conquest in the eleventh century. In Syria and Egypt Greek influences became dominant, but the native forces were never fully overcome. They survived the overthrow of the Greek power by the Saracens in the seventh century. Further Asia was never seriously Hellenized; yet the Greeks were strong in Mesopotamia till Julian's time (A.D. 363), and Greek kings reigned on the edge of the Indian desert for two hundred years. But Greek influence beyond the Tigris was mostly destroyed in the third century B.C. by the rise of Parthia.

Rome was another disciple of Greece, and an even mightier protector than Macedonia. In the West she destroyed the old enemy Carthage, in the East she checked the advance of Parthia at the Euphrates, so that Greek influences had free scope in all the space between. Rome and Greece never were rivals. Each was supreme in its own sphere. Greece obeyed the government of Rome, while Rome looked up to Greek philosophy. She looked down, it is true, on Greek trade; but for that very reason she let it alone. The two civilisations were in close alliance. Greek literary fashions were so eagerly taken up at Rome in the second century B.C. that the native growth was quite obscured. Roman literature imitates Greek models, Roman philosophy echoes the Greek. Only law was purely Roman. The educated Roman wrote and talked and laughed in Greek as freely as in Latin. Nor is this surprising, for he learned Greek in early youth, and studied under Greek teachers till he could attend the schools of Rhodes or Athens. It is needless to add that Roman literature was not similarly studied by the Greeks. Yet they tacitly recognised the equality of Rome when they abstained from calling her barbarian.

Scattered through the Empire and far beyond its eastern frontier were the Jews. Their dispersion was already old, for the successive deportations of Tiglath-Pileser and Sargon, of Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar, had removed the larger part of the nation to Assyria and Babylon. And though many of these Eastern Jews may have been lost among the heathens round them, there were great numbers living among the Parthians and Medes and Elamites (Acts ii. 9). They were counted by myriads in the Euphrates valley, grouped round the strongholds of Nisibis and Neharden. They abounded in Babylonia, and fought with the Greeks in bloody riots in the streets of Seleucia, almost in the presence of the King of Kings. But the great dispersion still further eastward was of later date, when Alexander's conquests had opened Asia almost as much to Jewish as to Greek influences. Henceforth Jewish settlements were free to follow the lines of trade, and the commercial genius of Israel found scope abroad instead of struggling with the law at home.

They were naturally most numerous in Syria, where they formed a large element of the population, especially in cities like Damascus, Antioch or Tarsus. They were hardly less at home beyond Mount Taurus, from Lycania and Galatia to Pontus. Their inscriptions are found even in the Crimea. Further west they had stronger rivals, for the Greeks were a commercial people too, and better sailors than the Jews. Yet St Paul goes from synagogue to synagogue at Ephesus, Thessalonica, Berea, Athens and Corinth, and Philo speaks of Jews in all parts of Greece, including the islands. Cyprus was the home of Barnabas, and Titus had to deal with Jews in Crete. Cyrene was another great resort of theirs. Simon of Cyrene carried the cross, and Lucius (Acts xiii. 1) was among the prophets and teachers at Antioch.

But the most important Jewish colony in the Greek world was at Alexandria, with offshoots in Egypt generally. Alexander himself brought them to the city, and the earlier Ptolemies encouraged them to settle in it. Two of its wards were chiefly peopled by Jews, and they were not wanting in the other three. They contributed much to the trade, and something to the disorders of the city. Some of them rose to the highest offices in the state. Philo estimates the whole number of Jews in Egypt at not less than a million. At Leontopolis (somewhere between Memphis and Pelusium, in the nome (or district) of Heliopolis) they had a temple of their own in imitation of Jerusalem, built about B.C. 160 by Onias, a son of one of the last high priests of the older line of Aaron before the Maccabees. It had a local reputation till its closure by the Romans (A.D. 73).

Though the Jews were less at home in the Latin half of the Empire, they were not wanting even there. They were especially numerous in Rome itself. The prisoners brought to the city by Pompeius (B.C. 63) soon obtained their liberty, and formed a Jewish quarter beyond the Tiber. Julius Cæsar treated them with special favour, and by the time of Augustus they were counted in Rome by thousands. Later emperors more than once expelled them from the city, but they always returned. One of these expulsions was by Claudius (probably A.D. 52), and Suetonius tells us that it was on account of "their repeated riots at the instigation of Christus"—which may be a confused way of saying that they had troubles either with the Christians or about some false Messiah. However, the edict came to nothing. In the next reign they found a steady friend in Nero's wife Poppæa. Even the destruction of Jerusalem scarcely endangered the toleration of the Jews at Rome. Josephus and Agrippa II. lived in favour with Vespasian, and Agrippa's sister Berenice (Acts xxv. 13) won the heart of the destroyer Titus, though Roman pride forbade him to give the world another Jewish empress.

The outward and visible sign of a Jewish community was its synagogue. The law made little provision for religious instruction, and none at all for public worship elsewhere than at the temple. Something was done by the prophets to supply the need; but after the captivity it was more effectually dealt with in the synagogue. The new system was already old (Acts xv. 21) in the apostolic age, and the dispersion carried it everywhere. The synagogues were numerous. Though we need not believe the Rabbinic story that there were 480 in Jerusalem, there were certainly (Acts vi. 9) a good many. The later rule for smaller places required a synagogue to be built wherever there were ten Jews who could attend it. The general government of each community was vested in a court of elders, who seem to have had the power of exclusion from the society, and certainly inflicted on their countrymen minor punishments (Mark xiii. 9; 2 Cor. xi. 24) for breaches of Jewish order. The synagogue however had its own officials—(1) the ruler or rulers, for there were sometimes more than one, who had the general oversight of the services; (2) the collectors of the alms; (3) the "minister" (Luke iv. 20), who however was a mere servant, more or less like a modern vergor. It must be carefully noted that there was neither priest nor minister in the proper sense attached to the synagogue. The rulers were more like the kirk elders in Scotland. The service began with (a) the Shema (so called from its first word in Hebrew), which consisted of the three paragraphs, Deut. vi. 4-9 (Hear, O Israel), xi. 13-21 and Num. xv. 37-41, with certain benedictions before and after. This confession of faith was followed by (b) the Shemoneh Esreh (Eighteen) prayers and thanksgivings. Next came (c) a Lesson from the law, which for this purpose was divided into 154 sections, in order that it might be read through in three years. The modern Jews have 54 sections, and read it in one year. Then came (d) a Lesson from the Prophets, including Joshua, Judges, Samuel and Kings. These portions however were not continuous like those of the law. They were commonly selected with some reference to what had just been read. Thus Gen. i. is followed by Is. xlii., Deut. i. by Is. i. Next followed (e) the Sermon, upon the passages just read. Last of all came (f) the Blessing. If a priest chanced to be present, he pronounced it, as the bishop does with us; if not, it was turned into a prayer. With this honorary exception, the entire service was performed by ordinary members of the congregation called up for the purpose at the ruler's discretion. Thus our Lord (Luke iv. 16, &c.) stands up to read the lesson at Nazareth, and sits down to preach on it. At Antioch in Pisidia (Acts xiii. 15) the rulers send to Paul and Barnabas as distinguished strangers to ask them for a sermon.

The synagogue was not confined to native Israelites. Judaism was an aggressive faith. Even in Palestine the Pharisees "compassed sea and land to make a single proselyte"; and the foreign Jews were still more zealous missionaries. The Jews were an enigma to the world, with their clannish habits and inexplicable quarrels, their circumcision, their "lazy" sabbath, their clean and unclean meats, their finical attention to ceremonial purity, and (strangest of all) their worship of a God without an image. Though it was well known that Pompeius found no image in the Holy of Holies, rumour placed there a donkey's head, and Tacitus is not ashamed to repeat the lie. But however the Jews might be slandered, they could never be ignored. So much the stronger was the attraction of their lofty monotheism for serious men who felt the emptiness of heathenism. Even Judaism was a light to lighten the Gentiles, revealing in its measure the unknown Supreme, and promising deliverance from sin and sorrow. Thus it had something of the power of the Gospel. There were Gentile proselytes as well as men of Israel in every synagogue (Acts xiii. 16). These proselytes were of all ranks downward from King Izates of Adiabene beyond the Tigris, who was almost a kingmaker in Parthia. In the New Testament we find among others the treasurer of Queen Candace, Cornelius of Caesarea, another centurion at Capernaum (Luke vii. 5), and Nicolas of Antioch (Acts vi. 5), who was one of the Seven. They were received on easy terms. For the "devout," or "men who feared God," it was enough to renounce idolatry, attend the synagogue, and observe a few conspicuous practices like the sabbath or abstinence from swine's flesh. They were welcome even on this footing. The full observance of the law was required only from those who asked for full admission to the church of Israel by the threefold ordinance of circumcision, baptism and sacrifice. After this they were counted "Israelites in all things."

The Rabbis were half proud of their numerous proselytes, half ashamed of "the leprosy of Israel." Indeed the Jews of the dispersion were not strict observers of the law. Pharisaic precision was less attractive at a distance from Jerusalem, and in fact the law could not be kept in foreign countries. The Jews of Rome or Babylon could not offer their paschal lambs in the temple, or appear before Jehovah three times in the year. The dispersion was in itself a plain sign that the law was waxing old and ready to vanish away. The spirit of the foreign Jews was not that of the pedants at Jerusalem. Even Galilee was less narrowly Jewish than Judea; and further off the Jews were Greeks as well as Jews, speaking Greek and living in the midst of Greek civilisation. They read the law in Greek, and visited the temple as Mohammedans visit the Kaaba, perhaps once or twice in their lives. Jerusalem might be the holy city, but it was not their home. The law might be ordained of angels, but the worship of the one true God was after all the main thing. Thus the Judaism of the dispersion was quite open to the influences of Greek philosophy. They are visible in the book of Wisdom, and pervade the writings of Philo. Living as he did in the cosmopolitan city of Alexandria, it was natural for him to read the law in the light of an eclectic philosophy. Absolute submission to its authority was quite consistent with allegorical methods of interpretation which enabled him to find in it whatever he wanted. Thus he makes the just and holy God of Israel into a Supreme like that of the philosophers—pure Being above all attributes and far removed from contact with the world. The Word (Memra) of the Palestinian Jews, through which Jehovah speaks to men, becomes the Logos of Philo—an impersonal and yet personal summing-up of the divine powers, viewed sometimes in the Stoic way as the active reason of the world, sometimes after the Platonic fashion as the archetypal idea, which shapes all things. Jewish privilege is almost explained away. The law is binding because it is pure and good—the original and still the best philosophy. Messiah's reign is an age of virtue, and the believer (or philosopher) of every nation will share the reward of Israel. Such a citizen of the world is Philo.

Judea itself lay well within the sphere of Gentile influences. In three directions it touched the Greek cities of Phœnicia, the Decapolis and the Philistine coast. But the direct danger from Greek idolatry was averted by the Maccabean struggle, and its present influence on Israel was rather one of repulsion. Rome and the Herods did the fatal mischief. Herod the Great was indeed a splendid king. With all his crimes, he rises far above the common type of Eastern sultans. He brought Judea safely through the dangers of Roman civil war. He watched over the interests of his subjects, made Jerusalem the finest city in the East, and was a tower of strength to the Jews in all countries. The glory of Herod yields only to that of Solomon. Yet the Jews hated him, and with good reason. His policy was heathen throughout his reign. He looked on Israel as one of the nations of the world and nothing more, so that his government was one long defiance of his people. Their pride was trampled down, their deepest convictions outraged by this cursed Edomite, this hideous caricature of the King that was to reign in righteousness. Only the Roman power kept him on the throne. So every discord in the state was inflamed to fever heat. Such Herodian party as existed was drawn from the Sadducees, and headed by the great priestly families like those of Boethus and Annas. The priests were guardians of the law, and therefore rivals of the scribes, whose traditions were making the law of none effect. But when they took their stand upon that law they seemed no better than freethinkers to a people who read into the law so many later growths of doctrine. The Messianic hope for example was a subject best avoided at the court of Herod; and the law has few traces of angels or of personal immortality. Here is one more sign that it was waxing old. Thus the Sadducees were little better than an aristocratic and unpopular clique: the nation was divided. Though the Pharisees were rebels in theory, they shrank from setting the Empire at defiance. Some were timid, some saw in foreign rule the punishment of national sin. Even an Edomite for king was one step better than a procurator from Rome. As a party therefore they preferred the schools to politics. If they could not hope to deliver Israel, they were free to study the law and the traditions. So they too lost influence. The Zealots were the men of action. Their sentence was for open war. They kept the nation in a growing ferment with their risings, and ended by drawing it into a struggle of life and death with Rome.

It cannot be said that Rome was a deliberate oppressor. Heavy taxation and bad finance were the faults of her general government, and Judæa was not worse off than other provinces. Nor was it her policy to insult the national worship. She treated it with official respect just because it was a national worship, and interfered more than once to protect it in the Greek cities. The cohort in the Tower of Antonia was only there to guard the peace of the temple. Its sanctity was fully recognised. The emperor made regular offerings, and (Acts xxi. 29) no Gentile was allowed to set foot in the Court of Israel. The Jews had express permission to put to death even a Roman citizen, if he was found inside the "middle wall of partition." Neither was Rome jealous of local freedom. The country was governed as before by the high priest and Sanhedrin, except that capital sentences needed the procurator's confirmation (John xviii. 31), and every synagogue throughout the Empire retained its private jurisdiction. The procurator could no doubt act for himself when he chose; but this power was necessary if he was to be responsible for order. The Jews moreover had exceptional privileges like freedom from military service, and from legal business on the sabbath. The high priest could even send Saul of Tarsus to bring the Christians of Damascus to Jerusalem for punishment (Acts ix. 2). So careful was the Roman government to avoid offence to religion.

It was all in vain. Rome and Israel could never understand each other. What was to be done with a people who were constantly raising wars of religion over the commonest acts of government? Even a census could not be taken without a dangerous rising (Acts v. 37). Nor was this the worst. Officials are seldom very gracious when they have to live among a people they despise and hate. The publicani especially, who farmed the taxes, had a direct interest in extortion. Thus whatever the government might do, the officials were constantly allowing their contempt for the Jews to break out in lawless violence. Pilate's slaughter of the Galileans (Luke xiii. 2) is a fair sample of their conduct. Then Judæa was most unfortunate in its procurators. Few provinces were afflicted with such a series of oppressors as Pilate, Felix, Albinus and Gessius Florus, the last and worst of the series. Only Festus was a better sort of man.

Even the Empire could not safely treat the Jews with oppression—still less with contempt. Israel was as proud as Rome herself. However this world's tyrants might boast, the Jew knew well that God's covenant was with his fathers. The obstinacy which had so long opposed the law was now enlisted in its defence. Sooner would the whole nation perish than let Pilate bring the idolatrous ensigns of the legions into the city, or Caligula place his image in the temple. But it was intolerable that the chosen people should be trodden under foot by "dogs" (Matt. xv. 27) and "sinners of the Gentiles" (Gal. ii. 15). Hatred of the Gentile was intense. The bitterest taunt against our Lord was the question (John vii. 35) whether He meant to go and teach the Gentiles, and the deepest guilt of His followers in Israel's eyes was their preaching to the Gentiles. Other nations feared Rome, and admired the universal conqueror: Israel feared too, and hated her the more. And the Messianic hope was stronger than even the fear of Rome. The old prophets had pointed to the future, to a king of David's line, to the glory of Jehovah resting on him, and to a never-ending reign of peace and righteousness. In some happier times, peradventure those of John Hyrcanus (B.C. 135-106), the writer of the Apocalypse of Enoch had drawn a picture of Messiah not unworthy of his prophetic teachers. But now the nation was thoroughly embittered. Oppression brought the hope of a deliverer to the front of thought and action. It was not cherished by the Zealots only, but by the peasants of Galilee, by the scribes at Jerusalem, and even by the heretics of Sychar (John iv. 25). Philo himself, whose hopes of a reign of philosophical virtue are really independent of Messiah, was obliged to give them something of a Messianic form. But oppression also debased the character of the Messianic hope. Some indeed of the simpler minds, especially in Galilee, were still (Luke i. 74, 75) true to the spirit of prophecy; and some of the Pharisees were not unfavourable to the spiritual teaching of the Prophet of Nazareth. But in Judea men looked rather for a vulgar conqueror to break the yoke of Rome and pour out wrath upon the heathen.

Such a perversion of God's crowning promise to mere revenge was in itself a renunciation of the spiritual work of Israel in history. The nation was essentially apostate long before the decisive morning of the cry, "We have no king but Cæsar."

Though Judæa was a tiny province, the Jews were the greatest people of the East, and no unequal match for Rome herself. The Zealots were right so far. The law, the temple and the Messianic hope kept Israel a living nation—the only living nation left inside the Empire. The stubborn courage of the Zealots amazed the Roman legions; but their savage fanaticism was no bond of union for a nation. All through the apostolic age the storm was gathering which broke in seventy years (A.D. 66-135) of internecine struggle between Rome and Israel for the dominion of the East. Our Lord's whole ministry was a warning that there was no blessing on the violence of the Zealots. The hatred of the Gentiles which brought the Jews to desecrate the temple (Mark xi. 16) needs must also bring the Gentiles to destroy it. And when the storm had spent its force, and Israel was uprooted from among the nations, it was seen again how truly the Lord had accused the scribes (Mark vii. 6-9; also Rom. x. 3) of replacing the law with a system of their own. The obsolescence of the law was not a recondite doctrine of the Christians, but a plain fact which anyone with eyes could see for himself. Atonement was the very essence of the law, and atonement was impossible when sacrifice had ceased: yet the religious life of Israel went on almost as if nothing had happened. But there were no more Sadducees and no more Zealots, no more proselytes and no more freethinkers. Subservience to Rome and armed resistance were alike impossible. Pharisaism remained supreme from the time when Israel went out to his long home of exile.

VI. THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE BIBLE.

BY PROFESSOR LUMBY.

For framing a scheme of Biblical Chronology the materials at the outset and for a long period of time are derived solely from the records of the O.T., and the character of these primitive documents shews that they were never designed for the bases of a strict chronological computation.

(A) For the first two periods of the world's history, viz. from the Creation to the Flood, and from the Flood to the call of Abram, the Old Testament supplies two documents called 'Books of the generations' (1) of Adam, Gen. v. 1-32, (2) of Shem, Gen. xi. 10-32. The first of these makes the period which elapsed between the Creation and the Flood to be 1656 years and from the Flood to the 70th year of Terah 292 years. But beside the Hebrew text we have these 'Books of Generations' preserved, though with different numbers, in the Samaritan Pentateuch and in the Septuagint version. The former makes the total years from the Creation to the Flood only 1307; the latter 2242: while from the Flood to the 70th year of Terah is according to the Samaritan numbers 942 years, but to the same period in the Septuagint 1072 years are given. The following tables will shew how these numbers are severally made up.

	Heb. Text.	Septuagint.	Sam. Pent.
L. Adam lived before the birth of Seth	130	230	130	years
Seth before	Enos	105	205	105
Enos	Cainan	90	190	90
Cainan	Mahalaleel	70	170	70
Mahalaleel	Jared	65	165	65
Jared	Enoch	162	162	62
Enoch	Methuselah	65	165	65
Methuselah	Lamech	187	167	67
Lamech	Noah	182	188	53
Noah's age when the Flood came	600	600	600
Total	1656	2242	1307

In these lists it will be seen that in most cases the Septuagint adds 100 years to the number given in the Hebrew, while the Samaritan numbers are more nearly in accord with the Hebrew, though in several instances less by 100 or more. In the second lists, on the contrary, the agreement is very close between the Septuagint and the Samaritan Pentateuch. The numbers for this second period in the three authorities are

Till Terah's 70th year	70	70	70

Here, as before, the Septuagint adds 100 in nearly every case to the numbers of the Hebrew, and introduces besides an additional name (Cainan) into the genealogy, which name appears neither in the Hebrew nor Samaritan record, but in these second lists the numbers of the Samaritan text, with the exception of the additional name, are identical with those of the Seventy. The total of the years from the Creation to the seventieth year of Terah is made according to the Heb. text 1948 years, in the LXX. 3314, and in the Sam. Pent. 2249.

(B) For the time embraced between the seventieth year of Terah and the death of Joseph we have to gather our data in a different manner. At the commencement of this period Terah was 70 years old (Gen. xi. 26). He lived 205 years (Gen. xi. 32) and died in Haran. Abraham was 75 years old when he left Haran (Gen. xii. 4) and 100 years old when Isaac was born (Gen. xxi. 5). Isaac had reached 60 years when Jacob was born (Gen. xxv. 26), and Jacob, when he stood before Pharaoh (Gen. xlvii. 9), was 130 years old. Joseph's age was 30 when he was brought before Pharaoh (xli. 46), and there came 7 years of plenty and 2 years of famine before Jacob came down into Egypt. Thus Joseph would be 39 when his father was 130, and Joseph died at the age of 110 (Gen. i. 26), so that he lived 71 years after Jacob came into Egypt.

Taking account of St Stephen's statement

(Acts vii. 4) that Abram only departed from Haran after his father's death, we see that Terah must have been at least 130 years old when he left Ur of the Chaldees. From the time of Terah's death we have 25 years of Abram's life + 60 years to the birth of Jacob + 91 years to the birth of Joseph + 110 years to his death = 286 years.

(C) From the death of Joseph to the Exodus we have not very precise data. But we know that Moses was the son of Amram, son of Kohath, son of Levi. Joseph was a younger brother of Levi, and we are told (Gen. i. 23) that Joseph saw Ephraim's children of the third generation, i.e. his own great-grandchildren. We may very well suppose, therefore, that Levi who lived 137 years (Exod. vi. 16) was alive at the birth of Moses, his great-grandchild. Sixty or seventy years would be enough to embrace all that happened from the death of Joseph till Moses was born. Add to this the 80 years of the life of Moses before the Exodus, and we conclude that this third period must have lasted from 140 to 150 years. If we regard this period and the preceding as embracing the 430 years mentioned in Exod. xii. 40 for the time of the sojourning in Egypt, dating that from the time when Abraham first went there, this third division of the history must be reckoned as $430 - 286 = 144$ years.

(D) In regard to the time after the Exodus, we have a definite statement (1 Kings vi. 1) that the building of the Temple was commenced in the 4th year of Solomon's reign and in the 480th after the coming out of Egypt. If we take away from this total the 40 years of Saul's reign (Acts xiii. 21) and 40 years for David's reign, together with 4 years of Solomon's, we arrive at 396 years as the time between the Exodus and the establishment of the kingdom under Saul. Forty years at the beginning of this time were consumed in the wanderings. So the period between the crossing of the Jordan and the anointing of king Saul is reduced to 356 years. Of this time we need not assign a very long portion to the life of Joshua after the entry into Canaan, for he was clearly advanced in years when Moses associated him with himself in the government of the people and made him his successor, while at the other end of the period, the disorderly days of Eli and even some portion of the life of Samuel may have been contemporaneous with part of the history of the Book of Judges. So that Jephthah's language to the king of Ammon may be, in round numbers, correct, when he describes (Judg. xi. 26) the period between the occupation of Gilead and his own time as 300 years. This would place him at a late date in the history of the Judges, and shews us that, as has been observed above (p. 55), parts of that history must be synchronous. The passage in the New Testament (Acts xiii. 20), which was formerly thought to bear upon this question, assigns 450 years to the period of the Judges; but recent criticism of the text has modified the reading, and what is now given as from the oldest authorities may be rendered thus: 'He gave their land for an heritage, about the space of 450 years; and after these things he gave them judges until Samuel the prophet.' If this reading be accepted (with R.V.) the passage is removed from the evidence connected with the times now under consideration.

Another argument which tends to shew that the period in question, from the entry into Canaan until the death of Saul, cannot have been much more than 350 years is the number of generations, in the several genealogies of the Old Testament, which are assigned to it. We know that Eleazar, who went with the people over Jordan, was the 5th in descent from Levi: similarly from Judah, in the four times authenticated pedigree of David, Amminadab comes 5th in order, and from Amminadab to Jesse, the contemporary of Saul, there are 5 steps—Amminadab, Nahshon, Salmon, Boaz, Obed, Jesse, which in 350 years allows about 70 years for each interval. Again from Eleazar to Amariah the grandfather of Zadok, whom we may place in the time of Jesse, there are seven stages, Eleazar, Phinehas, Abishua, Bukki, Uzzi, Zerahiah, Meraioth, Amariah, giving 50 years as the average of each, and the same kind of result is arrived at from other pedigrees, such as those of Saul, Heman, Asaph &c. We are, therefore, probably quite justified in accepting the statement in 1 Kings vi. 1 as the most correct of all the data at our command.

(E) When we arrive at the days of David the difficulties of the chronology though still sufficiently abundant become less than before. For we are aided by the synchronisms which occur with events in profane history. Hiram the king of Tyre, the friend of David and Solomon, links Jewish with Phœnician history, and in the reign of Rehoboam, the invasion of Shishak supplies a date from without from which we can, for the first time, begin to give definiteness to our computations. At a later time Hezekiah was contemporary with Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, and Josiah fell at Megiddo fighting against the Egyptian Pharaoh-necoh, while the Jewish Temple was destroyed and the people carried captive in the 19th year of Nebuchadnezzar. This last-mentioned date is fixed by the Canon of Ptolemy at B.C. 587. The Biblical evidence shews that Josiah's death befell 22 years earlier, viz. B.C. 609. Samaria was taken in the 6th year of Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 10): this was one of the earliest events of Sargon's reign, whose accession is placed by the inscriptions in B.C. 721, so that Hezekiah began to reign in B.C. 726. Sennacherib came against him in the 14th year of his reign, i.e. B.C. 712, and was disturbed in his attack by the march of Tirhakah against him. The Biblical chronology of the kingdoms makes the accession of Rehoboam to have been 249 years before that of Hezekiah, i.e. in B.C. 975. Now Shishak's plundering was in the 5th year of Rehoboam (1 Kings xiv. 25), i.e. B.C. 969. From this date, according to the calculations already made, we can arrange the events of Old Testament History. Investigations into the historic monuments of surrounding nations are hardly advanced enough to be relied on with certainty, but a revised Chronology has been attempted (see on pp. 152—160), and the results as far as they relate to the kingdoms of Israel and Judah are recorded, for the student's comparison, in the third column of pp. 203, 204. These are in the main based on Duncker's History of Antiquity, where also the commencement of Saul's reign is placed in 1055 B.C., and the death of Solomon in 953 B.C.

(F) From the time of the Captivity the sequence of Jewish history can be followed with considerable accuracy because of its frequent connexion with the events of Persian, Greek and Roman history, while the dates of the New Testament narrative are fixed within very narrow limits. It must be mentioned that the year of our Lord's birth has been placed 4 years too late, in consequence of the general acceptance in the early part of the 6th century of the calculations made by Dionysius Exiguus, abbat of a Roman monastery († A.D. 556). These calculations are now found to be erroneous. Hence we must place the Lord's birth in the year B.C. 4.

Thus the time between the birth of Christ and the destruction of Solomon's Temple will be 583 years; from that point backward to the foundation of the Temple 424 years.

This will place the accession of Solomon B.C. 1015, the Exodus which was 476 years earlier must according to our data be placed in B.C. 1491. Then we go back 430 years to the time when Abraham first went into Egypt, which will be set down as B.C. 1921. The 135 years of Terah's life between the departure from Ur and Terah's death must then be added, which brings us to B.C. 2056. To which if we add (using the Hebrew text rather than our other authorities, because its numbers are those most accessible to the English reader) 1948 years between the birth of Adam and the 70th year of Terah, when he left Ur of the Chaldees, we arrive at a total of 4004 years, according to the calculation of Archbishop Ussher.

But when we remember the frequency with which dates in the early books of the Bible are set down in round numbers, and that the main object of the Jewish genealogies was to preserve the family descent, and not the precise length of each generation, we feel sure that all our conclusions with regard to the times before the kingdom are full of uncertainty, and it is unfortunate that these dates have been added in the margins of our Authorized Version, as there is thus imparted to them an authority which they did not possess; and at a time when investigations are in progress which may result in establishing earlier synchronisms between the Biblical narrative and the events of Assyrian and Egyptian history it should ever be borne in mind that the marginal dates in our Bibles are no part of the Sacred Volume, but are open to revision whenever materials for making it may be forthcoming.

To shew how opinions have varied about the chronology anterior to the reign of Rehoboam we append a table of the dates assigned to five of the principal events by independent inquirers in ancient and modern times:

In the days of Abram we meet with the names of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and Amraphel, king of Shinar, and Egypt was manifestly a powerful kingdom before and during the patriarchal times, but the countries intended by Elam and Shinar are not fully ascertained, while the early annals of Egypt as they have come down to us help us to no synchronisms which can be relied on.

B. C. 1429	Death of Joshua. From B. C. 1429 till B. C. 1095 was the period of the Judges of whom the first was Othniel and the last Samuel, but the arrangement and dates of the rest are very uncertain. (See p. 58 for their names and length of office.)	The commencement of the Assyrian empire appears to have been somewhere in the period of the Judges, but much of the chronological data preserved is of a fabulous character.
1095	Saul is anointed king.

(B) In this section the dates are ascertained with some degree of accuracy, help being derived from synchronisms with profane history, which become more numerous with every succeeding century.

VII. THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE BIBLE.

1. SACRIFICES AND OTHER RELIGIOUS OBSERVANCES. THE TABERNACLE AND TEMPLE.

BY THE REV. F. WATSON, D.D.,

DIVINITY LECTURER AND LATE FELLOW OF ST JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

All the sacrifices and services of the Old Testament had two aspects :

(1) On God's part they were (a) means of instruction, (b) occasions of blessing. (a) may be deduced from the general nature of the sacrifices themselves and their ritual. The official external holiness required by the ceremonial law represented the actual, spiritual, internal holiness which God required in those who would acceptably approach to Him. (b) may be gathered from the narrative of the first sacrifices (Gen. iv. 4, 7); Noah's sacrifice (Gen. viii. 21); the sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. xxii. 16, 17); and from the express promise of Ex. xx. 24.

(2) On man's part they were generally acknowledgments of his creaturely, and also of his fallen position; and embodiments of his desires and aspirations. More particularly they were acknowledgments of blessings received (Gen. iv. 3, 4); means of asking for temporal blessings (Ex. v. 3); means of approach to God which the consciousness of sin made difficult (Micah vi. 6, 7); outward acts in which man's spiritual desires and affections found fitting expression.

The offering of sacrifices to God was a primæval institution. The first allusion to it is found in Gen. iii. 21. The first actual sacrifices were those of Cain and Abel. No divine command can be quoted for the institution of sacrifice, but from its adoption in the earliest times by all nations its divine origin may be inferred. From the numerous mention of altars in patriarchal times we gather that sacrifice was an ordinary part of the patriarchal religion. Prayer and sacrifice were closely connected together. The patriarchs built an altar, and called upon the name of the Lord (Gen. xii. 8, xxvi. 25). With them offering of sacrifice was essentially an acknowledgment of dependence upon God, and thence had the two elements of thank-offering and supplication (Cain, Abel, Noah). The element of propitiation, though not prominent, was not wholly absent (Gen. viii. 21). The sacrifice was intended to remove an indefinite feeling of separation from God and a fear of approaching Him; but until the Mosaic Law had brought in a fuller knowledge of sin, a sense of guilt could not be the principal motive of sacrifice. Substitution was a fundamental idea, whether of a part for the whole, the firstfruits for the harvest (Cain, Abel); or of an animal for a man (Isaac). Covenants were based on or ratified by sacrifice, both (a) between God and man (Gen. xv. 9, 10, 17, xxxv. 14); and (b) between man and man (Gen. xxxi. 44-46, 54). Sacrifices were divided into two classes (burnt-offerings and peace-offerings; Ex. x. 25, xviii. 12, xx. 24). There were no sin or trespass offerings. Burnt-offerings would seem to have been offerings of dedication, and to some extent of expiation (Gen. viii. 21). Peace-offerings by their name implied a state of peace and fellowship between the offerer and his God, and so would express thankfulness for mercies received.

Offerings made to Jehovah must from the nature of the case be the offerer's own property; and they must also be properly acquired by him (Deut. xxiii. 18). They might be made to Jehovah either (a) for His permanent possession (so offerings of gold, silver, &c. for the service of the sanctuary; Ex. xxv. 1-3; 1 Chron. xxix.); or (b) to be consumed in His honour, either (1) in the maintenance of His ministers, or (2) by fire on the altar. (1) were regarded as feudal taxes which the people of Israel paid to Jehovah as the Owner of the land. (2) were sacrifices consumed, partly or wholly, upon the altar for a sweet savour to Jehovah (Ex. xxix. 18); or as His sacrificial food (Lev. iii. 11, 16). When an animal was sacrificed, its blood was sprinkled upon the altar for an atonement (Lev. xvii. 11). The sacrificial act represented the personal surrender of the worshipper to Jehovah. The sacrifice itself was his substitute and representative, and must needs be in close and essential connexion with him. Hence only oxen, sheep, goats, turtles, doves and pigeons, wine, oil and corn could be offered on the altar. Animals best represented man personally, because nearest him in the scale of life. Those chosen were domesticated animals, reared by man, his food, and so the support of his life. Wild animals, though fit for food, were excluded, because in no sense the product of his care and cultivation. Vegetables on the other hand best represented man's work, because they were in some sense the product of his skill and toil. Fruits generally were excluded because they grew without cultivation. Altar sacrifices were of three kinds, Sin-offerings, Burnt-offerings, and Peace-offerings.

An altar was a place for offering sacrifice. At its four corners were four horns. On these, its loftiest points, the blood of the sin-offerings was put, that the atonement might be brought the nearer to God. The materials of an altar were either earth (2 Kings v. 17; Ex. xxv. 24) or unhewn stones (Deut. xxvii. 5; Josh. viii. 31; Ex. xx. 25). The Israelites were wont to inclose the earth or stones in a wooden case to preserve the proper shape. The wood again might be overlaid with brass or gold. Hence we have altars of acacia wood (Ex. xxvii. 1); brazen or golden altars (Ex. xxxix. 39, xl. 26).

From the nature of worship under the Old Testament dispensation a shrine or sanctuary was the place of an altar. The place was chosen by God, who signified His choice by a Theophany. Thus the patriarchs (commonly) built altars in the places in which God had appeared to them (Gen. xii. 7). Under the Law (Deut. xii. 5, 11-14) it was forbidden to build an altar, except in the place which God should choose to put His name there.

From Joshua's death onward the law of the one sanctuary seems to have been almost universally broken. Theophanies were reckoned to be sufficient justification for the building of altars in the days of the Judges (Gideon, Manoah). In the times of the undivided kingdom, Samuel, Saul and David erected altars in various places. After the rejection of Shiloh and before the choice of Zion there was no place in which God had put His Name, so the law of the one sanctuary was virtually repealed. When Solomon's Temple was built it continued to be a dead letter. High places with their sacrificial worship were tolerated even by pious and reforming kings. Asa and Jehoshaphat seem to have made unsuccessful efforts to remove them (cf. 2 Chron. xiv. 5 and xvii. 6 with 1 Kings xv. 14 and xxii. 43). But Hezekiah was probably the first king to put down worship at the high places (2 Kings xviii. 4; 2 Chron. xxxi. 1). Their removal excited the attention of Rabshakeh (2 Kings xviii. 22), and was probably unpopular. Manasseh rebuilt them (2 Kings xxi. 3). Josiah, after the finding of the Book of the Law, defiled the high places and brake down the altars, and did not allow those who had been their priests to perform the duties of their office at Jerusalem (2 Kings xxiii. 8, 9). Worship at the high places became, as we learn from the prophets, the occasion of gross idolatry and immorality. Cf. Is. lvii. 3-8, lxx. 17; Jer. ii. 20; 2 Kings xvii. 10, &c. We hear nothing more of it after the exile.

Two places only (Shiloh and Zion) seem to have been fully authorized as sites of sanctuaries under the Old Testament dispensation.

Many other places had from Theophanies or their associations with the history of the nation a sacred character. At these men were wont to offer sacrifices, generally to Jehovah, but often, and specially in later times, with heathen or idolatrous rites. Such were: Bethel (Gen. xii. 8; Judg. xx. 26, 27; 1 Kings xii. 32; Amos iv. 4); Beersheba (Gen. xxi. 33; Amos v. 5); Dan (Judg. xviii. 30; 1 Kings xii. 29, 30; Amos viii. 14); Gibeon (2 Chron. i. 3; 1 Kings iii. 4); Gilgal (Josh. v. 2-11; 1 Sam. vii. 16; Hosea xii. 11; Amos iv. 4); Mizpeh in Gilead (Gen. xxxi. 48; Judg. xi. 10, xx. 1); Mizpeh in Benjamin (1 Sam. vii. 5, 6, x. 17); Ramah (1 Sam. vii. 17); Shechem (Gen. xli. 6, 7; Josh. viii. 30, xxiv. 26).

The Tabernacle. The names of the Tabernacle were (1) Tent of Meeting (R.V.), because there God met with the children of Israel (Ex. xxix. 43); (2) Tabernacle (literally, dwelling-place), because there God dwelt (Ex. xxv. 8); (3) Tent or Tabernacle of the Testimony. The Testimony = the two Tables of the Law (Ex. xxv. 21); (4) (occasionally) The Tent (Ex. xxxix. 33, 38; 1 Kings viii. 4); (5) The House of Jehovah, as His settled dwelling-place (Ex. xxiii. 19; Josh. vi. 24; Judg. xviii. 31).

Occasionally (1) and (2) are combined, so Ex. xl. 2; the Tabernacle is called by the name usually assigned to Solomon's temple 1 Sam. i. 9, iii. 3; at times the whole building is called Sanctuary (Ex. xxv. 8), a name more fitly applied to the Holy Place or Holy of Holies.

The 'Tent' must be distinguished from the 'Tabernacle.' By the help of the Revised Version this may easily be done. The Tabernacle was an inner tent, the area available for sacred purposes. The Tent was outside the Tabernacle, over it (Ex. xxvi. 7, xxvii. 14). Moses set up the Tabernacle first, and then spread the Tent over it (Ex. xl. 19), and finally put the covering of the Tent above upon it. The Tabernacle was an oblong, 30 cubits in length, and 10 in breadth and height. Its sides (N., W., S.) were made of 46 boards (10 cubits by 1½) and 2 narrower corner ones of acacia wood (Ex. xxvi. 15), overlaid with gold (xxvi. 29). The boards stood upright, and each had two tenons or projections, which fitted into silver sockets. They were fitted with golden rings, through which were passed bars of acacia wood overlaid with gold to fasten all firmly together. Suspended over them, and serving as an inner lining to the Tent covering, was the rich Tabernacle covering—10 curtains (each 28 cubits by 4) made of fine twined linen, and blue and purple and scarlet, embroidered with figures of cherubim (Ex. xxvi. 1).

Over the Tabernacle the Tent was spread. We have hardly sufficient data to determine its shape or construction; but its roof was formed by eleven curtains of goat-skins (each 4 cubits by 30). These were supported towards the east by five pillars. We may infer that they had the same support in the west, and that the two sets of pillars were connected by a ridge-pole. As the length of the Tent covering was 44 cubits, and only half a curtain or two cubits hung down either before or behind (Ex. xxvi. 9, 12), the length of the Tent was 40 cubits, or 10 cubits longer than the Tabernacle. The entrance towards the east was closed by a screen of blue and purple and scarlet and fine twined linen.

Over the Tent came the covering of the Tent. This consisted of two parts: (1) an inner covering of ram-skins dyed red, (2) a covering of seal or porpoise skins over all (Ex. xxvi. 14).

The Sanctuary was probably tent-like in shape. This may be argued from (1) its name, (2) its principles of construction: Four heavy curtains hung over rows of boards 10 cubits apart could not be stretched tight, and must have bagged in the middle. They would be very unsightly, and would hold the rain, which would (ultimately) find its way inside. (3) The mention of pins and cords in Ex. xxxix. 40. (4) The dimensions of the curtains, which would be suitable for a right-angled roof with 20 cubits breadth of floor.

The Tent stood in a court 100 cubits by 50, surrounded by a fence (Ex. xxvii. 18) five cubits high, composed of pillars and hangings of fine white linen. The entrance towards the east was 20 cubits wide (Ex. xxvii. 16), and was closed by a screen of linen of four different colours on four pillars.

In the court outside the Tent and in front of its door stood the Altar of Burnt-offering, a square of five cubits, three cubits high. Its outer frame was acacia wood overlaid with brass (Ex. xxvii. 1, 2, 8), whence its name (Ex. xxxix. 39). The hollow was probably filled with earth or unhewn stones (Ex. xx. 24, 25). The altar had round it and half-way up it a ledge (Ex. xxvii. 5), supported by a grating of network of brass. Besides various brazen utensils for use in the sacrifices it had rings and staves by means of which it was carried.

Between the altar of burnt-offering and the door of the Tent stood a laver of brass on a base of brass (Ex. xxx. 18). In it the priests washed their hands and feet when they went into the Tent of Meeting for any priestly purpose (Ex. xxx. 19–21).

The Tabernacle proper was divided into two parts by a veil of the same materials as the screen of the court, the inner roof-covering of the Tabernacle, and the screen of the Tent (Ex. xxxvi. 35, 37).

In the outer compartment (20 cubits by 10) called the Holy Place were three things: (1) In the middle, before the veil and before the mercy-seat (Ex. xxx. 6), stood the Altar of Incense, similar in construction to the Altar of Burnt-offering but smaller and overlaid with gold. On it was burned incense morning and evening (no animal sacrifices); and on its horns was put once a year, on the Day of Atonement, the blood of the sin-offering (Ex. xxx. 10). (2) On the south side of the altar of incense stood the Candlestick (Ex. xxvi. 35), of pure gold of beaten work, with six branches and seven lamps. Pure olive oil beaten was burnt in the lamps (Lev. xxiv. 2; Ex. xxvii. 20, 21). Aaron lit the lamps at evening and dressed them in the morning (Ex. xxx. 8; Lev. xxiv. 3). (3) On the north side of the altar stood the Table of Shewbread (Ex. xxv. 23–30) made of acacia wood. On it was placed the shewbread, consisting of 12 unleavened cakes made of fine flour. They were placed in two rows (or piles), and frankincense was put on each row (Lev. xxiv. 7). The shewbread was changed every Sabbath-day, and the old loaves were eaten by the priests in a holy place (Lev. xxiv. 9).

The Holy of Holies contained only one piece of furniture, viz. the Ark of the Covenant, or the Ark of the Testimony (Ex. xxv. 22). It was an oblong box of acacia wood, 2½ cubits long and 1½ cubit wide and high. It was overlaid within and without with gold, and had a rim or edging of gold round its top. It had rings and staves by which to carry it, and the staves were never to be removed from the rings (Ex. xxv. 15). The ark had within it 'The Testimony,' i.e. the two tables of stone (Ex. xxv. 21, xxxi. 18). From these the ark got both its names. According to Heb. ix. 4, the ark also contained a pot of manna and Aaron's rod that budded. In the O.T. it is said of these that they are put or laid up "before the Testimony" (Ex. xvi. 34; Num. xvii. 10). They were not in the ark in the time of Solomon (1 Kings viii. 9). The Book of the Law was placed "by the side of the ark of the covenant," not inside it (Deut. xxxi. 26). Upon the ark and forming the lid was the Kapporeth (A.V. and R.V. 'mercy-seat,' R.V. (margin) 'covering'). It served, with the ark beneath, as an altar on which the highest atonement known to the Jewish law was effected. On it was sprinkled the blood of the sin-offering of the Day of Atonement (Lev. xvi. 14, 15). The Kapporeth was the place of the manifestation of God's glory (Ex. xxv. 22). It was God's throne in Israel. (Cf. the phrase, 'The Lord God of Israel which sitteth upon (or dwelleth between) the cherubim' (1 Sam. iv. 4). At the ends of the Kapporeth were placed two cherubim of gold of beaten work, spreading out their wings so as to cover the mercy-seat and looking towards it.

The pattern of the Tabernacle was delivered by God to Moses. Bezaleel and Aholiab were the chief constructors, and it is said (Ex. xxxi. 3-6) that they and the other workmen were filled with the spirit of God, in wisdom and in understanding, to make all that God had commanded. The people so freely offered for the service of the work, that they had to be restrained from bringing. The stuff was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much (Ex. xxxvi. 6, 7). The Tabernacle with all its furniture was brought to Moses when complete, and on the first day of the first month of the 2nd year (i.e. one year less 14 days from the Exodus) he reared it up and finished the work. When the whole building was set in order, the cloud covered the Tent of Meeting and the glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle (Ex. xl. 34). The cloud, the token of the Divine Presence, had the appearance of a fire by night, and by its rising from or abiding on the Tent, determined the journeyings and encampments of the children of Israel (Num. ix. 17, 18). The Tabernacle accompanied the children of Israel during their wanderings in the desert, and in the different stages of the conquest of the land of Canaan. The conquest complete, it was fixed in Shiloh as the place which the Lord had chosen (Josh. xviii. 1). Here we find it in the earliest (Judg. xviii. 31) and latest days of the Judges (1 Sam. i. 3). At the time of the capture of the ark God forsook the Tabernacle of Shiloh (Ps. lxxviii. 60). The ark never returned to the Tabernacle, and the Tabernacle was removed from Shiloh. We find it some years later with its priests and its table of shewbread at Nob (1 Sam. xxi. 1), and in Solomon's reign with its altar of burnt-offering and ministered at by Zadok the high priest at Gibeon (1 Chron. xvi. 39, 40). After the building of the Temple it entirely disappears from the history.

Solomon's Temple. There is nothing distinctive in the Hebrew word for temple. Nearly equivalent to the English 'palace' it is used of the palaces of Ahab and the king of Babylon (1 Kings xxi. 1; 2 Kings xx. 18), &c., and also occasionally of the Mosaic Tabernacle (1 Sam. i. 9, iii. 3).

The Hill of Zion seems to have been chosen by God as His dwelling-place early in David's reign (2 Sam. vi. 17). The exact position of the Temple, viz. the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite, was indicated by the Theophany at the time of the plague, and the command received through the prophet Gad to build an altar there (1 Chron. xxi. 15, 18, 28). This threshing-floor is placed on Mount Moriah in 2 Chron. iii. 1.

The Temple was built after the model of the Tabernacle, the dimensions of each part being exactly double. The Temple proper was (the measurements being interior) 60 cubits long, 20 cubits broad, 30 cubits high (15 cubits was the Tabernacle's height if its roof was right-angled). It had in addition a porch 10 cubits deep in front. The materials of the Temple, gold, silver, iron, copper, timber, and stone, had been collected by David (1 Chron. xxii. 14). He had also planned the house and its furniture to its details (1 Chron. xxviii. 11-20), had collected a number of skilled workmen capable of executing the work (1 Chron. xxii. 15), and had bound over the princes and people of Israel to zealous co-operation and costly gifts. Still to Solomon belongs the credit of the actual accomplishment of the work.

The Temple walls were composed of hewn stone made ready at the quarry. The roof was of cedar and the walls were panelled with it. "All was cedar there, there was no stone seen." The cedar was carved with figures (cherubim, palm-trees, and flowers), and was overlaid with gold fitted to the carving. The floors were of fir or cypress wood, overlaid with gold. The communication between the Holy Place and Holy of Holies was by a doorway with two doors of olive-wood carved like the walls and overlaid with gold. From 2 Chron. iii. 14 we learn that a veil hung in front of the door. The door of the Temple was of cypress on posts of olive-wood, carved and overlaid as elsewhere. It folded back in two pieces on each side. In front of the porch stood the two great figured pillars of hollow brass, called Jachin and Boaz. These with their capitals were 23 cubits high. Round about the house and inclosing it were three tiers of chambers. There were rebatements in the wall—i.e. the wall was broader at the base than it was higher up. In this way supports for the chamber-posts were obtained without cutting into the wall of the house. In consequence the chambers increased by a cubit in width at each tier. The lowest chamber was five cubits wide. Above them all was a row of windows of narrow lights. From 1 Chron. xxviii. 11 we should gather that what may be called the outbuildings were of an extensive character. The small size of the Temple proper in comparison with modern churches is to be noticed. It is sufficiently accounted for by the fact that the worshippers remained outside, the priests only went within.

All the materials for the house were prepared before they were brought to the site. The building was completed in seven years. There were two Temple courts. The inner court was surrounded by a wall consisting of three rows of hewn stone and a row of cedar beams (1 Kings vi. 36). This was called the court of the priests, and from its elevation the upper court (2 Chron. iv. 9; Jer. xxxvi. 10). The outer or the great court was for the use of the people. Nothing is said about its walls, but it was entered by doors of brass.

The Furniture of the Temple was similar to but not identical with that of the Tabernacle. In the Holy of Holies stood the old Mosaic ark with the mercy-seat; but the figures of the cherubim overshadowing the mercy-seat were new. They were larger in size, their wings touched in the middle and reached each wall of the Holy of Holies. They were also different in posture. In the Holy Place all was new. The altar of incense was made of cedar wood overlaid with gold. Instead of one golden candlestick and one table of shewbread there were ten, five on each side. In the outer court stood the brazen altar of the same pattern as that of the Tabernacle, but enormously larger (2 Chron. iv. 1). Ahaz superseded it with an altar of Damascus pattern (2 Kings xvi. 11-16). Between the altar and the porch was the brazen sea for the purification of the priests. It had a brim like the flower of a lily, and it stood upon 12 oxen, three looking N., S., E., W. These were given to Tiglath-Pileser by Ahaz (2 Kings xvi. 17). On each side of the altar were five figured brazen stands for five brazen lavers for washing the sacrifices (1 Kings vii. 38, 39).

The house was consecrated at the feast of the seventh month, i.e. the Feast of Tabernacles (1 Kings viii. 2; 2 Chron. v. 3). When the priests came out from setting the ark in the Holy of Holies, the house was filled with a cloud, "so that the priests could not stand to minister" (2 Chron. v. 13, 14). After Solomon had prayed, the fire came down from heaven and consumed the sacrifices (2 Chron. vii. 1). The feast of dedication lasted 14 days (1 Kings viii. 64, 65). In this ceremonial Solomon appears to be the principal personage, even as Moses (not Aaron) was at the dedication of the Tabernacle.

The wealth gathered by David and lavished by Solomon on the Temple was enormous. The skill necessary for the elaborate work in gold and brass was supplied from Tyre. Hiram, on his mother's side of the tribe of Naphtali, was fetched by Solomon for the purpose (1 Kings vii. 14).

The Temple was shorn of some of its magnificence by Shishak of Egypt in the reign of Solomon's son (1 Kings xiv. 26). It was often spoiled of its treasures, whether by foreign enemies (Shishak, Jehoash of Israel, Nebuchadnezzar), or by kings of Judah (Asa, Joash, Ahaz, Hezekiah) to buy off the attack or purchase the alliance of foreign powers. It was restored by Joash and by Josiah. Some works in connexion with it were taken in hand by Jehoshaphat, probably (2 Chron. xx. 5); Jotham (2 Kings xv. 35); and Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 16). It was polluted by Athaliah (2 Chron. xxiv. 7), Ahaz (2 Chron. xxix. 6, 16), and above all, Manasseh (2 Kings xxi. 4, 5, 7). It was cleansed by Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxix. 16); and Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 4, 6, 12). Finally it was burnt to the ground and utterly destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings xxv. 9), all that was valuable in it being carried to Babylon (2 Kings xxv. 13, &c.). The vessels of silver and gold were afterwards restored by Cyrus and Darius (Ezra i. 7-11, vi. 5).

Temple of Zerubbabel. There are few definite statements concerning the dimensions and arrangements of the Temple of Zerubbabel. But we may reasonably infer that it was, so far as circumstances permitted, in its principal parts a reproduction of Solomon's Temple, and on the ancient site (Ezra iii. 3). The Jews were not entirely free agents in building. The dimensions and principles of construction were prescribed in decrees of the Persian kings (Ezra vi. 3, 4). They also provided the materials, which came from Sidon (Ezra iii. 7, vi. 4, 8). The Jews reckoned the Temple of Zerubbabel to be in five points inferior to the Temple of Solomon: viz. in the absence of (1) the ark of the Covenant (lost or burnt at the destruction of Jerusalem and never renewed); (2) the Shechinah or manifestation of the glory of the Lord; (3) the Urim and the Thummim (Ezra ii. 63); (4) the Holy Fire upon the altar; (5) the Spirit of Prophecy.

We gather from Neh. xii. 44 and xiii. 5-7, that the buildings in connexion with Zerubbabel's Temple were of an extensive character, and included (a) store-chambers for the priestly and Levitical Jews, and (b) dwelling-chambers for the priests and others. Cf. also Jos. Ant. xiv. xvi. 2.

The building of Zerubbabel's Temple was impeded by the active opposition and by the intrigues of the Samaritans (Ezra iv. 4, 5). Induced by their representations, king Artaxerxes (Pseudo-Smerdis?) wrote a letter and made the work to cease (Ezra iv. 23, 24). In the second year of Darius Hystaspes (520 B.C.) the people, exhorted by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, resumed their task, and in the sixth year of Darius (516 B.C.) the feast of the dedication was kept (Ezra vi. 15, 16).

This Temple was the scene of the murder of Jesus the son of Judas by his brother Johanan the high priest. In consequence it was profanely entered by Bagoses, the Persian governor of Syria (circa 366 B.C.). Alexander the Great (332 B.C.) is said by Josephus to have offered sacrifices here. Simon the Just (circa 300 B.C.), the high priest, "repaired the house again," and "fortified the temple" (Ecclus. i. 1).

Ptolemy Philopator (217 B.C.) insisted upon entering the Holy of Holies, but was smitten of God so that he was carried out half-dead from the Temple courts. Antiochus the Great (200 B.C.), in return for help given him by the Jews against the Egyptians, provided materials for building the cloisters, &c. of the Temple, made a grant to provide sacrifices, and decreed that no stranger should enter within the Temple inclosure. Heliodorus (176 B.C.) was miraculously hindered from spoiling the Temple of its treasures. Antiochus Epiphanes (168 B.C.) entered the Temple "proudly," stripped it of its golden altar, candlesticks, table of shewbread, &c., polluted it by setting up the abomination of desolation and offering swine upon the altar, burnt its gates and pulled down the priests' chambers. It was left desolate for three years, so that "shrubs grew in its courts as in a forest or on one of the mountains" (1 Macc. i. 21, 39, 46, 54, iv. 38). Judas Maccabeus (165 B.C.) cleansed it and restored it to use (1 Macc. iv. 43-57). He and his brothers, Jonathan and Simon, fortified the sanctuary with high walls and towers (1 Macc. iv. 60, x. 11, xiii. 52). Alexander Jannæus (B.C. 95) built a partition wall of wood round the altar and the Temple, so as to separate the court of the priests from that of the people (Jos. Ant. xiii. xiii. 5). Pompey, when he (B.C. 63) took Jerusalem, slew the priests at the altar, entered the Holy of Holies, but left the rich Temple treasures intact, and commanded it to be cleansed the next day (Jos. Ant. xiv. iv. 4). When Herod took the city (B.C. 37), some of the Temple cloisters were burnt, but he used entreaties, threatenings, and even force, to restrain his foreign soldiery from entering the Sanctuary (ibid., xiv. xvi. 3).

Temple of Herod. To win popularity with the Jews and an eternal name for himself, Herod in the 18th year (17 B.C.) of his reign proposed to rebuild the Temple of Zerubbabel. The Jews feared lest, having pulled down, he should be unable to rebuild, and to reassure them Herod promised to gather materials before he began the work. The area of the Temple site was inadequate for his design, and to enlarge it he built up a wall from the bottom of the valley, binding rocks together with lead and iron, and filling up the hollows. By this means he obtained a site nearly square, four stadia in circumference, or 600 feet each side (Jos. Ant. xv. xi. 1-3). The Temple proper was built by the priests themselves in a year and six months (Ant. xv. xi. 6). The cloisters (the speciality of Herod's Temple) and outer inclosures were built in 8 years (ibid. § 5). Other buildings were added from time to time. The work was proceeding all through our Lord's earthly life, and the design was not complete till the year 64 A.D., only six years before the Temple's final destruction. The discharge of the large staff of workmen (18,000 men, Jos. Ant. xx. ix. 7), which had been employed upon it by Agrippa II., aggravated the troubles of those disturbed times.

Character of the Buildings (Jos. Ant. xv. xi. 3-5).

The special feature to be noted in the Temple buildings was the gradual rise in elevation from the area boundaries till at length the shrine itself was reached. The Temple area was divided into courts, and the outer courts stood on the lowest ground. Ascents were made by steps successively from the court of the Gentiles to the court of the women, the courts of the men of Israel and of the priests, and the Temple itself. In the midst, not in the centre of the site (but somewhat to the N. and W. of it), on the exact site of the Temple of Solomon, with its porch facing the east, and its Holy of Holies to the west, was placed the Temple itself. It was thus visible from every part of the city. The Temple area was surrounded on all sides by a high wall. Josephus mentions four gates on the west side only; but the Talmud speaks of a gate Hulda on the south side, in a line with the altar and the Water Gate (inner inclosure); a gate Tadi or Teri on the north side; and a gate Shushan on the east side. Cloisters ran all round the wall. Those on the south side called the royal cloisters were particularly remarkable. They were supported on 162 white marble pillars with Corinthian capitals placed in four rows forming three walks. The effect of this magnificent cloister was enhanced by the precipice which bounded the southern side of the Temple area. The other cloisters had only two walks. Those on the eastern side were called Solomon's Porch, and were rebuilt by Herod. The cloisters, with the open space, about 30 cubits wide, adjoining them on the inside, formed the court of the Gentiles. 14 steps led from the court of the Gentiles to a rampart or platform called the Chel, 10 cubits wide, which surrounded the inner Temple. On it stood pillars at equal distances bearing inscriptions, some in Greek and some in Roman letters, that no foreigner should go within the Sanctuary [one of these pillars with the Greek inscription was found (1870) by M. Ganneau built into the wall of a house in modern Jerusalem]. The court of the women comprised the easternmost portion of the inner Temple. It was entered on the east by Nicanor's Gate (some place this gate between the court of the women and that of the men of Israel), a gate of Corinthian brass, reckoned to be the principal gate (De Bell. Jud. v. v. 3). This is without doubt the gate 'called Beautiful' of Acts iii. 2. A wall separated the more sacred portions of the Temple towards the west from the court of the women. From the latter the court of the men of Israel was reached by an ascent of 15 steps. A partition 1 cubit high compassed the holy house and altar, and kept the people from the priests. The eastern part of this inclosure was called the court of the priests, and in it stood the huge altar of burnt-offering, and the laver for the priestly purifications. Twelve steps led from the court of the priests to the Temple itself. This was renewed by Herod to its foundations, priests being the workmen (Jos. Ant. xv. xi. 3). It was built of stones that were white and strong, and of immense size. The Temple was 100 cubits long, 100 or 120 cubits high, the centre being higher than the wings; 100 cubits broad at the porch, 60 cubits behind. The Holy Place and Holy of Holies were the same size as in Solomon's or Zerubbabel's Temple. In front of the Temple was a remarkable gateway without doors, with lintels above, adorned with coloured and embroidered curtains. It was covered with gold, and a golden vine was spread upon it. Thirty-eight little chambers in three stories surrounded the Temple, 15 on the north, 15 on the south, and 8 on the west. On the top of the roof were spikes with sharp points to prevent any pollution by birds sitting upon it.

The Temple, like that of Zerubbabel, had no ark. A stone was set in its place, on which the high priest placed the censor on the Day of Atonement. It followed the Tabernacle (not Solomon's Temple) in having only one candlestick and one table of shewbread.

Along the walls of the inner Temple were placed chambers for various purposes connected with the Temple services. At the north end of the court of the women stood the Treasury, at its south end the Gazith or chamber of hewn stone in which the Sanhedrin sat. At the north-west corner of the Temple, and on the site of an ancient tower called Baris, Herod erected the fortress of Antonia. From its south-east tower, 70 cubits high, the whole Temple could be viewed. A Roman legion formed its garrison. Subterranean passages connected it with the Temple cloisters, and through these the Roman soldiers poured down to repress the constantly occurring disturbances in the Temple courts.

Of the places above mentioned, the Court of the Women was the scene of our Lord's Temple teachings. In the Treasury, at its northern end, He taught (John viii. 20); over against the Treasury, He sat and watched the people casting in their alms (Mark xii. 41). It was the Court of the Gentiles He purified from the moneychangers; and in Solomon's Porch, at its east end, He walked in the winter (John x. 22). To the same porch gathered all the people greatly wondering (Acts iii. 11), after Peter and John had healed the lame beggar who sat at the Beautiful Gate (the gate between the courts of the Gentiles and the women). Inside the Chel, and in the Court of the Women, the Jews from Asia laid hands on Paul. They dragged him down the 14 steps into the Court of the Gentiles (the Temple gates being shut behind), and then from the Tower of Antonia through the cloisters the chief captain of the band ran down to rescue him (Acts xxi.). Our Lord in the Court of the Men of Israel at the Feast of Tabernacles watched the priest bring the water from the Pool of Siloam through the water-gate and pour it upon the altar of burnt-offering (John vii.). The veil which was rent at Christ's Crucifixion hung between the Holy Place and the Holy of Holies.

In A.D. 70, on the evening of the anniversary of the destruction of the first Temple, Herod's Temple was taken and destroyed by the army of Titus. A temple to Jupiter Capitolinus was erected on the site by Hadrian. Julian attempted to restore the Jewish worship, but fire is said to have burst out from the ruins, stopped the work, and slain some of the workmen.

The Temple on Mount Gerizim.

Jos. (Ant. xi. viii. 2) gives the following account of its erection: Manasseh, brother of Jaddua the high priest, was threatened by the Jews with deprivation of his sacerdotal dignity because of a marriage he had contracted with a foreign woman. His father-in-law, Sanballat, obtained permission from Alexander the Great, then besieging Tyre, to build a temple on Mount Gerizim. Manasseh was its first high priest. It became the refuge of all Jews who had violated the precepts of the Mosaic Law. With this account must be compared Neh. xiii. 28, which from the names and circumstances probably relates to the same event. Josephus places the event 90 years later than the Bible. The establishment of the counterfeit worship on Gerizim embittered and perpetuated the schism between the Jews and the Samaritans. The Samaritans altered their copies of the Pentateuch by substituting Gerizim for Ebal in Deut. xxvii. 4, and by making an interpolation in Ex. xx., and so claimed divine authority for the site of their Temple. Antiochus Epiphanes, at the request of the Samaritans, consecrated it to Jupiter, the defender of strangers (Jos. Ant. xii. v. 5; 2 Macc. vi. 2). John Hyrcanus destroyed it (109 B.C.). Though the Emperor Zeno (474-491 A.D.) ejected the Samaritans from Gerizim, it has continued to be the chief sacred place of the Samaritan community. There the Paschal Lamb has been almost continuously offered by them up to the present day.

Priests. The Hebrew word for priest has nothing essentially sacerdotal about it, and is apparently not restricted to those who held the sacerdotal office (2 Sam. viii. 16-18; cf. 1 Chron. xviii. 17).

The essential idea of a priest was that of a mediator between his people and God by representing them officially in worship and sacrifice. In virtue of his office he was able to draw nigh to God, whilst they, because of their sins and infirmities, must needs stand afar off. The priest exercised his office mainly at the altar by offering the sacrifices and above all the incense (Num. xvi. 40, xviii. 2, 3, 5, 7; Deut. xxxiii. 10); but also by teaching the people the Law (Deut. xxxiii. 10; Lev. x. 10, 11; Mal. ii. 7); by communicating to them the divine will (Num. xvii. 21); and by blessing them in the name of the Lord (Num. vi. 22-27).

The priest (a) does not take his office upon himself but is chosen of God (Num. xvi. 5; Heb. v. 4). In an especial sense he (b) belongs to God (Num. xvi. 5); and (c) is holy to Him (Num. xvi. 5).

The priests must be (1) Aaron's sons (Num. xvi. 3-10, 40, xviii. 1); (2) free from all important bodily blemishes or infirmities or diseases; they were (3) under special restrictions with respect to (a) uncleanness for the dead, (b) marriage, (c) wine or strong drink when engaged in sacerdotal duties (Lev. x. 9); (4) the ordinary universal prohibitions were specially binding on them; (5) their families were under special and stricter laws, and liable to severer punishments than the rest of the people.

N.B. Nothing is specified in the Law as to the age at which a priest might begin to exercise his office. Levites were qualified according to the Law at 30 or 25 (Num. iv. 3, &c. and viii. 23-26), and according to later usage at 20 (1 Chron. xxiii. 24, 27). Aristobulus, the last of the Hasmonean high priests, officiated when in the 17th year of his age (Jos. Ant. xv. iii. 3).

Consecration to the priestly office consisted of two parts, (a) ceremonial, (b) sacrificial, corresponding in significance:

(a) (1) The priests were washed at the door of the Tabernacle. (2) They were clothed with the priestly garments (coats, girdles, and head-tires). (3) They were anointed

(Ex. xl. 15) with holy oil. (b) Three sacrifices were offered: (1) A bullock as a sin-offering, to put away their sin. (2) A ram as a burnt-offering, to indicate the full and complete surrender of themselves to God. (3) A ram as a peace or consecration offering. The blood of the ram was put upon the tip of the priest's right ear, the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot. Obedience to the divine voice and activity in the divine service were thus symbolized. The priest's hands were filled (cf. 1 Kings xiii. 33, "consecrated him," Heb. 'filled his hand') with the fat, the kidneys, the right thigh or shoulder, and part of the meal-offering. The gifts which henceforward they would offer on behalf of the people to the Lord were thus committed to them.

For the maintenance of the priests were assigned (1) Portions of the Altar Offerings; viz. the whole of the sin and guilt offerings (except the fat), and the meal-offerings, except the small portion burnt on the altar (Num. xviii. 9); the skin of the burnt-offering (Lev. vii. 8); the wave breast and the heave thigh of the peace-offerings (Lev. vii. 34). (2) The First-fruits. Specially of the seven products of Palestine (Deut. viii. 8, wheat, barley, oil, wine, figs, pomegranates, and honey); but also of all kinds of fruits (Num. xviii. 13; Deut. xxvi. 2); of dough (Num. xv. 20, 21; Neh. x. 37); of the fleece of sheep (Deut. xxviii. 4). There was also the heave-offering, i.e. the gift of the best of the produce of the soil (Num. xviii. 12; cf. Neh. x. 35 with x. 37). (3) The Firstborn. (a) The redemption money, in the case of man (five shekels, Num. xviii. 16) and unclean beasts (one-fifth more than the priest's estimation, Lev. xxvii. 27). (b) The clean beasts themselves (Num. xviii. 15-17). (4) The Tithes of the Levitical Tithes (Num. xviii. 26-28). (5) The Votive Offerings. Some of these were given to the service of the Sanctuary, but things devoted (cherem) were the priest's (Lev. xxvii. 21). (6) Certain cities (13 in number, all in Judah, Simeon and Benjamin) with their suburbs; but the priests were to have no part or inheritance in the land (Num. xviii. 20; Josh. xxi. 13-19). It will be noted that the priests' provision depended on Israel's devotion to God and obedience to the Law. That the provision was practically insufficient may be gathered from the following facts: the undue exactions of Eli's sons, the (predicted) poverty of his house, the hireling priesthood of Micah's days (iii. 11), the ill payment of priestly dues in the days immediately succeeding the Exile, the solemn engagement to pay them under Nehemiah (Neh. x. 35-39), quickly broken (Neh. xiii. 5, 10; cf. also Mal. i. 6-14, iii. 8, &c.).

David divided the priestly families into twenty-four courses. Four only returned from the Captivity, and these were again subdivided into twenty-four. Each course officiated for a week at a time, the change being made on the Sabbath between the morning and evening sacrifices. All the courses officiated together at the great festivals. In later times the priests next in rank to the high priest were, the Sagan (perhaps the Captain of the Temple, Acts iv. 1), the chiefs of the different courses, and the treasurers (the administrators of the Temple property). The chief priests, i.e. the members of the high-priestly families, were also persons of the greatest consequence in the Sanhedrin and in all national affairs.

The high priest's function was to bear the iniquity of the holy things offered by the people as sacrifices for the covering of their sin and uncleanness (Ex. xxviii. 38). The atonement of Israel thus rested ultimately on the shoulders of the high priest. Plainly they were unable to bear the burden (Heb. vii. 26-28).

His main duties were, (1) to perform the service of the Day of Atonement, and (2) to inquire God's will by the Urim and Thummim in the breastplate of his office. Besides these he had the duties of an ordinary priest, and it was the custom for him to offer the sacrifices on Sabbaths, new moons, and yearly festivals (Jos. De Bell. Jud. v. v. 7). He had also to offer a meal-offering twice daily for himself (Lev. vi. 19-23).

His consecration differed from that of ordinary priests in the two particulars of anointing and robing. On the high priest's head alone was the anointing oil poured (Lev. xxi. 10; Ps. cxxxiii. 2); and his garments were of special significance and magnificence.

His garments were, (1) linen breeches or drawers (Ex. xxvii. 42), reaching from the loins unto the thighs. (2) Tunic or shirt of fine linen with a girdle (Ex. xxviii. 39). (3) The Robe of the Ephod (Ex. xxviii. 31), all of blue. It had a hole at the top for the neck, and the hem at the lower extremity was ornamented with pomegranates and golden bells alternately. By the bells the children of Israel were able to follow their representative in sound though not in sight when he went to the holy place (Ex. xxviii. 35). (4) The Ephod (Ex. xxviii. 6, &c.). A sort of waistcoat with two shoulder-pieces of divers colours, and a girdle of the same materials. On the shoulder-pieces were two onyx stones on which were engraved the names of the twelve tribes, so that Aaron might bear their names on his shoulders for a memorial before the Lord. N.B. An ephod of linen seems to have become the dress of all priests (1 Sam. xxii. 18). It was also worn by Samuel (1 Sam. ii. 18) when ministering before the Lord, and by David (2 Sam. vi. 14) when he brought up the ark. (5) The Breastplate of Judgement, which was fastened upon the ephod by means of clasps and rings of gold, and was of similar work and texture to it (Ex. xxviii. 15). Upon it were placed the stones containing the names of the twelve tribes, so that Aaron might bear the names of the children of Israel on his heart when he went into the holy place. Within the breastplate were placed the Urim and Thummim—the mysterious means by which God was consulted and His will ascertained (Num. xxvii. 21). We find it used in Saul and David's time, but not afterwards. It was missing, but its restoration was hoped for, in the second Temple (Ezra ii. 63). (6) The Mitre. On the high priest's head was the mitre or turban, made of fine linen (Ex. xxxix. 28). Upon the forefront and attached to it by a blue lace was a plate or crown of pure gold (Ex. xxviii. 36, xxix. 6). On the plate was engraved the legend, "Holiness to the Lord."

The Levites were given to the priests to do the service of the children of Israel in the Tent of Meeting and to make an atonement for the children of Israel (Num. viii. 19). They might be regarded in two ways: (1) as forming with the priests the sacerdotal caste, or (2) as the distinct inferior order of the clergy. So we find that the Levites have not the priesthood (Num. xvi. 10, xviii. 1-7), though they minister to the priests (Num. xviii. 2). They have the charge of the Tent, but they are not to come nigh unto the vessels of the Sanctuary and unto the altar (Num. xviii. 3-5). They stand in a middle place between priests and people (Num. iii. 5-10, viii. 19). To them was committed the charge of taking down, carrying and setting up the Tabernacle (Num. i. 50, 51), and also of carrying the sacred vessels and the ark (Deut. x. 8, xxxi. 25). In later times the Levites were the musicians (1 Chron. vi. 16, 31, xv. 16; Neh. xi. 17, 22), and doorkeepers (Neh. xi. 19) of the Temple; they slaughtered the sacrifices (2 Chron. xxix. 34, xxxv. 11; Ezra vi. 20), and had the oversight of the outward business of the house of God (Neh. xi. 16).

The Levites were not consecrated but cleansed for their office (Num. viii. 7). (1) They were sprinkled with water of expiation. (2) They were shaved over the whole flesh. (3) Their clothes were washed (N.B. there were no special Levitical clothes). (4) The hands of the people were laid upon them. (5) Sacrifices were offered. (a) The Levites themselves were offered as a wave-offering on behalf of the children of Israel (Num. viii. 11, 15). (b) Two bullocks were offered as burnt-offerings (ibid. ver. 12). They became thus God's peculiar property, wholly given unto Him in place of the first-born (Num. viii. 16).

The Levites had no portion or inheritance (Num. xviii. 23, 24): but they had (1) all the tithe in Israel (Num. xviii. 21), (2) certain cities, 48 in number, with their suburbs (Num. xxxv. 6), (3) a claim on the alms and kindly feeling of the people at the times of feasting (Deut. xii. 18, 19, xiv. 27, 29).

As the Levites were given to the priests to be their ministers, so certain persons of foreign extraction were given to the Levites to perform the menial work of the services and sacrifices. These were the Nethinim (i.e. given ones). Amongst them may be reckoned the one-fiftieth part of the Midianite captives (Num. xxxi. 46, 47); the Gibeonites (Josh. ix. 27); and the men whom David and the princes appointed (i.e. gave) (Ezra viii. 20). Solomon's servants (Ezra ii. 55; cf. 1 Kings ix. 21) were a similar but distinct class. The Nethinim and the children of Solomon's servants returned as organized bodies after the Exile. The Nethinim with the other ministers of the Temple were made free of taxes by the edict of Artaxerxes (Ezra vii. 24). They had their own particular task in rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem, and their own particular residence, the tower of Ophel (Neh. iii. 26).

Offerings. In all the animal sacrifices of the Mosaic Law there were six important acts. (1) The presentation of the sacrifice at the Sanctuary door. This must be done by the sacrificer himself, as his personal act. (2) The laying on of hands. The sacrificer leaned or pressed his hands upon the victim's head. The laying on of hands (cf. Lev. xvi. 21; Num. xxvii. 18, 20; Deut. xxxiv. 9) dedicated the animal to God, and made it the sacrificer's representative and substitute (Num. viii. 10; Lev. i. 4). (3) The slaughtering of the animal. The sacrificer himself slew his sacrifice (at the N. side of the altar), and thus carried out actually the dedication to God which he had ceremonially expressed by the laying on of hands. N.B. The later custom was for the Levites or priests to slaughter the victims. (4) The pouring out or sprinkling of the blood. The priest collected the blood of the animal in a vessel, and applied it in various ways and places according to the nature of the sacrifice. It was the priests' office to make an atonement (Lev. iv. 26), and they made it by the blood (Ex. xxx. 10; Lev. viii. 15, xvi. 16, xvii. 11). (5) Burning the sacrifice on the altar. After the priest had properly prepared the sacrificial victim he offered it (the whole or the fat only) upon the altar of burnt-offering. This act symbolized the consecration of the worshipper to Jehovah. (6) The sacrificial meal (in the case of the peace-offering only). The fat having been burnt and the priests' pieces removed, the rest of the flesh was eaten by the sacrificer, his household, and the poorer Levites at the Tabernacle. This sacrificial meal represented the mystical union between Jehovah and His people and the joy resulting from it.

The ritual of the three different kinds of animal sacrifices was identical in regard to the Presentation, the Imposition of hands, and the Slaughtering by the offerer himself. The differences related to the blood, and the method of appropriation of the offering by Jehovah. The blood of the Sin (not Trespass) offering was put (smeared) upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering in ordinary cases; it was sprinkled against the veil seven times and put upon the horns of the altar of incense in the sin-offerings of the high priest and the whole congregation; it was also sprinkled on the front of the mercy-seat in the sin-offering of the Day of Atonement. The remainder of the blood was poured out at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering. The blood of the Trespass, Burnt, and Peace offerings was sprinkled on the altar of burnt-offering round about.

The fat of the Sin (and Trespass) offering, as the choicest part of the flesh, was burnt upon the altar. The remainder of the flesh was eaten in a holy place by the priest and his sons (in ordinary cases); it was burnt (along with its head, skin, &c.) outside the camp (when the blood had been brought within the Holy Place). The whole of the Burnt-offering, after the skin (the priest's perquisite) had been removed, was burnt upon the altar. The fat of the Peace-offering was burnt upon the altar. The wave breast (the portion of the priests generally) and the heave thigh (the portion of the officiating priest) were eaten by their sons and their daughters in a clean place. The rest was given back to the sacrificers for them with their families and the Levites to eat at the Sanctuary in a sacred feast.

The Sin-offering was a young bullock for priests as individuals or as representatives of the people; a he-goat for the people collectively and on the holy days, and for a prince of the congregation; a she-goat or she-lamb for ordinary persons; two turtle-doves or two young pigeons for purification from uncleanness, and for the poor instead of a lamb; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for those unable to bring doves or pigeons. The Trespass-offering was a ram; except in the cases of lepers and Nazirites, when it was a lamb. The Burnt-offering might be made with male bullocks, rams, or he-goats without blemish; turtle-doves or pigeons of either sex in cases of poverty. The Peace-offering might be made with oxen, sheep, or goats without blemish, whether male or female. Certain blemishes were admissible in the particular case of vows. Meal-offerings or Minchahs were offered along with burnt and peace (but not sin) offerings.

The fundamental idea of the Sin and Trespass offerings was atonement, expiation. They implied that an interruption of friendly relations between Jehovah and the sacrificer had taken place. There was a sin, or some uncleanness akin to a sin, which needed covering, atoning for, before fellowship with Jehovah could be renewed. Sins committed with a high hand, and for which the punishment was death, did not admit of expiation under the Mosaic Law (Num. xv. 30, 31). Atonement could be made for (1) unconscious, unintentional sins (Lev. iv. 2, 22, 27, v. 15, 17); (2) non-capital crimes (e.g. theft), after punishment had been endured (Lev. vi. 2, 6, xix. 20-22); (3) crimes which a man voluntarily confessed, and for which he made (if possible) compensation (Lev. v. 5).

Trespass or guilt offerings were a particular kind of sin-offerings. All sins were transgressions of the laws of the covenant; but certain sins might be regarded as a robbery, or a violation of right, or an injury, whether in relation to (a) God directly, regarded as King of Israel, by neglecting some rites and services, payments and offerings; or (b) Man directly (whether Israelite or foreigner), by depriving him of some just claim and right. In either case these sins were regarded as breaches of the covenant between Jehovah and His people, requiring compensation.

This compensation was made (1) Ethically, by the trespass-offering (Lev. v. 15), (2) Materially, by making restitution. The holy thing kept back from God, or the property stolen or withheld from man, was restored, a fifth part of their values being added in each case. In certain cases this compensation was made by suffering punishment. The trespass-offerings were the same for all kinds of persons. The sin-offerings were graduated according to the position or means of the offerer.

The Burnt-offering got its Hebrew name from the idea of the smoke of the sacrifice ascending to heaven. The characteristic rite was the burning of the whole animal on the altar (Lev. i. 9; Deut. xxxiii. 10). The special idea was the complete self-surrender and devotion of the sacrificer to Jehovah. As this obligation to surrender was constant on the part of Israel, a burnt-offering, called the continual burnt-offering, was offered twice daily, morning and evening.

Peace-offerings, as the name indicates, presupposed that the sacrificer was at peace with God, and were offered for the attestation, acknowledgment, and further realization and enjoyment of that peace. The characteristic rite was the sacrificial meal. A feast symbolized fellowship and friendship amongst all its partakers and providers, and also a state of joy and gladness (Luke xiv. 15; Ps. xxiii. 5; Matt. xxii. 1, &c.). The peace-offering thus symbolized a higher state of spiritual experience than the sin or burnt offering.

There seem to have been three different kinds of Peace-offerings, known by the name of Thank-offerings, Votive offerings, Freewill offerings (Lev. xxii. 18, 29). The first (the most common) were grateful acknowledgments of mercies received, and were offered on festivals, ordinary or special (Lev. xxiii. 19; 1 Kings viii. 63). The second were the payment of promised vows. The third had probably a supplicatory character, offered under no compulsion of gratitude or vow. Peace-offerings of this kind were offered along with the burnt-offerings in times of trouble to obtain the needed blessings (Judg. xx. 26, xxi. 4; 1 Sam. xiii. 9; 2 Sam. xxiv. 25).

In the rite of the peace-offering, the ceremonies of waving (the breast) and heaving (the shoulder or thigh) should be noticed.

It is noteworthy that when the three offerings were offered together, the sin always preceded the burnt, and the burnt the peace offerings. Thus the order of the symbolizing sacrifices was the order of the symbolized graces, Atonement, Sanctification, Mystical union and fellowship.

The word Minchah, used frequently of gifts made to men (Gen. xliii. 11), and occasionally of bloody offerings (Gen. iv. 4), specially denotes an unbloody or meal offering. The essential materials of the Minchah were corn and wine. The corn was either (1) corn in the ear, parched and bruised, or (2) fine flour, or (3) unleavened cakes. Oil was never absent from the Minchah, but whether as an essential or accompanying element is doubtful. It was always seasoned with salt (Lev. ii. 13), and was offered along with incense. Leaven and honey, as fermenting substances, were excluded from its preparation. The Minchah could not be offered with a sin-offering, and on the other hand no burnt or peace offering was complete without it. A portion of the Minchah, called the memorial, was placed on the altar of burnt-offering, the remainder was treated like the remainder of the sin-offering, viz. eaten by the priests in a holy place. The wine was probably poured out on the sacrifice, or at the base of the altar. The incense was wholly consumed.

Unbloody offerings, of the nature of a Minchah, were offered in the Holy Place on its three pieces of furniture, viz. oil in its candlestick, incense on its altar of incense, loaves with incense and a drink-offering on its table of shewbread.

Daily Service. The Law ordered that a yearling lamb, with its proper meal and drink offerings, should be offered every morning and every evening as a burnt-offering (Ex. xxix. 38—42). This was the continual burnt-offering, never omitted, at least in later times, except in the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, and for about three weeks before the taking of Jerusalem by Titus. In the Holy Place, every morning and evening, sweet incense was burnt upon the altar of incense (Ex. xxx. 7, 8). According to the Law, the seven lamps of the golden candlestick were lighted every evening (Ex. xxx. 7, 8) and burned through the night only; but according to Josephus three (Ant. iii. viii. 3), and according to the Talmud one, of these lamps burned all day. From Lev. vi. 20 (cf. Jos. Ant. iii. x. 7) we gather that the high priest offered a meal-offering twice every day, probably in connexion with the daily burnt-offering. The offering of the daily sacrifices was, from the times of the kings, accompanied with (1) Music, vocal and instrumental (the priests used trumpets, the Levites used instruments of David, 2 Chron. xxix. 27, 28; Ecclus. i. 16, 18); (2) Worship and Prayer on the part of the people present (2 Chron. xxix. 28; Ecclus. i. 17—19; Luke i. 10; Acts iii. 1); (3) Psalms, one being appointed for each day in the week (viz. Pss. xxiv., xlviii., lxxxii., xciv., lxxxi., xciii., xcii., see Septuagint titles of Pss. xcii., xciii.). Besides the public offerings, numerous private offerings were daily made. In later times daily offerings were also made on behalf of the Gentile authorities; the kings of Persia (Ezra vi. 9, 10); the kings of Syria (Demetrius, 1 Macc. vii. 33); the Roman emperors (Caligula) and Roman people (Jos. De Bell. Jud. ii. x. 4; c. Apion. ii. 6).

In Ex. xxx. 11—16, we find a payment of a half-shekel ordered from all male Israelites over 20 years of age, to be devoted to the service of the Tabernacle. But this was an extraordinary payment, and would not form a regular fund. Some of the votive offerings (Lev. xvii.) seem to have been assigned to the Sanctuary service. But before the Exile there was no regular maintenance fund, and the expenses of the sacrifices seem to have been defrayed (largely) by the kings (2 Kings xvi. 15; Ezek. xiv. 17). After the Exile, Nehemiah and the people bound themselves by a covenant to pay yearly one-third of a shekel for the service of the house of God (Neh. x. 32, 33). In the time of our Lord this payment had become half a shekel (Matt. xvii. 24—27). Beyond this Nehemiah established a wood-offering, to be brought at appointed times for altar use (Neh. x. 34). A festival of the wood-offering was held in later times on the 14th of the 5th month (De Bell. Jud. ii. xvii. 6). Votive and freewill offerings were accepted from the hands of Gentiles, and we find that kings at different times endowed sacrifices.

Prayer. Before the first generation of mankind had passed away, men began to call upon the name of the Lord (Gen. iv. 26). Prayers, whether with (Gen. xii. 8, xiii. 4) or without (Gen. xx. 7, xxxii. 9—11) sacrifice, were constantly offered by the patriarchs to God. The efficacy of the intercession of good men was recognised (Gen. xviii. 23, xx. 7; Ex. xxxii. 11). The blessings asked for were mostly of a temporal nature.

Prayer is nowhere commanded as a duty in the Law, and prayers were not prescribed at the sacrifices except on two occasions, viz. a confession of sin on the Day of Atonement (Lev. xvi. 21), and a thanksgiving when offering the firstfruits and tithes (Deut. xvi. 3, 13). It is however probable from the nature of things, and from the custom in later times, that prayer always accompanied sacrifice. Incense which accompanied sacrifices became the recognised type of prayer.

Even in the times of the Judges, the children of Israel did not forget to cry unto the Lord, and a model of prayer is furnished by Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 1, &c.). Samuel was recognised by his nation to be characteristically a man of prayer (1 Sam. vii. 5, 8, xii. 19, 23; Ps. xcix. 6). David's Psalms, and the Psalms generally, breathe the highest spirit of prayer. The nation who possessed them must have been rich in teachers and examples of prayer. Remarkable prayers were prayed by Solomon (1 Kings viii.); Hezekiah (2 Kings xix. 14, &c.; Is. xxxviii. 9, &c.); Ezra (Ezra ix. 5); the Levites (Neh. ix. 5, &c.), and Daniel (Dan. ix. 3, &c.). 'Making many prayers' was a part of the corrupt religion of Israel under the later kings (Is. i. 15), and a marked feature of the religion of the Pharisees (Matt. vi. 5, xxiii. 14).

It was the custom to pray three times a day. So David (Ps. lv. 17), Daniel (Dan. vi. 10) and the later Jews. Prayer was said before meat (1 Sam. ix. 13; Matt. xv. 36; Acts xxvii. 35).

The attitude of prayer (ordinarily) was standing (1 Sam. i. 26; Neh. ix. 2, 4; Matt. vi. 5; Mark xi. 25; Luke xviii. 11, 13); also kneeling (1 Kings viii. 54; Dan. vi. 10; Ezra ix. 5); or prostrate (Josh. vii. 6; Neh. viii. 6). The hands were spread forth to heaven (1 Kings viii. 22; Ezra ix. 5; Is. i. 15; Ps. cxli. 2). Smiting on the breast and rending of the garments signified special sorrow (Luke xviii.

13; Ezra ix. 5). N.B. Our Lord's attitude in prayer is recorded only once. In the Garden of Gethsemane He knelt (Luke xxii. 41), fell on His face (Matt. xxvi. 39), fell on the ground (Mark xiv. 35). It is noteworthy that SS. Stephen (Acts vii. 60), Peter (ix. 40), Paul (xx. 36, xxi. 5), and the Christians generally (xxi. 5), knelt to pray.

Prayers were said at the Sanctuary (1 Sam. i. 12; Ps. xlii. 2, 4; 1 Kings viii.). or looking towards the Sanctuary (1 Kings viii. 44, 48; Dan. vi. 10; Ps. v. 7); on the housetop or in an upper chamber (Acts x. 9; Dan. vi. 10). The Pharisees prayed publicly in the synagogues and at the corners of the streets (Matt. vi. 5). Our Lord prayed upon the tops of mountains (Matt. xiv. 23; Luke ix. 28), or in solitary places (Mark i. 35).

Holy Days and Seasons. The principles which underlay the institution or regulated the occurrence of the Jewish Feasts were of various kinds. (a) The Sacred Number 7 occurs again and again in the regulations of the Jewish festivals. The 7th day is a holy Sabbath. The 7th month is the sacred month. The 7th year is a Sabbatical year. The 7x7th year, or the year succeeding it, is the year of Jubilee. The Feasts of the Passover and of Tabernacles began 2x7 days after the beginning of the month, and lasted 7 days. The Feast of Pentecost was celebrated 7x7 days after the Feast of the Passover. There were 7 days of Holy Convocation in the whole year. (b) The Changes of the Moon had the chief influence in determining the dates of the yearly festivals. The Hebrew months being lunar, the two principal feasts (Passover and Tabernacles) beginning on the 15th day of the month were celebrated at the Full Moon. Every New Moon was a festival, and that of the 7th month was a day of solemn Convocation. (c) The three great feasts of the year (Passover, Pentecost, Tabernacles) marked different stages of the harvest of the earth, viz. the beginning of the harvest, the completion of the corn harvest, and the completion of the harvest of fruit, oil and wine. (d) The three great festivals commemorated three great events in the history of Israel: viz. the Redemption from Egypt, the Giving of the Law (so the later Jews only), the Wanderings in the Wilderness (Lev. xxiii. 43). On the feasts of Purim and the Dedication see p. 223.

The Sabbath was instituted to commemorate God's seventh day of rest at the Creation, and also the redemption from Egyptian bondage (Deut. v. 15). The daily sacrifices were doubled; the loaves of the shewbread were changed; the people abstained from all manner of work, and it was a day of holy assembly.

The Sabbath was in some sense a holy day before the giving of the Law, possibly from the earliest times [cf. the account of the Creation, Gen. ii. 2, 3, the sacredness of the number 7, the narrative of the Manna (Ex. xvi. 23-30), and the narrative of Num. xv. 32-36 (cf. v. 34)]; but we have no evidence of its observance in Patriarchal times. Beyond the incidental and indirect allusion to it in 1 Sam. xxi. 5 the Sabbath institution is not referred to after the Exodus till the days of the kings (2 Kings iv. 23, xi. 5-7). The earlier prophets class it along with other holy days of the Jewish ceremonial law, and lay no stress on its observance (Is. i. 13; Hos. ii. 11; Amos viii. 5). It is not till the times of the Exile (unless Is. lvi. 6, lviii. 13 are exceptions) that Sabbath observance is regarded as a primary duty and Sabbath violation stated to be one of the most grievous of the national sins (Jer. xvii. 20-27; Ezek. xx. 12, 13, 16). After the return from the Exile, Nehemiah made the observance of the Sabbath one of the chief points of his reformation (x. 31, xlii. 15-22), and the strictness with which it was kept by the Jews became a notorious fact. Sabbath-keeping is noted by profane writers as the distinctive custom of the Jewish race, and the pages of the New Testament and the Talmud bear in different ways abundant testimony to the scrupulous, excessive, and superstitious reverence with which it was regarded. From the times of the Maccabees it was decided to be lawful to repel, though not to make, an attack on the Sabbath (Ant. xii. vi. 2, xiv. iv. 2, 3). The Jews were still at a great disadvantage, as their enemies were able to push forward their preparations for attack (forts and banks) unhindered.

As the seventh day in every week, and the seventh month in every year, so also every seventh year was consecrated to the Lord. The land, inasmuch as it was the Lord's, was to keep a Sabbath unto Him (Lev. xxv. 2). In this year the self-sown produce of the arable lands was to be left for the poor and the beasts of the field; and the fruit of the unpruned vineyards (and oliveyards) was not to be harvested, but to be left to its owner, his family and servants, the stranger sojourning with him, his cattle, and the wild beasts. A release of debts owed by Israelite to Israelite was made. The year was intended to be not simply a year of leisure, but also of religious instruction and exercises. To mark this, at the Feast of Tabernacles (i.e. at the commencement of the Sabbatical year, for it began with the 7th month) the whole Law was read in the hearing of the people.

We know that the law of the Sabbatical year was habitually broken by the Jews for a long period before the Babylonian Exile. The 70 years of exile and the land's desolation were regarded as making up for the unobserved Sabbaths of the land (2 Chron. xxxvi. 21). After the return from exile Nehemiah bound the Jews by a covenant to keep them (Neh. x. 31), and we know from the history that this was commonly done. Alexander the Great and Julius Caesar released the Jews from payment of tribute in the Sabbatical years (Ant. xi. viii. 5, xiv. x. 6).

It is doubtful whether the Year of Jubilee was the 7th Sabbatical year, or the year succeeding it; but the words of Lev. xxv. 8, 10 favour the latter interpretation. In this case two Sabbatical years would come together. The Year of Jubilee was proclaimed by the sound of a trumpet (whence its name) on the Day of Atonement. Liberty was restored to the slave, the alienated possession was restored to the hereditary owner. Dwelling-houses in walled non-Levitical cities were an exception to this rule (Lev. xxv. 29). We have no record anywhere of the observance of the Year of Jubilee, but the prophets allude to it in several passages.

The Law appointed that, at the New Moons, special sacrifices should be offered, and that trumpets should be blown for a memorial before God (Num. x. 10). The new moon of the 7th month (New Year's Day) was a Sabbath and day of holy Convocation, and it was called the day of the blowing of trumpets (Lev. xxiii. 24, 25). From the history we gather that the New Moons were commonly observed. They are days of feasts and family sacrifices (1 Sam. xx. 5, 6, 29), sacred instruction (2 Kings iv. 23), and rest from work (Amos viii. 5). The prophets often speak of them along with 'Sabbaths.'

As the days of the celebration of all the great Feasts of the Jews were reckoned by the moon, the exact time of the appearance of the new moon was a matter of great importance. Watchers were placed on the heights round Jerusalem to bring the news of its appearance with all speed to the Sanhedrin, who proclaimed it as soon as satisfactory evidence was given. Watch-fires on the hill-tops told the news to distant Jewish cities and colonies. It is said the Samaritans, in spite and to cause confusion, lighted fires on their hills at wrong times.

The Yearly Feasts. The Law commanded that three times a year all the males of the chosen people were to appear before the Lord in the place which He should choose, viz. in the Feast of Unleavened Bread, in the Feast of Weeks, and in the Feast of Tabernacles (Ex. xxiii. 14-17; Deut. xvi. 16). This ordinance presupposed a state of settled peace rarely if ever realized in the history of the chosen people in O.T. times. It was not and could not be generally or even frequently observed. Elkanah, a pious Israelite of the times of the later Judges, went up to Shiloh once a year (1 Sam. i. 3). In N.T. times the case was altered. The Jews came up from all parts of the world to keep their three great feasts.

The Feast of the Passover was instituted to commemorate the passing over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt when God smote the firstborn of the Egyptians, and more generally the redemption from Egypt (Ex. xii. 27, xiii. 15). In the night of the first Passover the firstborn of the Egyptians were slain, and the next day the children of Israel began their journey from Egypt to the Promised Land.

The first Passover differed somewhat from those succeeding it. On the 10th Abib (= March or April) a male lamb (or kid) of the first year, without blemish, was chosen, for each family or two small families in Israel. It was slain by the whole congregation between the evenings (i.e. between sunset and total darkness) of the 14th Abib, and its blood sprinkled on the lintel and two side-posts of the doors of the houses. It was roast with fire and no bone of it was broken. It was eaten standing, ready for a journey, and in haste, with unleavened loaves and bitter herbs. Anything left was burnt with fire, and no persons went out of their houses until the morning.

Three great changes or developments were made almost immediately in the nature of the Feast of the Passover: (1) It lost its domestic character, and became a Sanctuary feast. (2) A seven days' feast of unleavened bread (hence its usual name), with special offerings, was added (Ex. xii. 15; Num. xxviii. 16-25). The first and seventh days were Sabbaths and days of holy Convocation. (3) The feast was connected with the harvest. On the morrow after the Sabbath (=16th Abib probably) a sheaf of the firstfruits of the harvest (barley) was waved before the Lord (Lev. xxiii. 10-14).

In later times the following ceremonies were added: (1) The history of the redemption from Egypt was related by the head of the household (cf. Ex. xii. 26, 27). (2) Four cups of wine mixed with water were drunk at different stages of the feast (cf. Luke xxii. 17, 20; 1 Cor. x. 16, the cup of blessing). (3) The Pss. cxiii.-cxviii. (the Hallel) were sung. (4) The various materials of the feast were dipped in a sauce. (5) The feast was not eaten standing, but reclining. (6) The Levites (at least on some occasions) slew the sacrifices. (7) Voluntary peace-offerings called Chagigah were offered. Of these there are traces in the Law and in the history (Num. x. 10; 2 Chron. xxx. 22-24, xxxv. 13). (8) A second Passover for those prevented by ceremonial uncleanness from keeping the Passover at the proper time was instituted by Moses (Num. ix. 10, &c.) on the 14th day of the second month. This was called the Little Passover.

The Passovers of historical importance are few in number. After the passovers in Egypt (Ex. xii.), the desert (Num. ix.), and Canaan (Gilgal) after the circumcision of the people (Josh. v.), no celebration is recorded till the times of Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxx.). This passover was remarkable for its postponement to the second month, its duplication, the multitudes who attended it, and the violation of the rule of ceremonial cleanness. No passover like that of Josiah (2 Chron. xxxv.) had been known in Israel all the days of the kings since the days of Samuel the prophet. One passover is recorded in the Bible after the Captivity (Ezra vi. 19). In later times the passovers were remarkable, (a) for the number of Jews from all parts of the world who attended them, (b) for the tumults which arose and the terrible consequent massacres. So in the times of Archelaus (Jos. Ant. xvii. ix. 3), Cumanus (xx. v. 3), and at the commencement of the siege of Jerusalem (De Bell. Jud. v. iii. 1; cf. Matt. xxvi. 5). Two passovers of the deepest interest were, the passover of the Death of our Lord, and the last passover of the Jewish dispensation. Titus with his army shut up in Jerusalem those who came to keep the latter. The city was thus overcrowded, and the sufferings of the besieged by famine, &c. were terribly increased. Since the destruction of Jerusalem the Jews have kept the Feast of Unleavened Bread, but not the Feast of the Passover. The Passover is still eaten by the colony of Samaritans on Gerizim.

Fifty days (Lev. xxiii. 16) after the Feast of the Passover the Feast of Pentecost was kept. During those 50 days the harvest of corn was being gathered in. It is called (Ex. xxiii. 16) "the feast of harvest, the firstfruits of thy labours," and (Deut. xvi. 10) "the feast of weeks." The feast lasted a single day, which was a day of holy Convocation (Lev. xxiii. 21); and the characteristic rite was the new meal offering, viz. two loaves of leavened bread made of fine flour of new wheat. Special animal sacrifices were also made (Lev. xxiii. 18) and freewill offerings (Deut. xvi. 10). The festival was prolonged in later times, and huge numbers of Jews attended it. Of this the narrative in Acts ii. is sufficient proof. It had the same evil reputation as the Feast of the Passover for tumults and massacres (De Bell. Jud. ii. iii. 1). We have no record of the celebration of this feast in the Old Testament.

The Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. xxiii. 34) or of Ingathering (Ex. xxiii. 16), called by later Jews The Feast (John vii. 37), and reckoned by them to be the greatest and most joyful of all, was celebrated on the fifteenth to twenty-first days of the seventh month. To the seven days was added an eighth ("the last day, that great day of the feast," John vii. 37), a day of holy Convocation, which marked the ending not only of this particular feast but of the whole festival season. The events celebrated were the sojourning of the children of Israel in the Wilderness (Lev. xxiii. 43), and the gathering-in of all the fruits of the year (Ex. xxiii. 16). The sacrifices prescribed by the Law were more numerous than for any other feast, and impressive ceremonies were added in later times, viz. (1) the drawing of water from Siloam and its libation on the altar (of this it was said that he who has not seen the joy of the drawing of water at the Feast of Tabernacles does not know what joy is); and (2) the illumination of the Temple courts by four golden candelabra. To these ceremonies our Lord refers in John vii. 37, viii. 12. (3) The making of a canopy of willows over the altar. The characteristic rite of the Feast of Tabernacles was the dwelling in booths made of the boughs of trees. This rite seems to have been neglected from the time of Joshua to the time of Ezra (Neh. viii. 17). It is practised by the Jews of modern times. Remarkable celebrations of the Feast of Tabernacles took place at the opening of Solomon's Temple (1 Kings viii. 2; 2 Chron. v. 3, vii. 8), and in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah (Neh. viii. 14). Jeroboam adapted this feast to the later seasons of the northern kingdom (1 Kings xii. 32). Zechariah in prophetic imagery represents the nations as coming up to Jerusalem to keep the Feast of Tabernacles, and describes the curse which should fall on those who did not come (Zech. xiv. 16-19).

The Feast of Purim (called Mordecai's Day, 2 Macc. xv. 36) was instituted by Mordecai and confirmed by Esther, to commemorate the overthrow of Haman and the failure of his plots against the Jews (Esth. ix. 20-32). The name Purim (=lots) was given in mockery of the lots which Haman had cast to secure a day of good omen for his enterprise (Esth. iii. 7). The feast was held on the 14th and 15th of Adar (the twelfth month); the 13th of Adar, which was originally a feast to commemorate Nicanor's death (1 Macc. vii. 49; 2 Macc. xv. 36), afterwards became a fast, called the Fast of Esther, in preparation for the feast. During the feast the whole book of Esther was read in the synagogues, and all Israelites, men, women, children and slaves were bound to be present. The reading was accompanied by clapping of hands, stamping of feet and clamorous curses on Haman and the Jews' enemies, and blessings on Mordecai, Esther, &c. The feast was celebrated with great joy, shewn by distributing gifts. It was the Christmas of Jewish feasts.

The Feast of the Dedication was instituted in the days of Judas Maccabeus to commemorate the dedication of the new altar of burnt-offering after the profanation of the Temple and the old altar by Antiochus Epiphanes. The feast began on the 25th Chisleu, the anniversary of the profanation in 168 B.C. and the dedication in 165 B.C., and lasted eight days, during which no fast or mourning for any calamity or bereavement was allowed. It was kept like the Feast of Tabernacles with great gladness and with the bearing of the branches of palms and of other trees. There was also a general illumination, from which circumstance the feast got the name of the Feast of Lights (Jos. Ant. xii. vii. 7). The Jews attempted to stone Jesus when He was walking in the Temple in Solomon's porch during this feast (John x. 22).

Fasts. Only one fast (that of the Day of Atonement) was prescribed by the Mosaic Law. Fasts commemorating different stages in the siege of Jerusalem were instituted during the Babylonian Exile (Zech. vii. 3-5, viii. 19). Fasting became a regular and systematic religious custom after the Exile; and so we find it in the time of our Lord in the case of the Pharisees (Luke v. 33, xviii. 12), and the ascetical Essenes. Extraordinary fasts (individual and national) seem to have been common at all periods of Israelitish history. By fasting a man humbled himself before his God, his supplications were thus rendered more efficacious, and (in consequence) God's wrath and the threatened punishment were averted. Fasting consisted, (a) in entire abstinence from food (Jonah iii. 7, 8), whether till the evening (Judg. xx. 26), or even longer (night and day, Esth. iv. 16), or (b) in abstinence from pleasant food and flesh and wine (Dan. x. 3). Along with the fasting were combined other ceremonies signifying sorrow and humiliation, i.e. rending of the garments, putting on of sackcloth, strewing ashes on the head or lying in ashes, sitting in the dust, refraining from washing the face or anointing with oil (2 Sam. xii. 20; 1 Kings xxi. 27; Is. lviii. 5; Lam. ii. 10; Jonah iii. 6; 1 Macc. iii. 47). Fasts were liable to become, and did become, mere formalities and hypocrisies. Notable instances may be found in 1 Kings xxi. 27 and Jer. xxxvi. 9. The danger of this was thoroughly recognised by the prophets (Is. lviii. 3-7; Joel ii. 12, 13; Zech. vii. 5, 6).

The Day of Atonement was the tenth day of the 7th month (Tisri). It was a day of holy convocation (Lev. xxiii. 27); and (under penalty of death) a day of fasting (v. 29)—hence called in later times The Fast (Acts xxvii. 9)—and solemn rest from all kind of work (vv. 28, 29). It was above all a day of atonement for sin, made by the high priest; for (a) the holy Sanctuary, (b) the Tent of Meeting and the Altar, (c) the Priesthood, (d) all the people of the assembly (Lev. xvi. 16). It had thus a national and not an individual character. By purging Priesthood, Sanctuary and people, it made Israel secure in its access to God.

The ritual of the Day of Atonement was specially solemn and instructive. The high priest having bathed his whole body and being clothed in white linen, took a bullock as a sin-offering and a ram as a burnt-offering for himself and his house; and two he-goats as a sin-offering and a ram as a burnt-offering for the congregation of Israel. He presented the bullock and the two goats before the door of the Tabernacle. He then cast lots upon the two goats. One was to be for the Lord for a sin-offering. The other was for Azazel (the completely separate one, the evil spirit regarded as dwelling in the desert), to be sent away alive into the wilderness. He then killed the bullock, his own sin-offering, and taking a censer full of live coals from off the brazen altar with two handfuls of incense into the Holy of Holies, cast the incense on the coals there, so that the cloud of smoke might cover the mercy-seat and, as it were, hide him from God. He then took of the blood of the bullock and sprinkled it once on the east part of the mercy-seat (as an atonement for the priesthood), and seven times before the mercy-seat (as an atonement for the Holy of Holies itself). Then he killed the goat, the congregation's sin-offering, and sprinkled its blood in the same manner, with corresponding objects. Similar sprinklings were made with the blood of both animals (bullock and goat) on the altar of incense (Lev. xvi. 16; Ex. xxx. 10) to make an atonement for the Holy Place. No one besides the high priest was allowed to be present in the Tabernacle whilst these acts of atonement were going on. Lastly, an atonement was made for the altar of burnt-offering in a similar manner. The goat for Azazel was then brought before the altar of burnt-offering. Over it the high priest confessed all the sins of the people of Israel, after which it was sent by the hand of a man into the wilderness to bear away their iniquities into a solitary land. This ceremony signified the sending away of the sins of the people now expiated to the Evil One to convince him that they could no more be brought up in judgement against the people before God. Then the high priest took off his linen garments, bathed, put on his official garments, and offered the burnt-offerings of two rams for himself and his people.

It is strange that, although "without the Day of Atonement there would be an actual gap in the theocratic ordinances" (Oehler), we have no historical record of the keeping of the day till the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus (l. 5 seqq.). There is only one, and that a doubtful, allusion to the day in the books of the Old Testament Canon (Zech. iii. 9).

Circumcision was the rite of initiation into the Jewish Covenant under the O.T. dispensation. As a covenant rite it had necessarily two sides. On the one side it admitted those who received it to all the privileges of the Theocracy. On the other, it bound them to the undertaking of all covenant duties. Being the O.T. sacrament it necessarily symbolized the O.T. idea, viz. separation. It was a sign of separation: (1) To God—to whom Israel belonged. (2) From the world—the uncircumcised heathen nations with whom Israel might not mix. (3) From sin. It was a sign of purity or self-restraint—the cutting off of the sins of the flesh—without which any close relations with God were impossible. The spiritual significance of circumcision is often insisted on in the O.T. (Cf. Lev. xxvi. 41; Deut. x. 16, xxx. 6; Jer. iv. 4, ix. 25, 26; Ezek. xlv. 7.)

The subjects of circumcision were (1) and principally, male Israelites, properly when eight days old (Gen. xvii. 12); sometimes (irregularly) at a later age (Ex. iv. 25; Josh. v. 2-9). (2) Slaves born in the house or bought with money (Gen. xvii. 13). (3) Strangers who wished to eat the Passover (Ex. xii. 48).

Circumcision was not peculiar to Israel. It was practised in Egypt (especially amongst the priests) and by nations with whom Israel can never have come in contact. The Canaanitish tribes from whom separation on the part of Israel was a matter of obligation appear to have been uncircumcised (so Philistines, Judg. xiv. 3; 1 Sam. xxxi. 4; 2 Sam. i. 20; Hivites, Gen. xxxiv. 14-17).

With circumcision was connected the giving of the name to the child circumcised. We have no express mention of the custom till N.T. times (Luke i. 59, ii. 21; cf. however Gen. xxi. 3, 4). It was a natural deduction from the fact that at the institution Abram's name was changed to Abraham.

The Mosaic Law, like most other ancient laws, regarded certain acts or states of life as making a man (1) unclean in himself, and (2) defiling to those with whom he came in contact. The penalty was exclusion from the congregation for a shorter or longer period, and until the purifying or expiatory rites had been performed. These acts or states were not in themselves sinful. Being for the most part involuntary, or occurring in the performance of necessary duties, they could not defile the conscience. Nevertheless, as springing out of sinful conditions, they had a very close connexion with sin. Hence their place in the Mosaic system. It is to be noted that they are classed, not amongst matters of health but matters of religion. All the causes of ceremonial uncleanness mainly centre round the two extremities of life, (a) Birth, (b) Death. Under (a) we have conjugal intercourse, sexual discharges of all kinds, and various kindred matters (including childbirth); and under (b) contact with a dead body, human, or animal (dying of itself); and leprosy, regarded as a living death. [N.B. There was a defiling leprosy of clothes and of houses as well as of men (Lev. xiv. 33-57).]

The purifying ceremonies were various. Bathing the flesh and the clothes in running water was used in all and sufficed in the simplest cases. When the uncleanness was of a deeper character, a purifying water for sprinkling was provided: e.g. after contact with a corpse, water mingled with the ashes of a red cow (Num. xix. 9); for the leper, water in which the blood of a bird had been allowed to fall (Lev. xiv. 6). Beyond these ceremonies of purification there were in some cases offerings of expiation (sin and trespass offerings). So the man with an issue (Lev. xv. 14); the woman after childbirth (Lev. xii. 6, 8); and above all, the leper (Lev. xiv. 10-32).

It is to be noted that the priests as specially holy were forbidden to contract the avoidable uncleanness which came from contact with a corpse, except for their nearest relations; the high priest, not even for his father or mother (Lev. xxi. 1-15). Various incidents involving questions of ceremonial uncleanness are to be found in the history (Ex. xix. 14, 15; Lev. x. 6; Num. xii. 15; 1 Sam. xx. 26, xxi. 4, 5; 2 Sam. xi. 4; 2 Kings xv. 5; 2 Chron. xxx. 18, 19). From Gen. xxxv. 2 and Ex. xix. 14, 15, it is manifest that the general idea did not originate with the Mosaic Law.

The fundamental ideas of a vow were, (1) There was no legal or moral obligation to make it (Deut. xxiii. 22). It was spontaneous. (2) When made it was irrevocable (Deut. xxiii. 21; Lev. xxvii. 9, 10). Vows were of two kinds: (a) Dedication. Some person or thing was given to the Lord (Lev. xxvii. 1-24). (b) Abstinence. A promise was made to abstain from some lawful act or enjoyment (Num. vi. 3). No unnatural mutilation was permitted (Lev. xix. 28; Deut. xiv. 1, &c.). Nothing already holy to the Lord, or intrinsically unholy, or blemished in the slightest degree, could be offered as a vow (Lev. xxvii. 26; Deut. xxiii. 18; Lev. xxii. 23). Provisions were made for ransoming votive offerings which could not be fitly sacrificed (Lev. xxvii. 11). The vows of dependent women (wives or daughters) did not stand unless ratified explicitly or implicitly by the husband or father (Num. xxx. 3-16; cf. Jer. xlv. 19). Vows had often an imperative character; they were offered in order to obtain some favour from Jehovah (Gen. xxviii. 20; 2 Sam. xv. 7, 8).

The vow of the Nazirite (=one separated) had two sides. He was (1) separated to the Lord, holy to the Lord, and (2) separated from (a) wine, strong drink, vinegar, every product of the grape vine; (b) the razor coming upon his head—his hair was to grow as the sign of the consecration of his God upon his head; (c) dead bodies. He was not to make himself unclean, even for his father, mother, brother, or sister. If by any accident he became unclean, then he must shave his head, offer two turtle-doves as a sin-offering and a burnt-offering, and a lamb of the first year as a trespass-offering, and begin the period of his vow afresh. Certain prescribed offerings (Num. vi. 14, 15) and the shaving of the head (the hair being burnt with his peace-offering) marked the fulfilment of the days of his separation.

There are no rules laid down by the Law as to the length of the Nazirite's vow. It would be determined by himself, unless, as in the case of Samson and John the Baptist, his parents had consecrated him for all the days of his life. From the words of Num. vi. 2 we should gather that this institution did not owe its origin to, but merely received fresh regulations under, the Mosaic Law.

The first trace of the division of animals into clean and unclean is to be found at the time of the Flood. Two unclean, but seven clean, fowls and beasts were taken into the ark (Gen. vii. 2, 3). No indications of the line of division are given. All the clean animals were regarded as fit for sacrifice, for when Noah came out of the ark he took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the altar (Gen. viii. 20). The Mosaic Law laid down definite rules on the subject. The beasts which both chewed the cud and parted the hoof; the fishes with fins and scales; birds generally (with 21 exceptions, nearly all birds of prey); of creeping things the locust alone,—were clean (Lev. xi.; Deut. xiv.).

The cause of separation is stated to be primarily Jehovah's will. Even as He had separated Israel from the nations, so had He separated the clean animals from the unclean (Lev. xx. 24-26). The object of the law seemingly was to raise up a strong barrier between Israel and the other nations, so that 'it should be an unlawful thing for a man that was a Jew to join himself or come unto one of another nation.' Nothing could serve this purpose better than distinctions of food. Like many other Mosaic laws it was ill kept before the Babylonian exile (Is. lxvi. 3, 17). But during the exile it helped to keep alive the national spirit, in the hearts of some at least (Daniel i. 8). When Antiochus Epiphanes tried to break down the Jewish nationality his method was to force them to eat swine's flesh. And when Jews and Gentiles were to be made one in Christ, it was revealed to St Peter in vision that the ceremonial law was abrogated, and that nothing was common or unclean (Acts x. 12, 14, 15).

There were two further restrictions in regard to the use of animals as food: (1) The blood might in no case be eaten. This restriction dates from the Flood. To Noah and his sons it was said, "Flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat" (Gen. ix. 4). The Mosaic Law forbade the eating of any manner of blood, whether of fowl or beast, under penalty of death (Lev. vii. 26, 27). The law was binding not only on Israelites but on strangers sojourning in the land (Lev. xvii. 10, 11), not only in respect of sacrificial animals but of all animals which could be eaten (Lev. xvii. 13). From 1 Sam. xiv. 32-34 we gather that the breaking of this law, even in cases of extremity, was regarded as a heinous sin. It was one of the very few ceremonial laws which the council of Jerusalem imposed upon Gentile Christians (Acts xv. 29). The reason for the prohibition was twofold. (a) The blood was the life. (b) The blood being the life was set apart for the purpose of atonement for sin, i.e. for the good of the soul (Lev. xvii. 11). It is probable, though there does not seem to be any direct historical evidence on the point, that eating blood was one of the idolatrous rites of the aboriginal Canaanites. So we gather from the context in Lev. xix. 26. Cf. also Ps. xvi. 4 and Ezek. xxxiii. 25. (2) The fat of sacrificial animals might not be eaten. All the fat was the Lord's by a perpetual statute (Lev. iii. 16, 17), i.e. the fat of ox or sheep or goat or beasts which might be offered as a burnt-offering (Lev. vii. 23-25). The penalty of disobedience was death (Lev. vii. 25). The fat, as the best portion of the animal, was reserved for Jehovah (Lev. iii. 11, 16).

IDOLATROUS OBSERVANCES MENTIONED IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Of the two great types of idolatrous worship practised in the heathen world, viz. hero worship and nature worship, the latter only is found in the Old Testament. The Israelites, it is plain, revered sufficiently the great men of their race, but never, so far as we are informed, desired to deify them. On the other hand the religions of the nations (Egyptians, Canaanites, &c.) with whom Israel in her earlier national life came in contact were essentially nature worships, and the various kinds of idolatry into which she fell were all of this type.

The narrative in Exodus describes a religious contest, between Jehovah and Egypt's gods and king (Ex. xii. 12). The Egyptian religion (supposed to have been originally monotheistic) was at this time an elaborate system of nature worship. The central object of worship was the sun in its various phases and under different forms. The moon and stars, the air, the earth, the Nile, the sacred animals (especially the bull) as incarnations of the deity, the ancient and even the reigning kings of Egypt as demi-gods, were also worshipped. Every town had its own sacred animal and its own god. In Egypt Israel seems to have acquired its fatal proneness to idolatry (Ex. xxxii. 4; Deut. xix. 16, 17; Josh. xxiv. 14; Ezek. xx. 7, 8, xxxiii. 3, 8). Of the Egyptian gods, Amon only is mentioned by name in the Bible (Nah. iii. 8; Jer. xli.

25). Amon, in later times the greatest of Egyptian gods, and identified with Ra the Sun-god, was the active power in creation, the giver of life, the preserver of good and the destroyer of evil.

The religions of the nations of Canaan and of W. Syria generally seem to have contained two elements: (1) Baal and Ashtoreth worship (common to all), and (2) a national cult. Each nation had its own peculiar god to whom it ascribed its prosperity and misfortunes (cf. Chemosh in Moabite Stone and Judg. xi. 24; see p. 156). (2) may have been only a local modification of (1). Both elements may be traced in the corrupt forms of the religion of the Israelites.

Baal was the Sun-god and the male or generative principle in nature. The principal seat and source of his cult was Phœnicia (1 Kings xvi. 31). He was worshipped with different ideas and rites (cf. plural Baalim) in different places; by Moabites, &c. as Baal Peor (Num. xxv. 1-3, 17, 18); at Shechem as Baal Berith (Judg. viii. 33, ix. 4); at Ekron as Baalzebub (2 Kings i. 2). Baal is by some identified with Bel of Babylon and Zeus of Greece. The word Baal expresses the relation between lord and slave, &c. Innocent in itself (cf. Adonai=Lord) its occurrence in proper names is insufficient to prove idolatrous influence. It was applied to Jehovah Himself (Hos. ii. 16; Jer. xxxi. 32; 1 Chron. xii. 5, Bealiah). Becoming utterly abominable from its associations its use was abjured and Bosheth (shame) was substituted in names compounded with it. (Cf. Ishbosheth, Jerubbesheth=Gideon.) The prophets call Baal The Shame (Jer. xi. 13; Hos. ix. 10). Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians and associated commonly with Baal in worship (1 Kings xi. 5; 2 Kings xxiii. 13), was the female or productive principle in nature. She is identified with Ishtar (Assyria) and Astarte (Greece and Rome). Sometimes she is regarded as the Moon-goddess (Baal=sun, cf. Gen. xiv. 5), sometimes as Venus the goddess of love. Her image (of wood, cf. Deut. xvi. 21; 2 Kings xxiii. 15) was called an Asherah (A.V. grove).

Baal (and Ashtoreth) worship was the Israelites' most common form of idolatry. Seduced into it first by the Moabites (Num. xxv. 3; see Rev. ii. 14), they relapsed into it again and again in the days of the Judges (Judg. ii. 11-13, &c.). Suppressed by Samuel (1 Sam. vii. 3, 4), reintroduced by Solomon (1 Kings xi. 5), discountenanced ineffectually by pious kings, it became the national religion under the auspices of Jezebel and Athaliah, and a chief cause of the ruin of both kingdoms. After the exile it had no place in Israel.

Baal and Ashtoreth were worshipped with burnt-sacrifices (1 Kings xviii. 26), and gifts (Hos. ii. 8; Ezek. xvi. 19), with burning of incense (2 Kings xxiii. 5; Jer. vii. 9, xi. 13), with wild and cruel and immoral rites (1 Kings xiv. 23, 24, xviii. 23; 2 Kings xxiii. 7; Amos ii. 7; Ezek. xxii. 9, &c.), with obscene emblems (Ezek. xvi. 17), and with human sacrifices (Jer. xix. 5). Their temples or altars were decorated with rich hangings which women wove (2 Kings xxiii. 7; Ezek. xvi. 16), and were commonly built on high places (Num. xxii. 41; 2 Kings xvii. 10; Jer. xix. 5; Ezek. xx. 28), or on roofs of houses (Jer. xxxii. 29). The worshippers bowed the knee to or kissed the image of the god (1 Kings xix. 18), and wore vestments (2 Kings x. 22). The ministers of worship were numerous and consisted of both priests and prophets (1 Kings xviii. 19; 2 Kings x. 11, xxiii. 5).

Chemosh was the god of Moab (cf. Moabite Stone, 1 Kings xi. 7) and also of Ammon (Judg. xi. 24). Solomon built for him a high place (1 Kings xi. 7) on Mount Olivet which Josiah destroyed (2 Kings xxiii. 13). Chemosh was worshipped with human sacrifices (2 Kings iii. 27).

Dagon (the fish-god) was the god of the Philistines in the days of Samuel (Judg. xvi. 23; 1 Sam. v. 2) and the Maccabees (1 Macc. x. 84, xi. 4). There were temples of Dagon at Gaza and Ashdod (Judg. xvi. 23, 1 Sam. v. 2-5; 1 Macc. x. 84). The latter was destroyed by Jonathan Maccabeus.

Molech (or Milcom), the abomination of the children of Ammon (1 Kings xi. 5, 7; Jer. xlix. 1, 3), was the fire-god worshipped by passing children through (Deut. xviii. 10) — fire-baptism possibly — or burning children in (2 Chron. xxviii. 3), the fire. Molech worship was practised by the Canaanitish tribes (Ps. cvi. 37, 38; Deut. xii. 31), Israel in the wilderness (Amos v. 26?), Solomon (1 Kings xi. 7), the people of the Northern kingdom (2 Kings xvii. 17), and Ahaz and Manasseh (2 Kings xvi. 3, xxi. 6). The cult was very popular in the later days of the monarchy (Jer. vii. 31; Ezek. xx. 26, 31); its chief seat was Tophet in the valley of Hinnom (2 Kings xxiii. 10; Jer. vii. 31).

Asshur was the greatest of the Assyrian gods. He is their king and father and 'The god who created himself.' To his power Assyrian kings ascribe all their great works. He had a famous temple at Nineveh.

Bel (=Baal), Nebuchadnezzar's god (Dan. iv. 8), spoken of by Isaiah and Jeremiah (Is. xli. 1; Jer. li. 44) was the younger Bel, Bel-Merodach, the patron god of Babylon, the firstborn son of the original gods. As god of Babylon he became preeminent among the gods, the highest titles are given him in the inscriptions (god of heaven and earth), and he is identified with the Greek Zeus. Cyrus was a very devout worshipper of Bel-Merodach.

Hadad was the Sun-god of Syria and Edom, from whom the Syrian kings of Damascus got their name Benhadad, and the Edomite kings Hadad (1 Kings xi. 14). See RIMMON.

Nisroch, in whose temple at Nineveh Sennacherib was slain (2 Kings xix. 37 = Is. xxxviii. 38), is said by some to have been the Moon-god, by others the name is thought to be an epithet = one who hears.

Nebo, the son of Bel-Merodach and Zarpapim, was an important Babylonian deity (cf. Nabopolassar, Nebuchadnezzar, Nabone-duš). He was the god of prophecy, science, and literature; the proclaimer of the wishes of Merodach.

Rimmon, the supreme god of the Syrians of Damascus (2 Kings v. 18), was identified by them with the Sun-god Hadad (Zech. xii. 11). Among the Babylonians he was the god of the air, and the wind, and the thunder, and the rain.

Tammuz (=Greek Adonis) was the god of spring slain by summer heat, or the god of summer slain by winter's night and cold, after whom his bride Ishtar goes down into Hades. The women weeping for Tammuz (Ezek. viii. 14) were keeping a nature festival, they were bewailing the season's decline. cf. also R.V. marg. on Is. xvii. 10. Tammuz was the Jewish name for the month June or July after the Captivity.

Gad and Meni, Syrian deities, were worshipped together in religious feasts (Is. lxxv. 11). Gad was the star-god Jupiter, the greater fortune. cf. the town Baal Gad (Josh. xi. 17, xii. 7). Meni was the star-god Venus, the lesser fortune.

Sun, Moon and Stars. Against this primitive kind of idolatry the Israelites were warned in the Law (Deut. iv. 15, 19, xvii. 3, 5), but no traces of it are to be found in the history till the later days of the two kingdoms, specially the days of Manasseh (2 Kings xvii. 16, xxi. 3, xxiii. 4; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3; Jer. vii. 2; Ezek. viii. 16). The women of the exiles in Egypt attributed all the national misfortunes to the neglect of the worship of the queen of heaven (Jer. xlv. 17-19, 25). The Sun was worshipped with sun-images (2 Chron. xxxiv. 4), by kissing the hand (Job xxxi. 27), turning towards the East (Ezek. viii. 16), burning incense (2 Kings xxiii. 5), gifts of horses and chariots (2 Kings xxiii. 11). The Moon was worshipped specially by women and with cakes (Jer. vii. 18, xlv. 19).

Before the Babylonian exile the popular religion of Israel did not conform to the rules of the Mosaic Law in many respects. Other gods were worshipped along with Jehovah. Jehovah was worshipped by means of sacrifices at unlawful shrines (see p. 211), and images, graven, molten, and teraphim (Judg. xvii. 4, 5, xviii. 14, 30; 1 Sam. xix. 13, and Kings everywhere). Ephods were used as oracles (Judg. vii. 27, xviii. 14). Incense was offered to the brazen serpent (2 Kings xviii. 4).

The religion of the Northern kingdom, as established by Jeroboam, was a worship of Jehovah at unauthorized shrines and with idolatrous rites. Egyptian experience and possibly Aaron's example (cf. 1 Kings xii. 28 with Ex. xxxii. 4, 8) suggested the form of the graven image (calf). The Mosaic Law was in part adopted (Amos iv. 4, viii. 5), and in part adapted to the circumstances of the Northern kingdom (1 Kings xiii. 32). The priests were taken from the people at large (1 Kings xii. 31, R.V.). Calf-worship is regarded by the prophets as a virtual apostatizing from Jehovah. It was retained by all the Northern kings, and apparently [Micah

i. 13; 2 Kings xvi. 3 (?) spread into the kingdom of Judah.

The colonists of Samaria from Babylon, &c. (2 Kings xvii. 24) worshipped along with Jehovah (v. 33) various deities (vv. 30, 31), of whom only two have been identified, viz. Succoth Benoth—Zarpanit (goddess of wisdom, the lady of the deep, and wife of Bel-Merodach), and Nergal (originally the king of Hades, and afterwards the champion of the gods and identified with the planet Mars). Nergal was the god of Cutha (so the inscriptions and 2 Kings xvii. 30). The Samaritans worshipped their gods with graven images and child sacrifices on high places. After the exile the Samaritans were anxious to be considered of the same religion as the Jews (Ezra iv. 2), and seem to have given up the worship of idols. The worship on Mount Gerizim was schismatical but otherwise in strict conformity with the Law of Moses. Nevertheless in the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes the Samaritans readily consented to his idolatrous decrees, and asked that the temple on Gerizim might be dedicated to Jupiter the defender of strangers (2 Macc. vi. 2).

Teraphim were images of the size and form of a man (1 Sam. xix. 13, 16) used from patriarchal times (Gen. xxxi. 30, 32) and onwards (Hos. iii. 4, 5) in worship (Gen. xxxi. 30, 32; Judg. xvii. 5), and for magical purposes both in Israel and in Babylon (Judg. xviii. 5, 6; Ezek. xxi. 21; Zech. x. 2). To use teraphim was not (probably) to worship strange gods, but to worship the true God in a corrupt manner. They seem to have been of the nature of household gods.

The Israelites and Semitic races generally were less given to magical superstitions than other races of mankind. No prayers for deliverance from the sorcerers' power are to be found in the Bible. Nevertheless the chosen people lived amongst races who systematically practised various magical arts. In Egypt and Babylon there were organizations for such purposes. In Egypt these are called magicians, wise men, interpreters of dreams (Gen. xli. 8; Ex. vii. 11, viii. 7), and they are the chief advisers of the Pharaoh of the Exodus (cf. also ancient Egyptian inscriptions). In Babylon we find magicians, wise men, astrologers, Chaldeans, soothsayers (Dan. ii. 2, 12, iv. 7, v. 7, 11). Ezekiel (xxi. 21) mentions the various kinds of divination used by the king of Babylon (cf. also Babylonian inscriptions). The various kinds of divination practised by the Canaanites (Deut. xviii. 10, 11) were utterly forbidden to the Israelites, for whom legitimate means of ascertaining God's will were provided (the priests by Urin and Thummim, and the prophets, Deut. xviii. 19–22). The history of Balaam gives us a vivid idea of the common belief in the power of the sorcerer to make or mar a nation (Num. xxii. 6, 7).

Saul in his last days (1 Sam. xxviii. 3, 7, &c.) and the Jews under the misfortunes of the last days of the kingdom (2 Kings xvii. 17; Is. viii. 19, xxix. 4), were driven to the use of the black art. Divination prevailed amongst Jew and Gentile alike in the years preceding the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus (Acts viii. 9, xiii. 6, 8, xvi. 16, xix. 13, 19; Jos. De Bel. Jud. vi. v. § 2, 3). The methods adopted were various. Divination was made through cups (Gen. xlv. 5), familiar spirits (1 Sam. xxviii. 7; Is. viii. 19; Acts xvi. 16), witches and wizards (Deut. xviii. 10, 11), the spirits of the dead (1 Sam. xxviii. 8; Is. xxix. 4, lxx. 4), shaking arrows (Ezek. xxi. 21), the fall of staves or trees (Hos. iv. 12; Eccl. xi. 3), inspecting entrails (Ezek. xxi. 21), auguries, observance of times or clouds (Is. ii. 6; Jer. x. 2), interpretation of dreams (Jer. xxiii. 32; Zech. x. 2), teraphim (Zech. x. 2; Ezek. xxi. 21), enchantments or spells (Ex. viii. 7; Num. xxiv. 1; Deut. xviii. 11), oracles (2 Kings i. 6; Is. xli. 21–24).

2. SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS. THE SYNAGOGUE AND TEACHING OF THE LAW.

By THE REV. F. WATSON, D.D.

Schools of the Prophets is the name given to the bands of prophets or sons of prophets whom we find living together for instruction and worship under Samuel and under Elijah and Elisha. They seem to be so numerous and important in the times of these great prophets, that it is reasonable to suppose they continuously existed during the intermediate period. It is probable Samuel was their founder. In his days they are an established institution with well-known characteristics (1 Sam. x. 11); before his time there are no traces of them. They perform their sacred duties under his eye at Naioth in Ramah, and he is their appointed head (1 Sam. xix. 19, 20). In the days of Elijah and Elisha, and under their direction, bands of sons of the prophets are found at Bethel, Jericho, Gilgal, and on the Jordan banks (2 Kings ii. 3, 5, iv. 38, vi. 1). The connexion between the schools of the prophets and the supernatural gift of prophecy is difficult to determine. Not all prophets were trained in the schools, Amos was neither a prophet nor a prophet's son (vii. 14). Few of those trained in the schools even though they prophesied (1 Sam. x. 5, 6, xix. 20, 24; 1 Kings xviii. 4) can have had any supernatural gift. Nevertheless the training of the prophetic schools would tend to call forth and regulate and develop spiritual gifts, and would produce a body of teachers to whom the name prophets could rightly be given, even though no direct communication was made to them by God.

Instruction was the function of the Synagogues as sacrifice was of the Temple. They were meeting-places for religious instruction and more especially for instruction in the Law. Their origin is lost in obscurity. We find them in every village of Judæa and Galilee and in many centres of population in Gentile countries in our Lord's time. The synagogue was then no new institution, for S. James says, "Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day" (Acts xv. 21). Nevertheless we have few traces of synagogues before our Lord's time. In the days of Samuel there were meetings of bands of prophets for praise and prophesyings (1 Sam. x. 5, xix. 20). Pious Israelites, we may presume, would attend these. In the days of the kings the faithful were wont to resort to the prophet of the time for instruction on the new moons and sabbaths (2 Kings iv. 23). But if we may apply the Jewish saying that where there is no book of the Law there can be no synagogue we must infer that there were no synagogues when copies of the book of the Law were so rare and ignorance of its contents so universal as in Josiah's time (2 Kings xxii. 11-13). In one passage in the Old Testament only have we any reference to religious meeting-places other than places of sacrifice, and that is in a Psalm (lxxiv. 8) which may refer to the Maccabean times. The establishment of synagogues is one of the many works ascribed by Jewish tradition to Ezra and the men of the Great Synagogue. Nevertheless we have no clear mention of synagogues in any of the books of the Apocrypha or in the history of the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, which from its nature and methods, we should imagine, would have been directed specially against them.

There was nothing special about the construction of a synagogue; but it was so placed that the worshippers in it prayed (standing) with their faces towards Jerusalem (cf. 1 Kings viii. 48; Dan. vi. 10). At its Jerusalem end and on a platform stood the ark in which were placed the roll of the Law and the other sacred books. In front of the ark was a lamp with eight branches, the desk at which the reader or preacher stood, and the chief seats facing the people which the Scribes and Pharisees desired (Matt. xxiii. 6; Luke xi. 43). The men and women sat on different sides of the building, the more distinguished in front.

The sites of synagogues were by preference elevated ground, outside towns, near rivers or the sea shore. (Cf. Talmud; Acts xvi. 13, 16; Jos. Ant. xiv. x. 23.) Sometimes they were built without roofs. No distinction can be safely drawn between a proseuche (a place of prayer) and a synagogue.

The chief parts of the synagogue service were (1) The recital of the Shema (as a sort of Creed), i.e. the three passages Deut. vi. 4-9, xi. 13-21, Num. xv. 37-41, together with certain benedictions. The Shema was to be said twice a day by every adult male Israelite. Josephus ascribes the custom to Moses (Ant. iv. viii. 13). (2) The Prayers. These were fixed in form, and the most important of them were the Shemoneh Esreh or 18 prayers. Rabbi Gamaliel added a nineteenth against the heretics (= Christians). All Israelites (women, children, slaves) were bound to repeat these prayers three times a day. (3) The reading and expounding of the Scriptures (see p. 197). (4) The blessing of the Priest.

The Synagogue Services were held on the 2nd and 5th days of the week, the Sabbath, and on the feasts and fasts, at the hours of prayer, viz. the 3rd and 9th hours and between dark and dawn.

The synagogue in each place was under the general control of the elders. The permanent officials were (1) the rulers of the synagogue who had the special care and management of the synagogue worship (Mark v. 22); (2) the almoners who collected the alms; (3) the minister or Chazan—the sexton of the synagogue. He had the charge of the Holy Scriptures, and to him our Lord gave the roll of the prophets when He sat down (Luke iv. 20). For the services of the synagogue no permanent officers were appointed. Members of the congregation led the prayers, read, interpreted from Hebrew into Aramaic, and expounded the Scriptures, in turn or as appointed by the ruler (Acts xiii. 15). Priests and Levites had precedence. He who said the prayer in the name of the congregation was called the angel or messenger of the church. As ten men were required to make up a legal congregation, 'the ten men of leisure' are often referred to by the Rabbins in connexion with the synagogue. These were not officials but men hired to make up the number (10) of a legal congregation.

The synagogue was the local Jewish ecclesiastical tribunal, and the authorities of the synagogue exercised judicial functions (Luke xii. 11, xxi. 12). They had the power of excommunication (John ix. 22, xii. 42, xvi. 2: of this there were two kinds, (1) temporary exclusion from the Congregation, (2) permanent exclusion with anathema), and scourging (Matt. x. 17). This jurisdiction was exercised (sometimes) even in foreign lands (Acts ix. 2). It was subordinate to that of the Jerusalem Sanhedrin (Acts ix. 2).

The Sanhedrin was the Jewish Senate—the highest native court in both civil and ecclesiastical matters. Under the presidency of the High Priest it regulated the whole internal affairs of the Jewish nation. It is first definitely mentioned in the days of Antiochus the Great (Jos. Ant. xii. iii. 3), but it may date from a somewhat earlier period. No historical connexion can be established between it and Moses' Council of 70 elders. It consisted of 71 members and had an aristocratic character, being drawn from the three classes of chief priests, scribes, and elders. In the time of our Lord the Pharisees had the predominating influence upon it (Jos. Ant. xviii. i. 4; Acts v. 34, 40), but there were Sadducee elements (chief priests, Acts v. 17, scribes, xxiii. 6, 9). The powers of the Sanhedrin were extensive, for the Greek and Roman masters of the Jews granted them a considerable amount of self-government. From the N.T. we gather that it was the Supreme Court of Justice in all cases, and that it had officers of its own, who arrested accused persons and carried out its sentences and decrees. Questions involving life and death were removed from its cognizance 40 years before the destruction of Jerusalem (cf. Talmud and John xviii. 31; the stoning of S. Stephen cannot be regarded as a judicial execution), and the Roman authorities could remove a prisoner from its jurisdiction (so S. Paul, Acts xxiii.).

The extent of the legal jurisdiction of the Sanhedrin varied at different times. Herod, when Governor of Galilee (B.C. 47), was summoned before it (Jos. Ant. xiv. ix. 4). At the time of our Lord its jurisdiction was restricted to Judæa proper. In Galilee, e.g., Christ was beyond its power (Joh. vii. 1). Its decisions were nevertheless regarded as morally binding all over the Judean world. Thus we find it issuing letters to the synagogue of Damascus, ordering the arrest and removal to Jerusalem of the Christians of that place. Besides the supreme national Sanhedrin of Jerusalem there were inferior local courts in all the Jewish cities. To these the name Sanhedrin was given (Matt. x. 17).

The instruction of the chosen people in the Law was committed by Moses to the Priests and Levites (Deut. xxxiii. 10. Cf. also Lev. x. 11). No method of instruction was prescribed by him, except only the command that the Levites should read the Law in the hearing of all the people at the feast of Tabernacles in the Sabbatical year. Josephus and later Jewish teachers say that he commanded the Jews to come together every sabbath to hear the Law and learn it accurately (Jos. c. Apion. ii. 18). From the history of Israel in the O.T. it seems that the tribe of Levi failed to do the work of instruction intrusted to it. On one occasion only before the exile (in Jehoshaphat's reign, 2 Chron. xvii. 7-9; cf. also 1 Chron. xxxv. 3) do we find the Levites acting as teachers of the Law. The extreme ignorance which existed concerning it in Josiah's reign and the habitual violation of some of its precepts throughout the history before the exile, sufficiently prove that the Levitical work of instruction was as a whole left undone. After the exile a great change took place, and the whole nation seems to have been animated with zeal for the Law. The Priests and Levites were at first its teachers (cf. Ezra's work and Neh. viii.). Judging from Malachi's solemn rebuke (ch. ii.), the priests as a body were still remiss in the work of instruction, and later in the history we find that it slipped out of their hands.

The Great Synagogue is said to have been a succession of Jewish teachers between the prophets and the scribes (430-300 B.C.). Nehemiah was according to tradition its founder, Simon the Just the last of its members, who numbered 120 in all. The enforcement of the stipulations of the covenant of Neh. x., the completion of the Canon of Scripture, the writing of the book Esther, the compilation of a service for the synagogues, the establishment of schools for the teaching of the Law, are the principal works attributed to the men of the Great Synagogue in the Talmudic writers. The writers of the Apocryphal books, and Philo and Josephus, make no mention of them.

The Scribes succeeded to the men of the Great Synagogue. We read indeed of scribes who were busy about the book of the law of the Lord in Jeremiah (viii. 8), and also in Chronicles, but the first great scribe in name and work is Ezra (vii. 10, 21, &c.), and the period of the scribes is reckoned to begin after the days of Simon the Just. The scribes' work referred primarily and mainly to the Law. They were at once legislators, doctors and judges. Legislators. They developed the principles of the Law in detail and applied them to the circumstances of their time. Doctors. Like the men of the Great Synagogue it was their object to make many disciples. Their method was oral and catechetical; they proposed questions to their pupils and vice versa (Luke ii. 46). The essential thing both for teacher and pupil was to remember and produce accurately the words of the wise; a scribe never taught upon his own authority (Matt. vii. 29). There seem to have been special places of instruction called houses of teaching. In Jerusalem the temple courts were used (Luke ii. 46, and cf. our Lord's practice). The pupils sat on the ground (Luke ii. 46; Acts xxii. 3). Judges. The scribes' knowledge of the Law pointed them out as the fittest persons to fill the office of judge (Matt. xxiii. 2), and they formed an influential part in the Supreme Court of the Sanhedrin. The labours of the scribes extended to all parts of Holy Scripture. They were the guardians of its text, they explained and developed its teaching, they exhorted the people in the synagogues to obedience to its commands.

The scribes as teachers of the Law were Israel's most honoured sons. Rabbi (my Master) was the title usually given them from the time of our Lord. Rabboni was an intensified form of Rabbi. The N.T. shows that they claimed for themselves the chief places in all public ceremonies. As a body they were Pharisees, and in the N.T. scribes and Pharisees invariably act together. Nevertheless the mention of scribes which were of the Pharisees' party (Mark ii. 16, R.V.; Acts xxiii. 9) implies that there were Sadducean scribes. In theory at least the scribes received no pay for their work, but gained their livelihood by the practice of some trade or handicraft. They were cautioned not to make trade the great work of their life. From our Lord's denunciations we gather that they did not in His days commonly do their work without reward and in a disinterested spirit. Nevertheless it is certain that the Law was at that time most carefully and diligently taught and learned, and children from their earliest youth received instruction in it (Jos. c. Ap. i. 12, ii. 18. Philo, Legat. ad Caium § 31). There are traces of the general establishment of boys' schools before the destruction of Jerusalem in connexion with the synagogues. The power of the scribes was further increased by the fall of Jerusalem. This deprived the priests and the civil rulers of their functions, and left the teachers of the Law sole rulers in their nation.

3. POLITICAL AND JUDICIAL INSTITUTIONS.

BY THE REV. F. WATSON, D.D.

In the history of Israel the successive steps in the formation of a nation can be clearly traced. Abraham (the emigrant, Gen. xiv. 13), the founder of the race, following the course of the tide of Semitic emigration in his age, left Ur of the Chaldees, passed N.W. up the Euphrates valley, and after halting awhile at Charran, proceeded to the land of Canaan by way of Damascus. Increasing in riches and influence, Abraham became the founder of a nomad tribe which wandered about the land of Canaan, and occasionally under stress of famine went down to Egypt. At Abraham's death his children founded separate tribes, and a similar separation between Jacob and Esau took place in Isaac's old age. But Jacob's twelve sons, making Egypt their permanent dwelling-place, became the founders of twelve tribes, whom Egyptian persecutions and God's promises and deliverances welded into a nation. Together they left Egypt, and in the course of their subsequent wanderings they received at Sinai a law, as the basis of a covenant with God. By the conquest of Canaan, they acquired a land of their own. Israel is now a nation with a history, a land, institutions and hopes peculiar to herself. The bonds which united the tribes became, after the deaths of Moses and Joshua, very loose. The ordinary government was local and tribal, and to a considerable extent such was the religion also (Judg. xvii. and xviii.). Samuel did much to restore the unity of faith, and under the kings the tribes acted as one nation against Israel's enemies. After three generations of complete union, the tribes form two separate kingdoms, grouping themselves under the leadership of the old rivals Ephraim and Judah. The schism is never healed, and Israel's strength against foreign enemies is considerably weakened. First the Northern, and 150 years later the Southern, kingdom is destroyed by the power of Assyria or Babylon. The exile had two great effects on the political organization of the chosen people. It destroyed the tribal organization, save only in Judah, Benjamin, and Levi. Israel ceased to be a kingdom of the earth, and Judaea became a portion of the satrapy or province of Syria. Its governors, who might or might not belong to the Jewish nation, took their orders successively from Persia, Greece or Syria, and Rome. There was a very brief period of independence under the Hasmonean princes, who assumed to themselves the title of Kings. The Herods of Idumean race were supported on the throne by the power of Rome.

Israel's political organization was of two kinds. (1) The ancient tribal organization, in origin anterior to Moses. This rested on a basis of birth and family, and furnished the materials for the local government of Israel in later times. (2) The later institution of the monarchy, with its numerous officials (civil and military) appointed by the king over the whole nation. The tribal organization alone survived the Babylonian exile.

The tribes united together form the congregation of Israel. Each tribe is organized under princes, elders, judges, and officers (= scribes). The ruling classes in the tribes are the Princes and Elders, from their ranks the Judges and Scribes are chosen. The complete fourfold organization of the tribe is recognized in Josh. xxiii. 2, xxiv. 1.

The Congregation of Israel, in the widest sense of the words, consisted of all who had been admitted into the covenant, whether homeborn Israelites or circumcised strangers sojourning amongst them (Ex. xii. 19); but only homeborn male Israelites of twenty years old and upwards (Num. i. 2, 3, xxvi. 2) had the full privileges and powers (religious and political) attached to membership. The congregation was organized according to tribes, families, and houses (Josh. vii. 16, 17), and also according to thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens (Deut. i. 15). These were presided over by officers called elders, heads of houses, princes of the fathers' house or of the congregation, who represented it (Ex. iii. 16, xii. 21, xxiv. 1) and acted on its behalf (Josh. ix. 18; 2 S. v. 3). The Congregation had considerable powers. We find it opposing itself to Moses (Num. xiv. 10, xvi. 3, xx. 2), and the princes (Josh. ix. 18), deciding on questions of public policy (Judg. xx. 1, 8, xxi. 13), accepting and even making leaders and kings (Num. xxvii. 19, 22; 1 Sam. xi. 15; 2 Sam. v. 1; 1 Kings xii. 1, 20, xvi. 16; 2 Chron. xxvi. 1, xxxiii. 25, xxxvi. 1), rejecting them (1 Kings xii. 20), consulted by them (2 Chron. xxx. 2, 4), making covenants (Ex. xxiv. 3; 2 Chron. xxiii. 3, 16), exercising judicial functions (Num. xv. 32-36, cf. also Num. xxxv. 12, 24, 25), and executing its sentences of punishment (ib. and Josh. vii. 25). On various occasions in the history the Congregation is summoned together for one or other of these purposes. The families into which the tribes were divided were about 60 in all, and took their names from the grandsons or great-grandsons of Jacob (Num. xxvi.). The subdivision of the family was the house, the house was composed of individual men, their wives and children being reckoned along with them. Josh. vii. 14, 17, 18, presents to us most clearly this fourfold division of the tribe.

The Law constantly recognises in its enactments the stranger residing in the midst of Israel. He might (unless he was a Canaanite, an Ammonite, or a Moabite), and if a slave must, be admitted into the ranks of the covenant people by circumcision. Under any circumstances he had to conform to certain fundamental regulations of the Mosaic Law (e.g. in regard to idolatry, the sabbath, eating of blood), but apparently not all its statutes were binding on him (Deut. xiv. 21). The stranger was to be treated with brotherly kindness and pity as a man in need (Deut. x. 19); he was to be invited with the Levite, the fatherless and the widow, to partake of the great sacrificial feasts, and was to have a share in the gleanings of the corn, and grapes, and olives, &c. The strangers residing in the land of Israel were very numerous. Some of them seem to have lived on terms of perfect equality amongst the Israelites. They are even landholders (2 Sam. xxiv. 18). Others, like the Gibeonites, are in a condition of slavery (Josh. ix. 21). Solomon numbered all the strangers in the land of Israel—the remnant of the Canaanitish nations—and found them to be 153,600, and he made them to be bearers of burdens and hewers of wood for his public works (2 Chron. ii. 17; 1 Kings ix. 21). The children of Solomon's servants are reckoned as a separate class amongst the returned exiles (Ezra ii. 55, 58; Neh. xi. 3).

The Nethinim are a similar body of men. They were those whom David and the princes appointed (lit. gave) for the service of the Levites (Ezra vii. 20), and they also formed a separate organization after the exile (Ezra ii. 43, viii. 17). Though within the Covenant (Neh. x. 28), and employed on sacred duties, they were regarded by the Jews as an inferior caste. One step above the proselytes, they are placed beneath the children of mixed marriages.

The English word 'Prince,' as found in the O.T., has many Hebrew equivalents, and is used indefinitely for all kinds of rulers and chief men. It corresponds, however, mainly to two Hebrew words—describing the members of two ruling classes of the earliest and latest periods respectively of the Jewish history before the exile. It is to be noted that in neither case do the princes derive their authority or dignity from their relation to the king; they are not cadets of the royal line, but Israel's aristocracy or her official class.

The 'princes' of the books Numbers and Joshua are heads of a fathers' house, or family, or tribe (Num. i. 16, vii. 2, xvi. 2). They owe their dignity to their birth. After the death of Joshua, these tribal princes have no prominence in Israel's history till after the exile. They are never mentioned in the books Judges and Samuel, and only once (1 Kings viii. 1) in the book Kings. In the later days of the monarchy a body of men called 'princes' makes its appearance. They may be identical with the ancient tribal princes, but they have a different Hebrew name, and they are not connected with any particular place or tribe. Acting together as an official class, they exercise a powerful political influence. They induce Joash to change his policy after Jehoiada's death (2 Chron. xxiv. 17). A commandment of Hezekiah's reign is issued in the name of the king and princes (2 Chron. xxx. 6, 12). They are able to save Jeremiah from the hand of the priests and prophets in Jehoiakim's reign (Jer. xxvi. 16). Zedekiah owns himself to be powerless against them (Jer. xxxviii. 5, 25, 27). Their influence is mostly for evil (cf. Joash, Zedekiah). Jeremiah and Ezekiel describe in strong terms their wickedness. The disappearance of the royal line of David after the exile left the princes at the head of Jewish affairs. They take their place in virtue of their birth as 'chief of the fathers.'

The tribe is an immediate development of the family. The aged man of ripe wisdom, to whose utterances so much authority attaches in the East, became the official elder. Elders were never lacking to Israel. Moses found his people organized under them on his return from the wilderness of Horeb (Ex. iii. 16, 18). We can trace them through the wanderings in the desert, the days of the Judges and the Kings, the exile and the period after the return, and in New Testament times. The 70 elders chosen by Moses represent the covenant people on Sinai (Ex. xxiv. 1). Commands to be given to the whole congregation are given to the elders (Ex. xii. 3, 21, xix. 6, 7, 8. Cf. Ex. iv. 29, 31). Moses commits the law unto the priests and all the elders of Israel (Deut. xxxi. 9). The office of elder had sometimes relation to the nation at large, sometimes to some particular tribe or place. Thus we read of elders of the Congregation, elders of Israel (the whole nation), elders of Israel and Judah (the two divisions), elders of tribes (Deut. xxi. 28), and elders of towns (Succoth, Bethlehem, Jezreel, Samaria). The local government of Israel seems to have been largely in their hands. So the Law provided (Deut. xxi. 2, 4, 6, 19), and the history indicates (Judg. viii. 14; 2 Sam. xvii. 4; 1 Kings xxi. 8). They had judicial functions (see above and Josh. xx. 4), and also acted as the council of the nation and the king (Judg. xxi. 16; 2 Sam. xvii. 4, 15; 1 Kings xx. 8). The elders are associated with the princes in the government of Israel after the exile (Ezra v. 5, vi. 14, x. 8).

God is regarded as the fountain of justice in Israel. To come before the judge is to come before God. The condemnation of the judges is the condemnation of God (Ex. xxii. 8, 9; Ps. lxxxii.). The heads of families and tribes (i.e. elders and princes) would, as in all eastern nations, be Israel's judges before the days of Moses (cf. Ex. ii. 14). Moses for awhile bore the burden of judging the people alone (Ex. xviii.), till, at Jethro's advice, he chose out of the chief of the tribes men who were able, wise, upright, God-fearing and of good repute, to be rulers of tens, fifties, hundreds, and thousands (Ex. xviii.; Deut. i. 9, &c.). They were to be permanent judges in small matters; to Moses was reserved the decision of the hard cases.

The Mosaic Law provided for the children of Israel both (a) local tribunals. "Judges... shalt thou make thee in all thy gates... throughout thy tribes" (Deut. xvi. 18), and (b) high courts of justice, "If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgement... then shalt thou arise and get thee up into the place which the Lord thy God shall choose; and thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and inquire; and they shall shew thee the sentence of judgement" (Deut. xvii. 8, 9). With the priests secular judges were associated in certain cases, and it was their duty to make the inquiry (Deut. xix. 16-18). The large bodies of Levitical judges (1 Chron. xxiii. 4, xxvi. 29) appointed by David cannot have exercised the office in Jerusalem only.

The highest court of all in Israel according to the Law was that of the High Priest after the judgement of Urim (Num. xxvii. 21), and Jehoshaphat makes "Amariah the chief priest" to be the chief judge "in all matters of the Lord" (2 Chron. xix. 11). There are, however, no historical instances of inquiry by Urim after the days of Saul. The high priests were superseded as chief judges by (1) the extraordinary judges, (2) the kings. Saul was appointed to judge the people (1 Sam. viii. 20). David and Solomon (2 Sam. viii. 15, xv. 1-4; 1 Kings iii. 9, 28) and the kings generally were their own chief justices. The separate office is unknown in Jewish history. It should be noted that we have one instance of a woman acting as a judge (Deborah).

The 'Judges' gave their name to a special period of Israel's history, viz. the period unknown in length (probably less than 200 years) of disorganization, idolatry, and foreign oppression between the days of Joshua and of Saul. The judge was more than a civil officer. His office was of an extraordinary character. He is raised up by God to put an end to a period of oppression. Generally his influence is very limited and local. He is only able to rally his own and the neighbouring tribes to his banner (cf. Judges iv. 6, v. 16-18, vi. 35, vii. 1, xii. 1). He is a man of the heroic type, not a religious teacher. Faith in God is the secret of his strength (Heb. xi. 32), but he is a man of the sword, not of the word. The word of the Lord was rare in those days (1 Sam. iii. 1). Samuel, though reckoned to be the last of the judges, was a man of a wholly different type, and inaugurated a new state of things.

The judicial procedure was of a very simple kind. Justice was administered at the gate of the city (Deut. xxi. 15; Ruth iv. 1; Amos v. 10, 12, 15)—note however, that Deborah judged Israel under a palm-tree (Judg. iv. 5), and that Samuel went on circuit (1 Sam. vii. 16)—and in the presence of the people as witnesses (Ruth iv. 11; 1 Kings xxi. 12). Complaints were made by word of mouth and by the aggrieved parties themselves; there were no advocates (Deut. xxi. 20, xxii. 16). Two witnesses at least were required to substantiate any charge, capital or otherwise (Num. xxxv. 30; Deut. xix. 15). According to Josephus (Ant. iv. viii. 15) women and slaves were not competent to give evidence. The judges were charged to make diligent inquisition (Deut. xix. 18), and to decide the matter without respecting persons, with strict justice and with rigour (Deut. xvi. 18-20, xix. 21). They were forbidden to take gifts (Deut. xvi. 19). False witnesses suffered the punishment due to the crime which they had charged against others (Deut. xix. 19). In certain cases the accused persons were permitted to purge themselves by an oath (Ex. xxii. 10, 11; Num. v. 19-22; 1 Kings viii. 31). All present were adjured to declare what they knew of the cause to be decided (Lev. v. 1). There is, however, no proof that an oath was administered to the witnesses. On the judicial functions of the synagogue, see p. 229.

The object of the punishments of the Mosaic Law was the extirpation of evil in Israel (Deut. xix. 20), and they were apportioned on the principle of righteous retribution. It was life for life, wound for wound, beast for beast (Ex. xxi. 23-25; Lev. xxiv. 18). The ordinary capital punishment was stoning (Deut. xvii. 5), the witnesses, laying their hands on the head of the condemned, casting the first stone. Executions took place outside the city (Lev. xxiv. 14; 1 Kings xxi. 13; Acts vii. 58). The dead body was sometimes burned with fire (Lev. xx. 14, xxi. 9; Josh. vii. 25), or hung on a tree (Deut. xxi. 22). If the latter it must be cut down and buried the same day (Deut. xxi. 23). The inhabitants of a city given to idolatry were to be slain with the edge of the sword (Deut. xiii. 15). Minor punishments were, beating with a rod—not more than 40 strokes could be administered (Deut. xxv. 2, 3; Prov. x. 13); suffering the same injury which the wrong-doer had inflicted (Lev. xxiv. 17-22); fines in money or kind as compensation for the injury done (Ex. xxii. 4-9; Deut. xxii. 19), in default the delinquent might be sold as a slave (Ex. xxi. 3). Neither imprisonment nor banishment was a punishment recognised by the Law, but offenders were imprisoned under the kings (cf. Micaiah, Jeremiah, and the various allusions to prisons), and Ezra was authorized by Artaxerxes to punish law-breakers both by imprisonment and banishment (Ezra vii. 26). Torture was not allowed in any case, and the punishment was inflicted on the offender alone, not on his wife and family also (Deut. xxiv. 16, but cf. Josh. vii. 24, 25).

Israelitish judges not uncommonly took gifts or bribes to pervert judgement, and oppressed the poor and needy (1 S. viii. 3, xii. 3), but sins of this kind were regarded as peculiarly heinous, and are denounced in the bitterest terms by the Canonical prophets.

The office of scribe (E. V. officer) was of Egyptian origin. It is well known that the ancient Egyptians were wont to record in writing, with the greatest care and minuteness, all their national events and operations. In agreement with this we find that they organized the forced labour of Israel in Egypt under Israelitish officers called scribes. Moses perpetuated the office (Deut. xvi. 18), and we gather from Num. xi. 16 and Deut. i. 15 that the scribe was chosen from the ranks of the elders or of the princes. Scribes are commonly associated with Judges (Deut. xvi. 18 and Chronicles), and it is obvious that their office had something of a judicial character. From their name we infer that they were the Hebrew 'notaries'; from 2 Chron. xix. 11 that they were subordinate ministers of justice. Large bodies of Levitical scribes were appointed by David (1 Chron. xxiii. 4), and Levites filled the office in Jehoshaphat's time. For the 'scribe' of later times see p. 230.

That God's kingdom should one day embrace all nations was an object of pious hope in O. T. times; it was regarded as already actually established in Israel. According to the Mosaic constitution, Israel was not like the other nations, a monarchy, an oligarchy or a democracy; it was, as Josephus remarks, a theocracy (c. Ap. ii. 16). God's kingship in Israel included the three spheres of legislation, administration, and official patronage. The Law given through Moses on Sinai was of divine origin. Israel's national course was determined by God's manifest judgements and deliverances, and by God's commands issued through priest or prophet. All subordinate rulers were appointed by God Himself, were regarded as His representatives, and took their orders directly from Him. The wish for an earthly king shows a failure on the part of Israel to realize their distinctive position: but when Israel became a kingdom of the earth, she did not cease to be a theocracy.

Moses foresaw the probability of the establishment of the monarchy in Israel, and laid down laws (a) for the selection of the king, and (b) regulating his political and social action. Nevertheless, it was not till after 200 (?) years of unsettled and unsystematic rule, and times even of anarchy, that Israel became a kingdom. Meanwhile the supreme rule for three generations had been offered to and refused by Gideon (Judg. viii. 23), and his son Abimelech had been actually made king. A combination of circumstances, (1) Samuel's old age and his sons' bad character, (2) the threatened attack of Nahash the Ammonite, (3) the galling Philistine yoke, gave irresistible force to Israel's demand that Samuel should make them a king (1 Sam. viii. 20).

Samuel's warning that the king would deprive them of their freedom and property was hardly justified by the event. The monarchy was on the whole a blessing to Israel. United efforts, impossible hitherto, were at once made against foreign foes (Nahash, Amalek, the Philistines). Saul established Israel's independence, David made her an imperial state, Solomon adorned and enriched her with almost incredible magnificence and wealth. The long continuance of David's line (500 years) on the throne of Judah is an eloquent testimony to the value of the monarchy and the virtues of the Davidic princes. Some of the Northern kings, though defective from the religious point of view, were princes of the highest ability (e.g. Jeroboam I., Omri, Ahab, the dynasty of Jehu). There was little tyrannical oppression in Israel. The power of the kings was limited both in theory (the kings were Jehovah's viceroys), and in practice, by (a) ancient customs (cf. Naboth and Ahab); (b) the independent national spirit (cf. revolts in David's reign and at Rehoboam's accession, and the numerous conspiracies against and assassinations of kings in both kingdoms); (c) the hereditary priesthood; and (above all) (d) the prophets who claimed, and constantly exercised, the right to declare in God's name what Israel ought to do, and to rebuke the kings for their sins. Nevertheless, to the kings belonged the power of life and death (Saul, David, Jehu), and the right of taxation (Solomon, Menahem, Jehoakim). Of the two chief engines of oppression used by Eastern kings, forced labour and Confiscation of property, the former (though said not to be imposed on native Israelites) caused the greatest discontent in Solomon's reign, and was the chief cause of the division of the kingdom after his death; we read no more of it till the utterly corrupt and lawless days of Jehoakim (Jer. xxii. 13, 14). The ruin of Ahab's house is traced to a flagrant instance of the latter. It may fairly be argued that acts which produced such exceptionally bad consequences were of rare occurrence. It is plain, nevertheless, that the character of the reigning king had a predominant influence (religious and political) on the course taken by the nation. The history of Israel centres in its king. Kings, by their action, determined its prosperity or adversity. Thus Jeroboam stamped his idolatrous mark indelibly on the Northern kingdom; Ahab and Jezebel were able to establish Baal and proscribe Jehovah-worship; Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel. Ahab brought his people to the verge of destruction. Hezekiah deferred Judah's ruin for nearly 150 years. Manasseh made the ruin inevitable. Josiah by his reforms utterly changed the character of religious worship. The accession of a new king (even of the same line) often meant nothing less than a revolution in religion or foreign policy. It is thus certain that whatever was done in Israel, the king was the doer of it. To him belonged the supreme administrative power. Thus, he was commander-in-chief of the army (Saul, David, Abijah, Jehoshaphat). He was supreme judge (cf. David and Solomon, and Ps. lxxv. 1; Jer. xxii. 3). He was sole legislator, not only in civil (David, Omri, Mts. vi. 10) but also in ecclesiastical matters (David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Josiah). It is noteworthy how everything connected with the building, restoring, or cleansing of the temple is done at the initiative of the king.

The Jewish monarchy practically ceased with the Babylonian exile. For more than four centuries after the return from captivity there was no such thing as a Jewish king. The family of David soon disappears from the history, and the chief power civil as well as religious fell into the hands of the high priests. These reached the height of their political influence when the offices of Governor or even King and that of High Priest were united in the Maccabean family who had supplanted the ancient line of Zadok. Simon Maccabeus was the first independent ruler of the Jews (1 Macc. xiii. 36, 41), circa 143 B.C. Aristobulus, his grandson, was the first who assumed the title of king (cir. 106 B.C.). The Hasmonean dynasty was supplanted by Herod the Great. To him, along with his grandson and great-grandson (the two Agrippas), the title of king was given by the Romans.

The choice of the king was reserved by God to Himself (Deut. xvii. 15), and it is recorded that He designated to the throne Saul, David and his house, Joabazim I., and Jehu. God's choice was, however, ratified by the people's acceptance. All Israel met in solemn assembly to make the chosen person king (Saul, 1 Sam. x. 24, xl. 14; David, 2 Sam. ii. 4, v. 1-3; Rehoboam, 1 Kings xii. 1; Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. 20). The monarchy in Israel was hereditary, but the choice of the reigning monarch (David, Rehoboam, Jehoshaphat (?), or of the people of the land (Abijah, Uzziah, Josiah, Jehoiachaz), rather than priority of birth, determined which royal prince should succeed his father (cf. however 2 Chron. xxi. 3).

The name of queen as a title of dignity did not (in Israel) belong to one of the many wives of the reigning monarch, but to his mother (1 Kings xv. 13; 2 Kings x. 13; Jer. xli. 16). The king's mother was a person of very considerable importance. Her name is invariably recorded by the writer of the Kings. She comes next to the king in lists of captives (2 Kings xxiv. 13, 15). She exercised at times commanding influence on national affairs (cf. Jezebel, Athaliah).

The utmost simplicity characterized the organization of Saul's kingdom and his personal surroundings. His solitary officer in the Captain of the Host, his sole organization a small and ill-equipped standing army. There are no traces of magnificence and luxury in his court, and palace he has none; he is not approached with elaborate ceremonial. He sleeps at times in carelessly guarded tents or caves. He makes his head-quarters the shade of a pomegranate or tamarisk tree (1 Sam. xiv. 3, xxii. 6). He wears a crown (2 Sam. i. 10), but his scepter is a spear (1 Sam. xxii. 6). It was David who organized the kingdom (1 Chron. xxvii. 32) and introduced magnificence and elaborate ceremonial into the court (1 Kings i.). From his days onwards many of the kings (especially Solomon) had courts of considerable magnificence. We read of palaces (Solomon, Ahab, Jehoiachin) made of cedar wood (David and Solomon) or ivory (Ahab), and overlaid with gold (Solomon); thrones (Solomon); crowns (Saul, David, Josiah); royal robes (David's daughters, Ahab, Jehoshaphat, Ps. xlv.); a harem with its eunuchs (David, Solomon, Abijah, Jehoiachin); standing armies of huge dimensions (Jehoshaphat, Amaziah, Uzziah); and body-guards of the kings (Saul, David (Cherethites and Pelethites), Josiah).

The officers of David's court were (2 Sam. viii. 16-18, xx. 23-26), (1) The Captain of the Host, (2) The Captain of the royal Body-guard (the Cherethites and Pelethites), (3) The Recorder or Remembrancer, (4) The Scribe or Secretary of State, (5) The Superintendent of the Levy (R.V.), i.e. the officer who presided over the forced levy for public works (this officer first appears in the later years of David's reign); (6) The High Priests, (7) Certain officials called "chief rulers" (A.V.), princes (Hebrew and R.V.); (Chronicles paraphrases by 'chief at the hand of the king' (1 Chron. xviii. 17); an office held by David's sons and others (2 Sam. viii. 18); possibly — king's friend (cf. 1 Kings iv. 5). Besides the above, Hushai holds the office of king's friend — privy counsellor (2 Sam. xv. 37; 1 Chron. xviii. 33), and Ahithophel that of counsellor (2 Sam. xv. 12), and there were overseers and court officials of various kinds (1 Chron. xxvii. 25-31). To these Solomon added the following (1 Kings iv. 1-6), (1) The High Chamberlain or Steward, (2) The superintendent of the twelve officers who provided, each for a month, victuals for the king and his household. He had also two scribes. In the later O.T. history, the offices of Captain of the Host, High Chamberlain, Scribe, and Recorder have special importance. Two captains of the host (Omri and Jehu) founded the two most important dynasties of the Northern kingdom. The High Chamberlain, Scribe, and Recorder conduct the negotiations between Hezekiah and Rabshakeh. Note that the first-named has precedence of the other two (2 Kings xviii. 18), and without doubt holds the superior office (Is. xxii. 15, 21).

We derive our information about the royal revenue mainly from the records of Solomon's reign. His revenue was enormous, but it is obvious many of its sources ceased largely or entirely after his death. (1) The profits arising from the internal (1 Kings x. 15) and the external trade (land, 1 Kings x. 28, 29; sea, 1 Kings ix. 28, x. 23). (2) The tribute paid by the subject nations (1 Kings ix. 21, x. 15; 2 Kings iii. 4; 2 Chron. xvii. 11). (3) The produce of the royal lands (1 Chron. xxvii. 25;

2 Chron. xxvi. 10). (4) The gifts made by all who were admitted to audience of the king (1 Sam. x. 27, xvi. 20; 1 Kings x. 25). (5) The king's share in (a) the produce of the land (Amos vii. 1); (b) the spoils of war (2 Sam. viii. 11). (6) The contributions in kind for the support of the royal court (1 Kings iv. 7, 27). Extraordinary needs were supplied by appropriating the treasures of the temple or royal palace (1 Kings xiv. 26, xv. 18; 2 Kings xvi. 8, xviii. 15). On only two occasions, in the last days of the Northern or Southern kingdoms respectively, was direct taxation resorted to (2 Kings xv. 20, xxiii. 35). Taxes were paid by the Jews to the Persian monarchs after the exile (Ezra iv. 13; Neh. v. 4, ix. 37). For a brief period, in the days of the Maccabees, the Jews were exempt from any tax or tribute imposed by a foreign power (1 Macc. x. 29, 30, xi. 35, xiii. 89, 41).

4. MILITARY AFFAIRS. By PROFESSOR LUMBY.

Though we have no definite information on the subject, there seems to have been some sort of military organization among the children of Israel while they were in Egypt (Ex. vi. 26, vii. 4, xii. 17, 51), and very shortly after the Exodus a census was taken (Num. i. 1-54) of all that were able to go forth to war, and a like enumeration before they entered the Promised Land (Num. xxvi. 2-51). On the first occasion the able-bodied men numbered 603550, on the second 601730. Out of this number men to serve could be drawn as occasion demanded, but it would appear probable from the history that the fighting men of each tribe, after driving out the Canaanites, so far as that duty was accomplished, served when needed mainly against enemies in their own immediate neighbourhood, and when no war threatened devoted themselves to the occupations of peace.

It was with the commencement of the kingdom that a standing army was first formed, at which time the title of Jehovah as 'Lord of Hosts' also comes into the history (1 Sam. i. 3). Saul had his selected band of 3000 (1 Sam. xiii. 2), to which he added choice soldiers whenever he found them (1 Sam. xiv. 52), and they attended on him as a body-guard (1 Sam. xxiv. 2). David before he came to the throne had a company of about 400 men (1 Sam. xxii. 2), who were soon increased to 600 (1 Sam. xxiii. 13, xxv. 13), and when he became king we find him attended by the Cherethites and Pelethites, and 600 men who came after him from Gath (2 Sam. xv. 18), and he had 'mighty men' to attend him on the right hand and on the left (2 Sam. xvi. 6, xx. 7, xxiii. 8). But beside these, according to 1 Chron. xxvii. 1, he maintained in readiness for active service a large army of which 24000 were on duty each month, making a total of 288000 men in constant training for war.

What David's intention was in taking the numbers of the people is not made clear, but it may have been done with a view of enlarging this army by subjecting more men to the levy. According to the numbers recorded (2 Sam. xxiv. 9) this might easily have been done, for there were set down in Israel 800000 men and in Judah 500000, while the total in 1 Chron. xxi. 5 is still greater, viz. 1100000 men in Israel and 470000 in Judah. Of the army of Solomon we have not much information. He was a man of peace, but it was in his days that cavalry was first introduced into the Israelite army (1 Kings x. 26), and we are told that from his traffic with Egypt he was able to supply chariots and horses to the kings round about him.

Rehoboam was able to raise a considerable force (1 Kings xii. 21) after the revolt of the ten tribes, and Asa a still larger one (2 Chron. xiv. 8). Of the large army of Jehoshaphat we are told 2 Chron. xvii. 14-18; and that there was an army under Athaliah we see from 2 Kings xi. 4. In Amaziah's reign the number of native troops recorded is not so great (2 Chron. xxv. 5, 6), but he hired a supplement of 100000 from the Northern kingdom. Uzziah's army (2 Chron. xxvi. 13) was numerous and well equipped, and in all these cases the numbers are very large compared with the extent of the country. But Palestine was, during the regal period, exposed to invasions from the North and from the South, owing to the wars between Assyria and Egypt. Hence these large numbers of trained soldiers may have been a necessity.

In the Maccabean times the number of soldiers must have been much smaller. We have no exact details, but (1 Macc. iv. 1) Gorgias considers 5000 footmen and 1000 horse enough to be sent against Judas Maccabeus, while the army of Simon against the troops of Antiochus is set down (1 Macc. xvi. 4) at 20000 men of war with horsemen. But according to Josephus mercenary troops were employed by the Jews, while on the other hand, in the proposals of king Demetrius (1 Macc. x. 36), we find that he offers to pay 30000 Jews who shall be enrolled among his troops. In later times the troops serving in Palestine were Roman and their organization that of the Roman army generally. The 'band,' mentioned several times in the New Testament, was a cohort, that is, the tenth part of a legion; the officers the usual centurions, but the spearmen, spoken of Acts xxiii. 23, appear, from their name, to have been some special kind of troops. They are not noticed in any accounts of the Roman army, but were probably of the nature of 'lancers.'

Of organization among the Israelites we come upon the first clear notice in the time of David (2 Sam. xviii. 1, 2), where the troops are divided into thousands and hundreds, and the army ranged under three leaders, in three, apparently equal, parts. No doubt something of the same arrangement continued throughout the whole history, for we find Judas Maccabæus (1 Macc. iii. 55) adopting the same divisions, and also allowing exemptions from service according to the Pentateuchal law (Deut. xx. 5) for "such as were building houses, or had betrothed wives, or were planting vineyards, or were fearful." The army of Jehoshaphat, however, was divided (2 Chron. xvii. 14-18) into five unequal divisions each with its separate commander. But the division into three bodies is most frequently mentioned (Judg. vii. 16; 1 Sam. xi. 11; 1 Macc. v. 33). Moreover one of the titles (shalish) of the officers, usually rendered 'captain' (Ex. xiv. 7; 2 Sam. xxiii. 8; 2 Kings x. 25), points by its etymology to his having charge of a third part of the troops.

Of strategy there was very little. Sometimes by a pretended flight an enemy was beguiled from his stronghold, and surprised by an ambuscade which disclosed itself in his rear; sometimes a circuit was made, and thus an enemy was surprised at an unexpected point (2 Sam. v. 23), sometimes spies were made use of that the numbers and position of the adversary might be found out and advantage taken of the knowledge (1 Sam. xxvi. 4; 1 Macc. v. 38, xii. 26).

The commander-in-chief was called 'captain of the host,' and from the history of David's reign we learn how important a person he could be (2 Sam. ii. 8, 9, viii. 16, xiv. 1-23, xix. 5). The person whose office is rendered 'scribe' in the O.T. narrative (2 Sam. viii. 17) probably had charge of the military lists and muster rolls.

The time for the commencement of military operations depended in the East on the time of the year, and is alluded to as 'the return of the year' (2 Sam. xi. 1; 1 Kings xx. 32, 26; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10). The soldiers of the army seem to have had no pay, but must have been supported when on service and supplied with arms at the expense of the kings, though provisions were at times sent to them and to their officers from home (1 Sam. xvii. 17, 18).

For weapons of offence the Israelites used swords (Gen. xxxiv. 25; Ex. xxxii. 27; Josh. x. 11; 1 Sam. xxv. 13), which were carried in sheaths (1 Sam. xvii. 51) and hung by a girdle (1 Sam. xxv. 13; Ps. xlv. 3) round the waist. They had several kinds of spears (Josh. viii. 18; 1 Sam. xvii. 46; 1 Chron. xii. 24), the variation being apparently in size and weight. Bows and arrows (1 Kings xxii. 34; 1 Chron. xii. 2) were also used, the latter being carried in a quiver (Gen. xxvii. 3). Some among the people, notably the Benjamites (Judg. xx. 16), were expert slingers, and David's slaughter of Goliath is an example of the excellent use which could be made of this simple weapon.

For the protection of the body we read of breastplates (1 Kings xxii. 34), coats of mail (1 Sam. xvii. 5), helmets (1 Sam. xvii. 38), greaves (1 Sam. xvii. 6), and two kinds of shields (1 Sam. xvii. 7; 1 Kings x. 16; 2 Kings xix. 32), a larger and a smaller, for the former of which the distinguished soldiers or leaders had with them a shieldbearer (1 Sam. xvii. 41).

In besieging a city the plan appointed for the Israelites (Deut. xx. 20) was to cast a mound or bulwark against it, from which they might hurl their missiles upon the besieged. But in the history we rarely read of this being done by them (2 Sam. x. 15), though it is not unfrequently mentioned as the practice of their enemies, or threatened as a punishment by the prophets (2 Kings xix. 32; Is. xxix. 3; Jer. vi. 6; Ezek. xxvi. 8).

In ancient warfare the lot of the conquered was a very hard one. Unless an arrangement for putting the whole land under tribute was made, slavery was the mildest fate for the women and children: often, along with old men, they were slain at once; and women with child were ripped up (2 Kings viii. 12). In the Bible history however such savagery is generally on the part of their enemies, while in many instances the warfare of the Hebrews was marked by some humanity (1 Kings xx. 31; 2 Kings vi. 22; 2 Chron. xxviii. 8). A special precept in the law forbade the destruction of trees which were 'for meat' (Deut. xx. 19, 20), though as we see it was not always observed (2 Kings iii. 18-25).

5. DOMESTIC AND SOCIAL ORDINANCES AND CUSTOMS OF THE JEWS.

BY THE REV. W. AWDRY, M.A., FORMERLY FELLOW OF QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD, AND CANON OF CHICHESTER.

The name Jew applies strictly to those Israelites who belonged to the tribe of Judah, or recognized its headship, but for our purpose it will be best to look upon the domestic and social customs of God's chosen people as coming within our scope from the time of Abraham to that of our Lord; but not to touch upon the Jews of the dispersion except where this is necessary in order to explain some Scriptural incident or reference.

We propose therefore to treat first of the conditions of life,—the house and its furniture, the town, the country; and, secondly, to give an outline of the ordinary incidents of life at home and in society, beginning with infancy and ending with death and burial.

I. Abraham and his family were, like other wandering pastoral peoples, dwellers in tents, which were easily pitched and easily taken down as they moved from place to place. Yet there are indications of a special acquaintance in Abraham's family with one art at least which must have enabled them to lead a less roving life than others, and so may have led to their using more commodious dwellings. Abraham and Isaac excelled in finding water and sinking wells, the possession of which became a subject of contention with their less skilful or less industrious neighbours. Isaac, too, perhaps in consequence of delicate health leading to premature age and blindness, travelled less than his father, and for a time at least engaged successfully in agriculture. And Abraham, as the chief of a powerful and wealthy clan, may have occupied something more than what is the ordinary sheikh's tent among the Bedouin of the present day. Still the tent of the Arabian deserts is the best illustration that we have of the dwellings of the patriarchs. Its material is black cloth made of goats' hair, such as St Paul no doubt wove. This is spread over poles, arranged in three rows, the middle row being the highest, and it is strained open with cords pegged into the ground a couple of yards from the side of the tent. The greatest height is usually not more than six feet, so that the occupants merely squat upon their heels, with their arms resting on their knees. The front of the tent is open to the air, but a long strip of woollen cloth is often hung round the other sides and reaches to the ground, while another strip of cloth, hung from the middle line of poles, divides the women's part of the tent from that which is occupied by the men.

All the generations of a family usually live in the one tent, but if they become too numerous a second will be pitched for the son and his family, and when the wives cannot agree a separate tent is sometimes pitched for each of them. It was probably into the women's portion of Abraham's own tent that Isaac took Rebekah when she became his wife. From the story of Laban's search for his lost images we see that the trappings of the camels were arranged in the dwelling to serve as seats, and probably there was very little other furniture, only the loom and distaff, the mats and rugs to serve as beds, perhaps the pestle and mortar for crushing grain, or a pair of small mill-stones, the upper not being too large for a woman easily to turn it with a handle, and the vessels for cooking and for drawing water. The patriarchs no doubt used the ordinary food of the desert, dates and milk, with meat of camel, goat, or calf upon occasion, and they made their own clothing of wool, or camels' hair, just as they made their own tents.

During their long stay in Egypt the children of Israel must many of them have lived in huts or houses, built of mud or sun-dried bricks like those of the lower orders of the Egyptians, for we hear of the lintel and side-posts of their doors. Their food, too, was changed. They used little handmills to grind their grain, and kneaded their dough on boards, generally making it rise with leaven. They grew and ate a great variety of vegetables, irrigating their gardens with water from the Nile.

But the 46 years of wandering in the wilderness brought them back to the old patriarchal mode of life. Many of them were no doubt discontented with this change in their dwellings, as they were discontented with the change of food, but these changes involved little discomfort. At the same time, in place of the colossal temples of Egypt, their house of God became a 'tent of the congregation,' similar to their own, though larger and more sumptuous.

If they had to renounce the luxuries of Egypt, they carried with them into the wilderness a knowledge of its wisdom and its arts. Moses indeed was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; Aaron was skilful as a goldsmith, Bezaleel and Aholiab, too, and the 'women that were wise-hearted,' had 'wisdom which God put in their hearts,' and which was shewn in guiding the structural and ornamental work of the tabernacle: work in metal, wood, weaving and embroideries, and in the setting, if not the cutting, of jewels. Such skill had no doubt been acquired by many during the stay in Egypt, and to this day embroideries and ornamental work in metals are the chief artistic industries of that country.

When the Israelites conquered the Promised Land they entered upon the possession of houses ready built, with vineyards planted and other fruits of the civilization of a settled people. Most perhaps of the two tribes and a half which had their inheritance east of Jordan continued their pastoral life and 'abode among the sheepfolds to hear the bleatings of the flocks,' though amongst them too there were fenced cities here and there, and walled sheepfolds with watch-towers for times of danger. But the rest of the nation no doubt settled down into an agricultural and gradually into a trading people, living chiefly in houses and largely in towns.

What, then, were their houses like? We cannot tell with any certainty; for not one of them remains. But when we remember that there is not a single house in this country, and probably not a church, of which any great part is 1000 years old, we must not be surprised that no domestic architecture of Palestine, such as it was when the Israelites entered the country some 3400 years ago, has come down to us. The best that we can do is to see what the old town and country houses in Palestine and the neighbouring lands are now, and to compare these with anything which the monuments of Egypt, Babylon, and Assyria can tell us, and with the occasional references in the Bible.

At first the Israelites succeeded to the houses of the Amorites and Canaanites, generally no doubt in pretty good repair. The walls of the cities were high and strong. Rahab's house was on the wall of Jericho, with a window looking outwards through which the spies could be let down, and where afterwards her scarlet thread could be displayed. The roof was flat, and used for drying the bundles of flax from which she made her thread, and under which she could hide the spies.

In the troubled times of the Judges it is likely enough that both city walls and houses fell out of repair; and certainly the open country was often at the mercy of the foreign nations who oppressed Israel. Thus in Deborah's day "the highways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked through byways." These highways were merely well-known open tracks, not roads like ours, for so far as we know there were no Israelite carriages or chariots till the time of Solomon, and very few horses. Gideon, again, had to thresh his corn in a winepress out of sight of the marauding Midianites, for had he threshed on the hard smooth threshing-floor on the hill-top, where the wind would have done the winnowing for him, they would have seen what he was doing and taken his corn.

In walled towns the houses must always have been of stone, which was abundant in Palestine, while wood was scarce, at least in the south. There is little notice of a palace in Saul's day, but the room in which he entertained his court was probably a permanent structure, and if of stone it may have been lined inside with boards, as Saul's javelin thrown at David stuck into the wall; but when the king was with his army even in permanent head-quarters he dwelt under a tree, no doubt in a tent like his soldiers.

With David's reign the art of housebuilding made much progress, but it may be gathered how little skill there was in Israel from Hiram, king of Tyre, having considered that the most acceptable present he could give to David was to build him a house at Jerusalem; and for this he not only supplied the timber, pine, cypress, and cedar from distant Lebanon, but sent the architect and skilled workmen too from Phœnicia. Even thirty years later, though in the interval the Israelites must have learnt much themselves, all the hewing and carving of timber and the casting of metal was done for Solomon by foreigners.

The styles of architecture introduced in Solomon's day were therefore not of native origin, and probably they affected the houses of the common people but little. Indeed timber was so much more rare and costly than stone in southern Palestine that the profuse employment of it seems to have been a fashion with the richest. Not only were the timbers and panelling of the temple thought worthy of special notice, but the 'house of the forest of Lebanon,' the most sumptuous of all Solomon's buildings next to the temple, in which no metal less costly than gold was allowed a place, appears to have been a vast superstructure resting upon a forest of cedar pillars. A mode of building like that, in which less durable materials were employed just because they were more rare and costly, could never be more than a fashion of the rich. It was as foreign as the 'ivory house' which Ahab built, adorned, no doubt, by the Phœnician workmen of his wife Jezebel with ivory which Phœnician traders supplied. So, too, the panelling with cedar and painting with vermilion of Jehoiakim's palace (Jer. xxii. 14) is condemned as a costly and selfish luxury, inappropriate in a time of national poverty and distress.

The houses of the people generally must have been built much as they are at the present day. The tenements of the poor might be of one or two rooms, either separate or opening out of a courtyard common to all; but the simplest form of a fair-sized house would be a plain courtyard of a single story, with few, if any, windows looking outwards on the country, though town houses seem to have had windows towards the street. Over or by the side of the door there is now generally a little window to enable the owner or his porter to see who is knocking. All the ground-floor rooms open into the courtyard, which serves as the common passage for all purposes, the rooms being separated from each other by partitions, and from the court by partial partitions with lattice or open window unglazed above them. The court is either quite open to the sky or partly covered in with a light roof; and the roofed portion of the court forms a gallery or verandah all round, and is available as a cool and airy room for summer use. It was in such a courtyard that our Saviour was teaching when they uncovered the roof because they could not get through the throng, and let down the paralytic over the heads of the crowd. It was in such a court at the high priest's palace that the servants made their charcoal fire when St Peter stood and warmed himself among the less privileged retainers of the house, and he must have been still in the court when our Saviour was led across and gave the look which brought him to himself.

For in larger houses there often is an upper floor. This must, from early times, have been the case at Jerusalem, where, in no very large space, accommodation had to be found not only for the regular residents but for the multitudes who came up to the yearly feasts. At the great festivals the Jews at Jerusalem exercised unbounded hospitality, and declined all rent from strangers for their rooms. In the high priest's palace the upper rooms would be arranged in much the same way as the lower, a gallery running all round on the inner side towards the court, and serving as the passage from room to room. With this simple arrangement it is plain that there was neither need nor place for an indoor staircase, but the upper story and the roof were reached by a flight of steps running up by the side of the wall in the open air, and in a street it was easy to pass from roof to roof.

Where timber or suitable stone can be had the roofs are flat throughout, with cement or slabs of stone laid upon wooden joists and sloping just enough to let the rain drain off into a cistern; but the lack of wood in southern Palestine must always have made the present form of roof more common there, —small domes of stone covering in the rooms, while the sides and corners round the domes were filled in and laid flat so as to give at least a portion of the roof for an open-air room or promenade. Here St Peter could pray unseen, but hence also a voice could be most widely heard, and so our Lord compares His own private teaching of His disciples to words said in an inner chamber, and their publication of the gospel to proclamations made upon the housetops.

Round the house-tops ran a rail or parapet at least three feet high, according to the Mosaic law (Deut. xxii. 8), which made the owner responsible for the death of anyone who fell from his house unless this rule had been complied with. Such a parapet would also be a convenience when wool, flax, &c. were stored on the roof.

In the hot season the men's beds are usually spread upon the roof for the sake of the fresh air, and sometimes a little shed on poles, slatted over but open to the air on all sides, is placed upon the roof by way of summer-house for use both night and day. Perhaps it was to such a summer-house that Eglon, king of Moab, had gone up for nocturnal rest when Ehud slew him.

In large country houses where ground space was abundant, instead of an upper story there would generally be an inner court reached through the outer, and in such cases the inner contained the more private rooms occupied by the master and his family, and particularly by the women, while the dependants lived and worked in the outer court and chambers. Though the rooms generally opened upon the courtyard rather than into one another, yet in large houses there were rooms reached only through other rooms. Such were 'secret chambers,' the store-rooms or treasure-rooms of the house, and the hiding-places, as when Micah says to Zedekiah, "Thou shalt go into an inner chamber (lit. a chamber within a chamber) to hide thyself" (1 Kings xlii. 25).

One more phrase regarding the general structure of the house requires explanation. What was the 'prophet's chamber' made in the wall for Elisha by the Shunammite? Probably it was one of those wooden balconies reached from within the house, and roofed and latticed but not otherwise protected from the weather, which pictures of Jerusalem and other Oriental towns show in abundance; or it may have been a little chamber on the roof reached from the outside staircase. Here was placed the simple furniture which met his wants, the seat and the bedstead, the table and the lamp, for his washing would be done in the court below.

11. An Oriental needs little furniture. Neither poor nor rich, men nor women, sit upon chairs or sofas, but they squat or sit cross-legged on the ground or on a mat or cushion. The floors of a palace may be made of marble; there may be, and generally is, a fountain in the middle of the large hall; the inner portion may be raised a step or two above the outer, forming a sort of dais; the walls may be inlaid with marble carved in patterns, overlaid in part with ivory or with thin plates of precious metals hammered down until they accurately reproduce the carving behind them, as in Solomon's temple; the ceilings may be panelled or painted or otherwise enriched, and special care and cost may be expended on the corners and cornices, so that by their beauty, their adornment, and their modest withdrawal to the most distant part of the room, they become apt emblems of the daughters who should be as the polished corners of the temple. But even with all this cost and care, the actual furniture of the room will consist only of a few mats or rugs laid upon the floor here and there, the divan, or row of cushions, round the inner portion of the room against the wall, and some small, low, movable tables which can be placed near anyone who wants them.

Across the room servants, or rather slaves, will be moving without a sound, for though their heads are covered their feet are bare. No Oriental would stand with bare head or covered feet in attendance on his betters, whether God or man. And all put off their shoes at the entrance of a place of worship, so that on entering a mosque at this day you see at the threshold the shoes of all the worshippers. (The Rabbis, however, permitted shoes to be worn in the synagogue lest it should appear to be of equal sanctity with the temple.) Even on the threshold of a friend's house the visitor calls his slave to unstrap and carry his sandals while he enters. Hence the fitness of John the Baptist's words when he professed himself unworthy to do even such menial service for our Lord.

If the furniture of a palace is so simple, clearly that of a humble house will differ from it chiefly in materials and in minor details. Thus rugs and cushions will be replaced by mats and shawls, or the fountain by a basin and ewer; and the poorer visitor, if shed at all, will slip off and carry his sandals for himself.

In the time of our Lord, however, the purely Oriental customs had been much affected by Greek and Roman influences even in Judaea, and yet more in Galilee of the Gentiles. Thus had been introduced in private houses the use of chairs, which in earlier times had been the badge of royal and especially of judicial office.

But however much or little the use of seats like ours may have become customary among the Jews of our Lord's day, it is clear that in set and formal meals the general Eastern practice of squatting on the ground round the bowl or dish, and rolling together a mouthful with the fingers, had given way to the Roman and Greek method of lying upon couches supported on one elbow, with a cushion under the arm to relieve the pressure, whilst the dishes would be passed or handed from one to another. The custom also of drinking, perhaps by lip, a president of the feast, as we see in the wedding at Cana of Galilee, had been adopted from the Greeks. The bridegroom supplied the wine, but the 'governor of the feast' directed when it should be passed round. The food was taken with the fingers from dish or plate, a practice which the mention of the scrupulous washing of hands before meals, of the presence of the six water-pots of stone at the great feast at Cana, and of the jug, basin, and towel in the upper room at Jerusalem—though these were meant for ritual rather than physical cleansing—saves from the charge of uncleanness.

The circumstances of the Last Supper, and of the anointing of our Lord's feet while at table, and many other allusions, are unintelligible unless we have a picture of the scene in our minds. In the Galilean houses, not only of Matthew the publican where it would almost seem that there was a free table for all comers, but of Simon the Pharisee whose invited company was select whilst any who chose had access to the guests at table, the meal must have been served either in a chamber not divided from the courtyard by any partition, or more probably in the open verandah. In the upper chamber at Jerusalem of course this was not so. The little company of thirteen must have been undisturbed by strangers, as was indeed our Saviour's purpose. But in all the cases alike three couches were laid in the form of a horse-shoe and the company occupied three sides only of the table, thus leaving free access for the servants on the other side. The couches were flat and broad, without head or arms or backs. The occupants reclined with their heads near the edge of the table and their feet sloping outwards towards the outer edge of the couch. Thus anyone could reach the feet of the guests without coming near the table or interfering with the servants. And so it was that at one time our Lord stepped off the couch, put off His outer garments, tied the long strip of towel round His waist with the ends hanging down in front, and then taking the basin round washed, from the feet of the apostles, as they lay, the dust which they had gathered in walking; and it may be that St Peter declined at first to receive such a service from his Lord by drawing up his feet from the outer edge of the couch within the folds of his garments. Thus, too, the woman who was a sinner could bathe and anoint our Saviour's feet without interfering at all with the meal which was in progress. While eating, each person raised himself on his elbow: between times he rested his arm by letting his head fall back upon his cushion. So when our Saviour was raised on His elbow and St John resting on his cushion, the head of St John, chosen for the place next below Him on the same couch, would necessarily be in our Saviour's bosom, and he could ask unheard the question, "Lord, who is it?"

Except in winter, people freely slept in the open air. Hence the law forbade the creditor to take, or at least to keep after sundown, the raiment of his debtor as a pledge for payment, for "wherein shall he sleep?" (Exod. xxii. 27.). Thus Jacob at Bethel slept with a stone for his pillow, and thus He who had not where to lay His head often, we may suppose, lay down to rest on the slopes of the Mount of Olives or under the trees of Gethsemane. But in houses, even in humble homes, at least on the ground-floor, bedsteads were used, raised sufficiently for things to be hidden under them, else our Lord would not have spoken of the lamp being put under the bed instead of on the lampstand.

That some kind of pillow was used in David's day we learn from Michal placing the image with a pillow covered in cloth of goats' hair for its bolster. Cushions were in use even among persons in modest circumstances if the pillow, which seems to have been an ordinary part of the furniture of a boat on the Sea of Galilee, was really a cushion, and not merely a wooden headrest.

Each house, too, had its measure (or bushel) for solid food, and its pitchers, which the women carried out to the well on head or shoulder at certain times of day, and tilted down upon the hand when they wished to pour out the water, as Rebekah did for Abraham's servant. So the well's mouth became the place of meeting and of chat, but in our Saviour's time this work was done for the wealthier classes by their slaves. Skins, that is the whole skin of a goat, carefully sewn together to be watertight, with one leg so tied up that it could readily be undone to serve as a spout, were used for keeping wine, and also were no doubt carried, as they still are, by water-sellers to the different houses of a town, but they would not necessarily be part of the furniture of a house, though they, like the house-broom, have their place in our Saviour's teaching.

III. We must now give a short sketch of the leading events of an Israelite's life from birth to burial.

The birth of a child, especially of a first-born son, was a source of great joy, and more so perhaps among the Jews than in any other nation. The Roman historian, Tacitus, quotes with contempt as one of the points in which the ways of the Jews were absurdly contrary to those of all other peoples that they did not allow the parent to settle whether his new-born children should be reared or not.

No doubt the Israelite preferred sons to daughters, for his daughters went by marriage to strengthen other families, while his sons took wives from other families to strengthen his own and so to prevent his name from perishing; and the very word for male means keeping in remembrance. The strengthening of the family must always be a matter of importance in unsettled and lawless times, when "blessed is the man that hath his quiver full" of sons: "they shall not be ashamed when they speak with their enemies in the gate." The Mosaic law, too, made a difference in favour of the son when it decreed a later date for purification after a daughter's birth, and when it enacted that every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy unto the Lord. And in our Lord's day the traditions of the elders had carried this doctrine of the inferiority of woman so far that it was an impropriety in a Rabbi to speak to a woman at all in public, and if obliged to do so he was bound to confine himself to the fewest words possible. Hence it has been observed that our Lord's converse with the Samaritan woman involved a threefold self-humiliation in that He spoke to a woman, that the woman was a Samaritan, and that she was a sinner.

Still, women were less secluded, more honoured and esteemed, and had a higher place both in domestic and public life among the Jews than in any other kindred races.

But the family rejoicing over the birth of a boy was held not at the time of the birth into the world, but on that day week, when by circumcision he was admitted to share in the privileges of the children of Israel, and came into covenant with God. Then the neighbours and the cousins would come and rejoice with the parents, and make their voice heard in the choosing of the name. Two influences besides the fancy of the parents appear to have affected the choice of a name, (1) Religion, for all Hebrew names have a meaning, and almost all of those recorded in Scripture have a definitely religious meaning, the great majority containing in some form the Name of God; and (2) family or tribal relationships. So the name Saul recurs in the tribe of Benjamin, that of Zechariah among the descendants of Aaron; and on the birth of John the Baptist the name John seemed inappropriate because none of his kinsmen was called by this name; while in this case the aged father's, but more commonly the grandfather's, name was generally preferred to any other.

Among the humbler classes, at least, the little babe appears to have been swathed in strips of cloth wound round him, but when rather older he was left unclad, and was often carried on the shoulder or astride upon the mother's hip.

IV. "The streets of the city (Jerusalem) shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." The streets then were the playground for city children, but the words rendered streets mean literally the 'out of doors' or the 'wide places,' and they refer not so much to the narrow crooked alleys of Eastern towns as to the open spaces at the city gates, and the open market-places or bazaars where the traders set up their booths. In these open spaces among the booths, or before they are pitched, are the children of the town running in and out and shouting to their fellows, free, like other children, in the use of their limbs and voices, and shaping their play by the ways of their elders,

"A wedding or a festival,
A mourning or a funeral."

Our Saviour tells how, when the game fell through, the more eager called to their fellows and said, "We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented."

V. Not much is known of the education of girls, or even of boys until shortly before the time of our Lord, but up to six years of age the Jewish child was taught at home, chiefly no doubt by the mother orally, and until the boy was ten no text-book was used but Holy Scripture. So Timothy had been taught by his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice, though his father was a Gentile. The schools, which all boys from six years old had to attend, were generally held in the synagogues, where the children might be seen in a semicircle facing their teacher. He and they alike would be either standing or sitting on the ground, for it is characteristic of the reverence for childhood, and the great and sacred value set on education, that the teacher was bound to put himself on a level with his little scholars in place and posture. The most careful principles were laid down for his guidance in the moral training of his class. The aim was to encourage study by sense of duty rather than by reward or fear. Punishments were to be moderate, lest they should make the child wish to escape from school: even the father was restrained from the use of corporal punishment after his son was 'of age,' i.e. 13 years old. Both indelicacy of thought and the knowledge of evil were to be kept from the child as far as might be, forgiveness of wrongs was to be inculcated, while knowledge of the law, including its interpretation and the traditions which were set up to be a 'hedge' around it, was regarded as eminently meritorious. As the birth of one Israelite outweighed that of all other children in the world, so one man learned in the law was more worth than all the 'people of the land,' i.e. the ignorant. In order that teaching might be thorough, no class even in the elementary school might exceed 25 pupils.

Reading, writing, and grammar were taught in the schools, and numbers were studied also, but at least as much for the mystical significance which many, such as 3, 7, 12, 40, 70, have in Holy Scripture, as for practical use in calculation. The 'religious question' could not exist in Jewish education any more than it can exist in mission schools in heathen lands, for the whole and sole purpose of education was religious. The use of Scripture as the text-book for all subjects was not an irreverence but a matter of course, for the alphabet itself was sacred and mystical, inasmuch as the word of God was written with it, and nothing was worth the learning except as it taught or illustrated Holy Scripture.

At home probably Bible stories were taught as with us, but the regular course at school began with the first seven chapters of Leviticus, probably because they must be known perfectly by every Israelite that he might not make mistakes in the outward acts required of him; then the rest of the Pentateuch, then the 'Prophets,' and then the rest of the Old Testament.

One great event occurred in the course of the school life of a Jewish child. It might be compared to the close of primary and the test before promotion to secondary education now, and at the same time it corresponded in some degree to the close of our childhood, and entering at Confirmation upon the personal responsibility which belongs to Christian manhood. The Jewish boy, now over 12 years old, was taken to Jerusalem at one of the great feasts, and tested by the doctors of the law in the temple as to his knowledge of the duties and privileges to which by circumcision he had been admitted without any choice of his own. In passing this test he was regarded as freely and intelligently 'taking upon himself the yoke of the Law,' or 'of the Kingdom of God,' and henceforth he was bound to fulfil the precepts of the ceremonial law.

VI. The intensely religious and national colouring which was thrown over their whole life by the sense of being God's chosen nation is illustrated by many little customs over and above the feasts, fringes, phylacteries, &c., which the law required. Thus, some text containing the Name of God was written on the entrance to each Jewish house, and all who entered touched the holy Name with their finger and then kissed the finger which had touched it.

When Israelites met, they greeted each other by asking, 'Is it peace with you?' or by wishing 'Peace be with you,' where we should say 'How do you do?' and to omit such greetings was a sign of haste or urgency of business, as with Gehazi when bearing Elisha's staff to the dead child, or the apostles when sent on their missionary journey by our Lord.

At the feast of the Dedication, which commemorated the reconsecration of the altar by Judas Maccabæus, every Jewish house was illuminated; the matron of the house usually lighting one lamp on the first day of the feast for each member of the household, two on the second day, and so on till the seven days were over.

At the Passover, the youngest member of each Paschal company asked, 'What meaneth this service?' and his elders told the story of the chosen people and of their deliverance from Egypt. 'Thus these celebrations gave the opportunity of recounting year by year the great events of the nation's history.

So, too, there are Hebrew 'graces' of unknown antiquity now prescribed for use not only before and after meals, but on the sight of storm, sunshine, and flowers, or the enjoyment of sweet odours of various kinds. They are mostly framed upon the model of such verses as 'Blessed be the Lord God of Israel who only doeth wondrous things, and blessed be the Name of His Majesty for ever, and let all the earth be filled with His Majesty. Amen, Amen.' But they provided a method for every Israelite to realize, at least in outward form, the apostle's bidding, "Whether ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," "giving thanks to God and the Father."

VII. The wealthy youths, as well as the poor, were taught a trade or handicraft. Good works, and especially charity to the poor, the widow, and the orphan, were earnestly enjoined as bringing great reward both here and hereafter. Yet there was watchfulness on the part of the authorities to see that the able-bodied should not beg instead of working. The maintenance of those who were poor not by their own fault had been provided for in the Mosaic law by the Jubilee, which restored to the families of their original owners lands that had been sold or, as we should say, leased till that date, while individuals who had fallen into distress were entitled in the seventh year to their release, and to something from the flock and herd and other substance of their masters to give them a fresh start. These provisions were further enlarged by the right of the nearest of kin to redeem both the person and the family property of an Israelite. Then, too, a special tithe, the fruits of the land in the sabbatical year, the gleanings of all the principal crops, and the 'corners' of the fields, which were not to be reaped expressly that the poor might have what grew in them, the right of plucking and eating when passing through the standing corn,—all these were provisions for the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow.

Meanwhile the infirm and maimed were expressly permitted to beg, and often occupied special places at the temple gates and elsewhere, where, as the man blind from his birth, and the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, they became well known by face to those who passed in and out, and were recipients of a charity aptly combined with devotion. The story of the rich man and Lazarus shews how others took up their place near rich men's doors and lived upon their broken meats.

But in fact the poor must have felt their poverty less amongst the Jews than in any other nation. Poverty did not exclude from 'society' any more than it excluded from the sacred brotherhood of the children of Abraham. Learning, by which is meant a knowledge of the law and the traditions, not wealth, was the main ground of social honour, and the foundation of social pride. Men wanted to be called Rabbi, Rabbi, the term of honour given to the learned teachers, and it was the Rabbis who had the highest places. They walked with staid steps, were followed by their troop of reverential pupils, saluted with respect, under heavy penalties, by all who met them, distinguished by their long tunics and deep fringes or tassels, and by their larger phylacteries or leather cases containing scrolls of certain passages of the law worn upon the forehead and left arm; and it was the Rabbis who looked with contempt upon the unlettered crowd, and said of all such, "This people who knoweth not the law are cursed."

VIII. The ordinary head-dress of a Jew in our Lord's day was a large handkerchief wound into a turban. This, as we have seen, would be worn always in public and in the presence of betters. From the back of the turban sometimes hung a smaller handkerchief, protecting the back of the neck and shoulders from the sun. On the feet, the sandals generally worn in summer were sometimes replaced in winter by roughly made shoes. On the body next the skin was worn a long shirt or tunic reaching, in the case of a Rabbi, to the feet, and fitting closely in the upper part. It was put on over the head, and sometimes, as in the case of our Lord, woven in a single piece from the top throughout. There were either slits for the arms to pass through or, perhaps more commonly, loose short sleeves. The material varied from the 'rough garment' of haircloth, which marked John the Baptist and other prophets, to the finest fabrics; sometimes it seems that even leather was used. Outside this shirt or tunic was worn a girdle, generally of leather, from which purse, or pouch, or weapon hung. As the tunic, reaching below the knees, would interfere with active movement, it was drawn up under the girdle as an outward sign of being busy ("Let your loins be girded about"), or as a preliminary to energetic work, as when Elijah girded up his loins and ran before Ahab. Lastly, a square shawl, edged with a fringe, and having tassels of five threads, four white and one blue, knotted together at each corner, was worn as a mantle or over-garment, and arranged so that it did not quite reach down to the bottom of the tunic.

IX. An Israelite's day began with a very light refreshment, a few figs perhaps and a little bread, which was usually somewhat sour because, in the absence of yeast, a little bit of sour dough (leaven) had been used to make it rise. This refreshment would not be taken with the family, but the man of ease probably ate it in his chamber, the workman on his way to work. The first real meal was usually about an hour before noon (the 5th hour). It was to this that our Lord called His disciples by the Sea of Galilee after His Resurrection, when they had been toiling all the night. But the principal meal (or dinner) was about the eleventh hour, a little before sunset, when the day's work was done.

At domestic entertainments the women did not dine with the men, but sometimes joined them after dinner, and it would seem took their part in the conversation and amusements which followed. Music and dancing had been closely associated with the religious life of the people for ages past, when David and Solomon wrote their Psalms and other songs, and David put off his royal robes to dance in the street before the ark; and still in the time of our Lord not only instrumental and vocal music, but dancing also, were pastimes in no way degrading to women of high position and character. The dances, however, seem not to have been carried on by men and women together, but the company watched the graceful movements of some chief dancer who, with or without others to bear subordinate parts, represented, it may be, some scene or idea by gesture in measured time to the accompaniment of music. Such probably was the dance of Herodias.

X. A Jewish boy 'came of age' at thirteen years and a day, a girl at twelve years and a day. At a later age than this they could not be contracted in marriage without their own consent, and the betrothal of a maiden seldom preceded marriage by more than twelve months. Betrothal was the solemn contract of which marriage was but the later fulfilment. Hence the unfaithfulness of one betrothed was visited with the same penalty as adultery. The usual form of betrothal was the payment of a piece of money by the future bridegroom to his bride. Though in its form betrothal was a purchase of the woman, and though divorce, permitted but regulated by the law and disapproved by the latest of the prophets and in principle by the Rabbis, was made easy by the Rabbinical tradition, yet the wife was held in high honour and respect, and it was a prime duty of every Jewish man to marry.

For the marriage ceremony we cannot do better than quote from Dr Edersheim's The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, vol. 1., pp. 354, 5, "On the evening of the actual marriage the bride was led from her paternal home to that of her husband. First came the merry sounds of music; then they who distributed among the people wine and oil, and nuts among the children; next the bride, covered with the bridal veil, her long hair flowing, surrounded by her companions, and led by 'the friends of the bridegroom,' and the 'children of the bridechamber.' All around were in festive array; some carried torches, or lamps on poles; those nearest had myrtle branches and chaplets of flowers. Everyone rose to salute the procession, or join it; and it was deemed almost a religious duty to break into praise of the beauty, the modesty, or the virtues of the bride. Arrived at her new home, she was led to her husband. Some such formula as, 'Take her according to the Law of Moses and of Israel' would be spoken, and bride and bridegroom crowned with garlands. Then a formal legal instrument was signed, which set forth that the bridegroom undertook to work for her, to honour, keep, and care for her, as is the manner of the men of Israel. Then, after the prescribed washing of hands and benediction, the marriage supper began—the cup being filled and the solemn prayer of bridal benediction spoken over it. And so the feast lasted—it might be more than one day." Indeed, the whole week was festive, and the month was spoken of as the 'bridal days,' while by the Mosaic law a man was released from military service for a year after his marriage.

From the earliest times the bride was veiled until the actual marriage, as Rebekah veiled herself on seeing Isaac; and the marriage took place in the evening. Hence it was that Laban could pass off Leah upon Jacob, who did not find out the fraud till next morning. The wedding was regarded as lasting for a week, and if circumstances allowed of it the marriage festivities, with an open house, would continue for this length of time; and this is no doubt the meaning on Laban's lips of 'Fulfil her (Leah's) week' before marrying Rachel.

XI. Long life was accounted a great blessing amongst the Israelites, and old age was treated with reverent regard. Men waited on the old, attended upon their steps, yielded precedence to them, rose up in their presence. It is characteristic of the profound veneration for the judgement of the old, that in the Sanhedrin, when a case had been heard, the opinions were to be given in order of age, beginning at the youngest; lest if the elder had been heard first, the younger should but echo their views instead of giving an independent voice.

But when the time came that a man must die, death had a gloom and terror even for the best Israelites which for Christians it has lost. Premature death seems always to have been bitter. Hezekiah, in prospect of it, 'turned his face toward the wall... and wept sore'; and several of the Psalmists echo the same feelings as his lament. In fact, whilst life in the Promised Land was God's great blessing to them, what lay beyond this life was very dim,—too shadowy to give much consolation except in times of highest inspiration and deepest perplexity and distress, like that which called forth the 16th and 17th Psalms, and "I know that my Redeemer liveth." As time went on, the belief in a general resurrection became both more common and more distinct. It was not the Sadducees, who were but a small party, that expressed the common belief, but Martha, when she said, 'I know that Lazarus shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.'

When death had come, the body was washed, covered, as far as the circumstances of the relations allowed, with spices, and wound round and round with long cloths of linen or other material; the head, in the case of Lazarus as well as of our Lord, infolded in a separate cloth. The relations gathered at once to the house of mourning, and so too did the hired minstrels and 'such as were skilful of lamentation,' but the time allowed for this was short, for in all ordinary cases, except that of a parent, the burial took place, if possible, on the same day. The body was laid without coffin on a bier, and carried out beyond the town walls to the place of burial, which was either a public cemetery or, where circumstances allowed, in the private grounds of the family. The women often led the procession, and hence our Lord could speak to the widow of Nain before He stopped the bearers of her son. It was the office of the hired mourners to express sorrow by music, praises of the dead, loud wailings, with other outward signs of woe, such as beating of the breast and rending of the garments. All who met the funeral were expected to join the procession. The house continued a house of mourning for a week. Public mourning for a great man had certainly in former times extended to thirty days, and some of the signs of private grief were kept up for the same period, while a child continued in mourning for his father for a year; but mourning was not permitted on the sabbaths nor on certain festivals.

As regards the final disposal of the body, the Israelites abhorred the idea of destroying it by burning, and either buried it in the ground, or, if circumstances permitted, laid it in a rock-hewn tomb. The tomb was visited by the friends of the departed for at least the first three days. The tombs were carefully marked and generally kept whitewashed, in some cases no doubt garnished in honour of the deceased, but generally in order that people might not be defiled by walking over them unawares.

XII. It may be asked who succeeded to the dead man's property. The Jewish laws on this subject were well considered and well defined. Their principles, too, were of very ancient date. In regard to family estates, the purpose of the Mosaic law was that they should never be permanently alienated. The land of Israel in theory belonged to God, who granted it out to the several families, at the entrance into Canaan, for themselves and for their sons for ever. Hence the owners in any one generation had only limited rights. They could let on lease till the next year of Jubilee, but in that year all leases were to terminate, and all land and houses, except what lay in walled towns, were then to revert to the family of the original holder. For this purpose, that the land of one tribe might not pass in perpetuity to the members of another, heiresses were bound to marry members of their own tribe. The laws relating to the right of the next of kin to redeem the family land, i.e. to buy out the leaseholder, had the same general object in view. Not that these, any more than other Mosaic laws, were fully carried out at any period of the nation's history. Legal ingenuity found ways of evading the effect of the law of Jubilee, and prophets had occasion to pronounce a woe upon those who laid house to house and joined field to field till there was no room, that they might be placed alone in the midst of the land. Yet even in the most corrupt period of the kingdom of the ten tribes, their worst king felt the moral weight of these laws too strong for him, and could not see his way to override his subject's curt answer, 'God forbid that I should give (in return for its full value) the inheritance of my fathers unto thee,' until his foreign queen shewed him the way.

But far earlier than these provisions regulating the succession to landed estates in Palestine, was the leading custom in regard to the devolution of what we should call personal, that is moveable, property, tents, furniture, jewels and money, clothing, flocks and herds, and the like. Three main offices were vacated by the death of a patriarch like Abraham, (1) the Headship of the tribe, (2) the Priesthood for the tribe, and (3) the ownership of property, which in those cases was all 'personal.' In the natural order of things the first two offices would devolve on the eldest son, or where there were sons by several mothers on the eldest son of the principal wife, and this eldest son would receive a double portion of the property: thus if there were twelve sons the property would be divided into thirteen portions, and the eldest son would have two of these, the rest one each. But it clearly lay within the power of the patriarch to dispose of these things otherwise, either by gift before his death, or by will to take effect at his death. Thus Abraham gave gifts to all his other children during his life, but made Isaac his sole heir, while Jacob gave Judah the headship, and Joseph the double portion of the property; but the priesthood seems to have belonged to the 'firstborn' in each family until it was transferred to the tribe of Levi.

In later times, the lawyers allowed a man to give away his fortune as he would during his life, and to will what he would to each of his children, so that by willing it all away to others, one who was not mentioned would be practically disinherited; but to expressly disinherit a son was not lawful, and a will containing such a provision would be invalid. Indeed, so strong was the feeling that his due share vested of right in each son during the father's lifetime that for the younger son to say, when leaving home to seek his fortune, "Father, give me the portion of goods (presumably one-third) that falleth to me," does not appear to have sounded outrageous to Jewish ears: nor does the father hesitate to say of the rest to his elder son, "All that I have is thine."

The wife's dowry, however, was her own, and did not pass by the same rules of succession. On the father's death, the widow had right of residence and maintenance in his house, and the daughters shared alike in the property, and were entitled to maintenance till married, at their brothers' charge. In truth, as the Israelites insisted on filial duty to a very high degree, notwithstanding certain traditions enabling the son to evade it, so also they recognised parental duty even more than it is recognised among ourselves. Domestic family life among the Jews must have been most happily ordered, except where broken up in earlier times by polygamy or in later by divorce, and the supreme desire to found or continue a family upon the inheritance, together with the high honour attaching to a 'father in Israel,' linked the parent to his sons with a bond very difficult to sever.

6. LITERATURE (WRITING, POETRY AND OTHER FORMS OF COMPOSITION).

By PROFESSOR LUMBY.

If we trace the history of the Israelites backward we are led to the conclusion that they must have been acquainted with the art of writing at least as early as the Exodus. Commencing with the times of Nehemiah and Ezra we are sure from the books which bear their names that the Jews must have carried with them to Babylon a considerable literature, embracing much domestic and national history. The constant appeals that are made at that time to registers of genealogies bespeak for these documents both antiquity and authority. Cf. Ezra ii. 62, viii. 3; Neh. vii. 5, 64, xii. 23. The great number of authorities referred to in the Books of Chronicles shews that many original documents were accessible to the compilers. Beside the genealogies which occupy the early chapters of 1 Chronicles, there are other authorities named in 1 Chr. xxix. 29; 2 Chr. ix. 29, xii. 15, xiii. 22, xxiv. 27, xxvi. 22, xxxiii. 32, as well as frequent allusions to "the book of the kings of Judah and Israel."

Before the Captivity Baruch wrote for Jeremiah (Jer. xxxvi. 18) 'with ink in a book,' and the courtiers who could read that book could probably also write. The narrative in that place shews that the so-called book was a roll, such as we know to have been used by the Jews in later times for making their copies of the Scriptures. In the days of Hezekiah (Prov. xxv. 1) we find what we may call a college of scribes, engaged in collecting scattered portions of the national literature which had not yet been brought into order; and as we go backward to the days of David the royal recorder constantly appears as a prominent officer, while historic records are frequently mentioned as composed by prophets who were living in the different reigns. Earlier still they must have been trained scribes who made out the lists of the boundaries which are recorded in the Book of Joshua (Josh. xviii. 9); they "went and passed through the land, and described (lit. wrote) it by cities into seven parts in a book." These men would be only one generation younger than Moses, and as he became "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" so others of the people no doubt acquired in Egypt the art of writing and transmitted their skill to their posterity. In Exod. xvii. 14 we have God's command to Moses, "Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua." It is thus that the mention of writing first comes into the history, and it is noteworthy that in the Book of Genesis there is nothing to indicate that writing was known to the patriarchs in that primitive period.

The earliest material for writing upon was probably the prepared skin of some animal. We know that the Israelites could prepare such materials (Exod. xxv. 5; Lev. xiii. 48) and that in later times their books were rolls of skin fastened together. They may also have been acquainted in Egypt with papyrus, but the supply of this would be scanty in Canaan. We see also that they were able to carve inscriptions in stone (Exod. xxiv. 12; Jer. xvii. 1) and to engrave on metal (Exod. xxviii. 36), but no writing on bricks, after the manner of the Assyrians, is either recorded or has been discovered. Under such conditions books could not rapidly be multiplied, and indeed, from the names of those persons who are spoken of as writing, we can see that the art was confined to persons of position, kings, prophets, priests, ambassadors, and the like.

Probably the earliest form which literature assumes among any people is the popular ballad, written to commemorate some tragic or stirring event. Of this character, among the Israelites, were the song of Lamech (Gen. iv. 23, 24), and the song of the well (Num. xxi. 17, 18), both probably of great antiquity. To these may be added the battle-songs which are found in a fragmentary form in Num. xxi. 14, 15, 27—30, and Josh. x. 12, 13. Of greater length are the songs of Moses and Miriam (Exod. xv., Deut. xxxii.) and of Deborah (Judg. v.). Of a religious character, and probably belonging to a much later time, are Hannah's song (1 Sam. ii. 1—10), Hezekiah's thanksgiving (Is. xxxviii. 10—20), and the pathetic lamentations of David over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. i. 19—27) and over Abner (2 Sam. iii. 33, 34). Such poems would have a separate existence long before the national history came to be written, and the same remark holds good for such passages as the blessings of Noah (Gen. ix. 25—27), of Isaac (Gen. xxvii. 27—29, 39, 40), of Jacob (Gen. xlix.), and of Moses (Deut. xxxiii.), as well as for the last words of David (2 Sam. xxiii. 1—7); and the existence of these early lyrics (and probably there were many like them in the Book of the Wars of the Lord, and in the Book of Jashar) is cogent evidence for the verity of the history to which they belong and in which they have been imbedded.

For the narrative portions of the sacred books material of various kinds must have been preserved from very early times, it may be in separate documents, as indeed an examination of their language seems to shew. Such would be the histories of the patriarchs, the narrative of the plagues of Egypt, the several recapitulations of the Law, the stories of Samson and the other judges, and more than one history of the lives of Saul and David. These with all the other material embraced in the historical books would be brought together at various periods, and it is natural that the name of Moses should be particularly attached to those portions which contain his history and some at least of his writings. The other histories would be compiled in the succeeding generations by such men as Samuel and his successors in the schools of the prophets, and prose writing would attain its most artificial form after the overthrow of the nation, as we find it in the Books of Chronicles.

In the New Testament we have historic narratives in the four Gospels and the Acts; the rest is mainly made up of letters written to various Churches by the Apostles. The Apocalypse has many literary features in common with the prophetic writings of the Old Testament.

Not till the nation became settled under kings would the devotional element of their literature, which finds its chief expression in the Psalter, be likely to become prominent. Not amid the struggles of Joshua's time nor during the disorders which came after would Psalms and Hymns be written; but when the king felt himself to be the anointed of the Lord and the people became conscious of the lofty destiny designed for them in God's promises to the house of David, worship and praise would become for them a natural expression, and the best means of keeping their consciousness alive. For this purpose many of the Psalms are excellently adapted, and have been constantly welcomed among other nations, as supplying words best fitted for those who would draw nigh unto God. That these lofty hymns should have been composed in a time of national decadence is beyond belief, and the tradition which calls them by the name of David has, no doubt, a foundation in fact, though doubtless many of the Psalms were written by others, while some of the later ones are little more than compilations culled from the earlier poems and perhaps prepared for some special services. (Compare the selection made in our Prayer-Book for the anniversary of the Queen's Accession.) The translators of the Septuagint rightly appreciated the title 'Psalm of David' when at the head of one or two they placed 'a Psalm of David, by Haggai and Zechariah' (Pss. cxxxviii., cxlvi.—cxlviii.). The artificial character of the 'Acrostic,' or 'Alphabetical,' Psalms, of which the most prominent example is Ps. cxix., seems to indicate for them a later date of composition.

Besides their Histories and their Lyrics the Hebrews have in their literature some books which may be fitly called Philosophy, though like everything else in their writings its character is entirely religious. If the Proverbs of Solomon are "to give subtlety to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion," the path thereto is made plain from the outset, "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." The Book of Proverbs is of much interest because we can judge in some measure from its composite character (see p. 70) what may be looked for in the other books of this ancient literature. But it is the literary form which is here to be noticed. The sententious wisdom of the Hebrews is very frequently set forth in a couple of parallel clauses, of which the second either emphasizes and gives force to the first, as

He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty;
And he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city (xvi. 32), or makes a contrast to it, as

He that covereth a transgression seeketh love;
But he that harpeth on a matter separateth chief friends (xvii. 9).

But occasionally a subject is extended through several verses as in xxiv. 30—34 on Sloth, and xxx. 1—4 on the Unsearchableness of God.

The last two sections of the Book of Proverbs, which bear the title of 'burden' (xxx.

1, xxxi. 1; or 'oracle' R.V.), point to the close approach of some parts of this religious philosophy to the character of prophecy, to some portions of which (cf. Is. xiii. 1, xv. 1, xvii. 1, &c.) the same title is given.

Two solemn subjects are discussed more at length in the other philosophical writings, Job and Ecclesiastes, the former of which deals with the question 'Why does God permit the innocent to suffer?' the latter with 'The vanity of all earthly pursuits.' See on the contents of these books pp. 65 and 71.

Closely connected with the 'Proverb' is the 'Parable,' examples of which are more abundant in the Gospels than in the Old Testament, where however we find the parables of Jotham (Judg. ix.), of Nathan (2 Sam. xii.) and of Joash (2 Kings xiv.). Cf. p. 184.

But the most elevated literary form which appears in the Bible is Prophecy, of which we find no examples in any nation except Israel. The prophet speaks as the direct messenger of God. He is a preacher bringing exhortations, warnings, consolations, denunciations of divine anger, and sometimes seeing with the eye of faith, and declaring, the course of God's providence and grace in times to come.

The opening chapter of Isaiah is a very complete compendium of the prophetic style; rebuke and exhortation are there blended with offers of pardon and promises of restoration. The 'burdens' which occupy a large portion of the early part of the same prophecy partake more largely of the character of denunciations. They are directed against heathen nations whom God may use as His instruments but whom He will nevertheless visit for their wickedness. This is the character of the whole of the books of Obadiah and Nahum. Sometimes the prophet delivers his message by describing or performing some symbolical action. Thus Jeremiah (i. 11–16), by the figures of an early blossoming almond-tree and a seething caldron, pictures the near approach of the divine anger, and the fierceness with which punishment will be inflicted. The same prophet employs symbol again in xiii. 1–11 and xvi. 1–21, as does Ezekiel (iv. v., xii.), who also conveys his message at times by proverbs and parables. Examples of these will be found in Ezekiel xii., xv., xvi., xviii., xix., xxiii., xxiv. At times the prophetic message assumes the form of a dialogue, where the prophet, in God's name, argues with offenders and replies to their response. Illustrations will be found in Zechariah (xi.), Jeremiah (xlii.), Ezekiel (xiv.) and many other places. Sometimes the dialogue is between God and the prophet (cf. Jer. xiv. xv.; Hab. i., ii.). Another mode of presentation is by vision, of which many instances are found in the early chapters of Zechariah, in Isaiah (vi.), Ezekiel (i.–iii.) and the Apocalypse. At times the prophet joins his message with historical details, as is seen in Jonah, Haggai, Daniel, in certain portions of Isaiah and a large part of Jeremiah. But in the loftiest strains of prophecy all literary forms combine to furnish a sublime utterance. Such are the last chapters of Isaiah, some parts of Micah and of Joel. Exhortation is joined with promise, visions of a glorious future are contrasted with past humiliation, praise and exaltation following entreaty and prayer; now the speaker is Jehovah, now the prophet, now the people of Israel; while the prospect of the universality of God's kingdom is opened to view as the crowning triumph of redemption.

And everywhere except in simple narrative the language of praise always, of proverb very frequently, and of prophecy not seldom, takes the form which belongs to Hebrew poetry. This, which is the most striking feature of Hebrew literature, consists of various kinds of parallelism. One or two instances of this literary form have been noticed in connexion with Proverbs. There it is usually of a simple kind. In the Psalms and in portions of the prophets it becomes much more complex. This will be seen in a passage as the opening of the 68th Psalm:

Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered :
Let them also that hate him flee before him.
As smoke is driven away,
So drive them away :
As wax melteth before the fire,
So let the wicked perish at the presence of God.
But let the righteous be glad ;
Let them exult before God :
Yea, let them rejoice with gladness.

Somewhat similar is Is. lv. 6, 7 :

Seek ye the Lord
While he may be found,
Call ye upon him
While he is near :
Let the wicked forsake his way,
And the unrighteous man his thoughts :
And let him return unto the Lord,
And he will have mercy upon him ;
And to our God,
For he will abundantly pardon.

Sometimes the effect is produced by heaping together a succession of parallel clauses. Thus in the 103rd Psalm :

Bless the Lord, O my soul :
And all that is within me, bless his holy name.
Bless the Lord, O my soul,
And forget not all his benefits :
Who forgiveth all thine iniquities ;
Who healeth all thy diseases ;
Who redeemeth thy life from destruction ;
Who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies ;
Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things ;
So that thy youth is renewed like the eagle.

Another effect is produced by the repetition of a chorus or refrain, as is done in the 57th Psalm :

Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens ;
Let thy glory be above all the earth.

There is much power in the way in which in the 42nd and 43rd Psalms the refrain is introduced:

Why art thou cast down, O my soul?
And why art thou disquieted within me?
Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him
Who is the health of my countenance and my God.

And none can fail to feel the effect of such a chorus four times repeated in the 107th Psalm:

Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness,
And for his wonderful works to the children of men.

Other examples will be found in Psalms viii., xxiv., xli., lxvii. and lxxx.
The arrangement of the text of the Psalms in the Revised Version enables these characteristics of Hebrew poetry to be noticed and appreciated, and renders it less needful to furnish further examples. The Book of Proverbs is also arranged so as to bring into notice the constant parallelism; so also are the Song of Songs, the Lamentations and the poetical portion of the Book of Job. In the prophetic books, though there is much poetry mingled with the prose, it is so difficult to decide precisely where the one ends and the other begins that no such arrangement has been attempted except in such distinctly lyrical passages as part of Isaiah, ch. xxxviii., Jonah ii. and Habakkuk iii.

7. THE ARTS. TRADE AND COMMERCE.

LORD ALMONER'S READER IN ARABIC, CAMBRIDGE.

The Israelites were originally a group of nomadic tribes, and though the process by which they were transformed into a settled agricultural nation cannot, of course, be accurately known to us, it is certain that the change was a slow one. In some districts, particularly in the pasture-lands to the east of the Jordan, and in the barren uplands of Judah, the habits of nomadic life no doubt survived much longer than in the fertile valleys of northern Palestine, where the Israelites came more closely in contact with Canaanite civilisation. In any case a considerable proportion of the people continued, down to the final overthrow of the kingdom, to subsist mainly by their flocks. The life of an Eastern shepherd is usually a very hard one (see Gen. xxxi. 40), and as he is often obliged to go far in search of pasture, he is accustomed to camp out at night; hence "a shepherd's tent" (Is. xxxviii. 12) is the type of an uncertain dwelling-place, no sooner set up than it must be taken down. As a protection against wild beasts, sheepfolds were sometimes surrounded by a high wall (John x. 1); it was usual for shepherds to be armed with slings (1 Sam. xvii. 40) or with bows and arrows (Is. vii. 24), and an encounter with a lion appears to have been a common incident in pastoral life (Is. xxxi. 4; Amos iii. 12).

As the tending of flocks is the natural occupation of nomads (see Ezek. xxvii. 21, where "lambs, rams, and goats" are mentioned as the articles of export from the desert), so the possession of cattle is generally associated with agriculture, for not only do cattle require much better pasture than sheep and goats, but they are, in the East, indispensable for ploughing, gathering in the corn, and treading it out (Deut. xxv. 4). The early kings of Israel owned large flocks and herds, and the chief of the herdsmen and shepherds was one of the principal court officials (1 Sam. xxi. 7). It is a common mistake to assume that the tending of cattle must have been abandoned to the lowest and least cultivated part of the community; that this was not so is shewn by the case of the prophet Amos, who was a herdman and a gatherer (R.V. dresser) of sycamore figs (Amos vii. 14), and whose book is remarkable, not only for its pure and graceful style, but for the wide knowledge which it displays with respect to contemporary history and geography.

The hunting and snaring of wild animals was at all times common in Palestine. Deer, of various sorts, were the favourite object of the chase, for which reason the phrase "the roebuck and the hart" is used in Deuteronomy as typical of all animals that may be eaten, though not offered in sacrifice (Deut. xii. 15, xv. 22). The kings of Assyria and Persia were accustomed to hunt on a very large scale, and had parks specially arranged for the purpose. This habit does not appear to have existed among the earlier Hebrews, for the mention of "parks" (R.V. in Eccles. ii. 5 (where the Persian word pardēs is employed—the A.V. wrongly translates "orchards")) proves only that such things were known in the time of the author of Ecclesiastes.

There are in the Old Testament many allusions to fishing—with a hook and line (Job xli. 1, 2), with a harpoon (id. 7), and with nets of different kinds (Hab. i. 15). Egypt was especially noted for its fish (Is. xix. 8), which, owing to the innumerable canals intersecting the country, could always be procured there without difficulty. At Jerusalem, in the time of Nehemiah, the fish trade was in the hands of the Tyrians (Neh.

xiii. 16), and as there was a "fish gate" (Neh. iii. 3), the city probably contained a fish-market. To organized companies of fishermen there appears to be an allusion in Job xli. 6 (R.V.). In later times, as we know from the New Testament, the Lake of Tiberias was a great fishing centre.

The agriculture of the Hebrews was no doubt mainly borrowed from the Canaanites. It is true that small crops of corn and vegetables are often raised by nomadic tribes, but the cultivation of the vine and the olive, two of the most important products of Palestine, necessarily implies a settled life. That vine-culture existed among the Canaanites to a very large extent is quite certain. Thus in the Canaanite city of Shechem the vintage was celebrated as a religious festival (Judges ix. 27). The same custom existed in Israel (Exod. xxiii. 16), and it has been suggested that the practice of dwelling in booths among the vineyards at this season of the year, as is still done in some Eastern countries, gave rise to the observances with which the Feast of Tabernacles is connected (Lev. xxiii. 40). A vineyard often contained a watch-tower and a winepress (Is. v. 2). The latter usually consisted of two hollows cut in the rock one below the other, in order to hold the grapes and the juice respectively. The treading of the winepress, accompanied with singing and a peculiar kind of shout known as hédad, is the ordinary symbol for joy and triumph.

Besides the vine and the olive, cereals of various kinds were extensively cultivated. Thus the ploughshare and the pruning-hook together represent agriculture (Is. ii. 4; Joel iii. 10). Among the other implements of husbandry are mentioned the sickle, the threshing-instrument, the winnowing-shovel, and the winnowing-fork, for such appears to be the meaning of the word mizreh, Is. xxx. 24. Corn was either simply parched (Ruth ii. 14), or pounded in a mortar (Prov. xxvii. 22), or ground in a handmill, made of two slabs of stone which were placed one upon another. The work of grinding was usually performed by slaves, most often by female slaves (Matt. xxiv. 41), and hence came to be regarded as degrading (Judges xvi. 21; Lam. v. 13); thus the prophet, addressing Babylon, bids her descend from the throne and grind meal (Is. xlvii. 2). The New Testament speaks also of mills turned by asses (Matt. xviii. 6, R.V. margin).

The business of baking was carried on both by men and women (1 Sam. viii. 13). At Jerusalem there was a bakers' street (Jer. xxxvii. 21), in accordance with a custom which prevailed also in mediæval Europe—that of assigning a particular street to each trade. Bread was usually made in flat circular cakes, for the word kikkâr, which is translated "loaf," means properly "a circle." In ordinary cases it was prepared with leaven, that is, fermented dough, and was baked either in an oven (Hos. vii. 4), in a pan (2 Sam. xiii. 9, where we should read, with R. V., "the pan," instead of "a pan"), or in the hot ashes.

A cook is called by the Hebrews a "slaughterer" (ṭabbakh, a word which is also used for an "executioner"), because in the East, owing to the heat, animals are usually dressed for food as soon as they are killed, and the two operations therefore fall to the lot of the same person. See 1 Sam. ix. 23, 24.

The arts of spicery and perfumery have always been regarded as important in hot climates, and were early practised by the Hebrews (1 Sam. viii. 13, where for "confectionaries" we should read "perfumers," see R. V. margin). The best spices were those of South Arabia (Sheba), the centre of the incense trade (1 Kings x. 10; Is. lx. 6), but many kinds were produced also in Palestine (Cant. iv. 14). Orientals frequently mix spices with their wine (Cant. viii. 2; Prov. ix. 2), and in particular "peppered wine" is mentioned by the ancient Arabic poets. Perfumes were employed in religious service as well as in ordinary life (Exod. xxx. 34—38). In Is. iii. 20, the phrase which the A. V. translates by "tablets" is usually understood to signify "perfume-boxes" (see R. V.), but whether this be the real meaning is not quite certain.

The medicine and surgery of the ancient Israelites were no doubt of a very primitive kind, and until the introduction of Greek civilisation never rose to the rank of sciences. In Egypt the physicians were also embalmers (Gen. i. 2), but this custom does not appear to have been adopted at any time by the Hebrews, for they were strangers to the abstruse theological speculations with which the Egyptian practice of embalming was intimately connected. Among the early Hebrews, as among other primitive peoples, diseases were probably most often treated by means of magic; on this subject, however, the Bible throws very little light (see 2 Kings v. 11, R. V.). Of medical means properly so called those mentioned in the Old Testament are such as would be used for external injuries, viz., plasters, bandages and unguents (Is. i. 6; Jer. xxx. 12, 13). It may be remembered that similarly, in the Iliad, the sons of Asklepios are healers of wounds rather than physicians. Jeremiah speaks of a resinous gum called ṣôr (whence the Greek styrax is possibly derived) as noted for its healing properties; it was produced in the district of Gilead (Jer. viii. 22, xlvii. 11). We also read of figs being used as a poultice (Is. xxxviii. 21).

Though there are many allusions to the shaving of the head and beard, particularly as a sign of mourning (Deut. xiv. 1; Is. xv. 2; Jer. xvi. 6), barbers are mentioned only in Ezek. v. 1. Among the ancient Egyptians, as in the modern East, this trade was a very important one.

Fullers appear in 2 Kings xviii. 17; Is. vii. 3, where we hear of a field near Jerusalem which was named after them. The soap they employed was made of salts, mixed with oil; there were two kinds, nether (i.e. carbonate of soda, in Greek nitron, A. V. nitre), and bôr or birth, which has often been explained as "potash," but which was more probably

"borax." See Jer. ii. 22; Mal. iii. 2; Mark ix. 3.

Of all manual labour, the most despised, as requiring least skill, was that of hewing wood (i.e. firewood) and drawing water: hence the proverbial expression in Josh. ix. 21. Very different is the cutting of wood for architectural or ornamental purposes (1 Kings v. 6; Is. xl. 20). A workman of this kind is called in Hebrew khārōsh (carver)—a term applied both to a carpenter and to a worker in metal or stone (Is. xlv. 12, 13; Exod. xxviii. 11). Among the implements of a carpenter are mentioned the axe, the saw (Is. x. 15), the rule (or cord), the pencil (A.V. line), the graving tool (usually translated "plane") and the compass (Is. xlv. 13). One of the occupations of a carpenter was the making of idols. A wooden idol often had a metal plating (Is. xxx. 22; Jer. x. 3, 4), and in early times was called an "ephod"; such was no doubt the ephod of Gideon in Judges viii. 27, a passage which has been wrongly interpreted as referring to some kind of garment. The art of working in brass (i.e. copper) and iron was regarded by the Hebrews as of primeval antiquity (Gen. iv. 22), and was largely practised by the Canaanites, who were especially famed for their iron chariots (Judges iv. 3). This fact is worthy of note, because iron is of all metals the most difficult to work, and appears to have been introduced last—the earliest Greeks scarcely used it at all, their weapons being made of bronze. Among the Hebrews, as among most other nations of antiquity, iron was worked red-hot, but seldom molten (see, however, Ezek. xxii. 20); the melting of gold, silver, and brass, on the other hand, is frequently mentioned. A founder, or melter of metal, already appears in one of the most ancient parts of the book of Judges (xvii. 4). The furnace in which the pure metal is separated from the dross is to the prophets the familiar type of the divine judgement upon Israel (Is. i. 25, xlviii. 10; Mal. iii. 2, 3). The blowing of the furnace with bellows is mentioned in Is. liv. 16; Jer. vi. 29. We read also of the hammer, the anvil, the soldering, and the nails (Is. xli. 7; Jer. x. 4).

One of the most ancient and most indispensable of manufactures is that of pottery. The word yōcēr, usually translated "potter," means simply a "shaper" or "fashioner," but it early acquired the special sense of a worker in clay. Among the Israelites pottery was a purely practical handicraft; it appears never to have become one of the fine arts, as among the Egyptians or the Babylonians, not to mention the Greeks. The abundance of earthenware in Palestine is shewn by the expression "earthen pitchers," to denote that which is common and valueless (Lam. iv. 2). In the time of Jeremiah one of the gates of Jerusalem was called the gate of the Khārith, which apparently means "earthenware" (see Jer. xix. 2, R. V. margin—the A. V. renders "the east gate"); in any case, the context seems to imply that earthenware was sold in the immediate neighbourhood.

On the other hand, in Zech. xi. 13 we should probably read "into the treasury" instead of "unto the potter." This is in accordance with the ancient Syriac version (see R. V. margin), and it has been accepted as the genuine reading by the best of recent commentators. The process of making pottery was somewhat as follows. The clay was first trodden, in order to make it ductile (Is. xli. 25). It was then shaped upon an instrument called obnayim (i.e. two stones), the exact nature of which is not certain. The Jewish scholar Abu-l-walid (who lived at Cordova in the earlier part of the 11th century of our era) describes it as a machine consisting of two wooden slabs shaped like the stone slabs of the hand-mill (whence the name "two stones"), the upper one being smaller than the lower. He adds that this machine was used by the potters of the East, but not by those of Spain. The son of Sirach represents the potter as turning his wheel with his feet (Ecclesiasticus xxxviii. 29), in which case the wheel must correspond to the lower of the two slabs above-mentioned. It would seem, however, from the Egyptian monuments, that originally the machine consisted of nothing but a small round table revolving on a pivot; the potter turned it with one hand whilst moulding the clay with the other. When the vessel had been shaped it was sometimes glazed with various mineral substances such as silica or lead. To this operation there is an allusion in the phrase "a potsherd" (R. V. earthen vessel) covered with silver dross" (Prov. xxvi. 23). Last of all came the process of baking in a furnace (Ecclesiasticus xxxviii. 30). Sun-dried pottery may also have been used for some purposes, but it is necessarily very fragile.

The dressing of skins, particularly for clothing, is practised by almost all primitive races, and was no doubt known to the Hebrews whilst they were still nomads. In later times to wear garments of skin was specially characteristic of prophets (2 Kings i. 8; Zech. xiii. 4), as representing a simpler and more primitive mode of life. Tanning is mentioned in Acts x. 6.

Spinning and weaving existed in Palestine from the earliest times. The former process, as it requires none but the simplest implements, was carried on in every household; the latter was the employment of a particular class. The distaff, about which the carded wool is wound, and the spindle upon which it is rolled off and twisted into a thread, appear in the well-known description of the virtuous wife (Prov. xxxi. 19).

The weavers' loom, as generally used in the ancient world, was an upright frame, provided with a horizontal beam (1 Sam. xvii. 7) from which a row of threads, called the warp (Lev. xiii. 48), or web (Judges xvi. 13), was hung. Each thread ran through a loop, by means of which it was moved backwards and forwards, while the shuttle, a wooden implement shaped like a boat, passed to and fro among the threads of the warp, winding off from itself, as it went, the thread called the woof (Lev. xiii. 48), which was at right angles with the warp. In Job vii. 6 the shuttle is the emblem of the swift flight of man's life. When the work was finished the weaver cut off the threads from above, where the ends (called "the thrum") were fastened to the beam. From this operation is borrowed the striking metaphor, "I have rolled up like a weaver my life; he will cut me off from the loom" (Is. xxxviii. 12, R.V.).

The ordinary garments worn in Palestine, especially in early times, were of wool; but linen was also well known. Thus Rahab lays out stalks of flax upon her roof, in order to dry them in the sun (Josh. i. 6), and Hosea classes wool and flax together as two of the most indispensable products of the country (Hos. ii. 6, 9). Among its other uses, flax served to make lamp-wicks, hence the phrase "the smoking flax," in speaking of a lamp nearly extinguished (Is. xlii. 3). The wearing of linen garments was in a special manner characteristic of priests; according to Herodotus, the Egyptian priests might wear nothing but linen, and a similar custom prevailed in Israel. Samuel ministers in the temple at Shiloh girded with a linen ephod (i.e. robe); so also linen ephods were worn by the priests of Nob, whom Saul slew (1 Sam. xxii. 18), and by David, on the occasion of a religious festival, for at that period both the king and his sons exercised priestly functions (2 Sam. viii. 18, R.V., "David's sons were priests"—the A.V. wrongly translates "chief rulers"). It should be mentioned that the term bad (originally badd), which is used of the linen worn by priests (also in Ezek. ix. 2 and ff., Dan. x. 5, xii. 6, 7), is a word of very uncertain derivation, but there is no reason to suppose that it refers to any special variety of flax.

The Bible contains many other names of textile fabrics, some of which cannot at present be identified. The following are the principal of them:

1. Shesh ("fine linen") was especially an Egyptian product (Gen. xli. 42; Ezek. xxvii. 7: compare also the "combed flax" of Egypt in Is. xix. 9, R.V.). It is frequently mentioned in the description of the Tabernacle and of the priestly garments, Exod. xxv.-xxviii. When the thread was spun in a particular manner it was called "fine twined linen" (shesh moshahar).

2. Biy (also translated "fine linen," excepting in Chron. v. 12, where it is rendered "white linen")—the byssos of the Greeks—was apparently a later name for shesh. The word occurs only in Chronicles and Esther, for the text of Ezek. xxvii. 16 is probably corrupt.

3. Tashbēz ("chequer work," Exod. xxviii. 4, R.V.) was a fabric ornamented with a pattern, sometimes of gold thread; compare Ps. xlv. 13, R.V. ("her clothing is inwrought with gold").

Of silk there is no certain mention in the Old Testament, for the word so translated in the A. V. of Prov. xxxi. 22 is simply shesh (fine linen); and mēshē (Ezek. xvi. 10, 13), which Rabbinical authorities explain as "silk," is a term of doubtful meaning. But in New Testament times silk was known, being imported from the remote East; it is mentioned only in Rev. xviii. 12.

To embroidery there are many references in the Old Testament. In the Song of Deborah we read of stuffs embroidered on both sides (Judges v. 30—the A.V. here translates "needlework"), and the same passage speaks also of "dyed garments" (see R. V. margin). It may be mentioned, in passing, that the idea of the "coat of many colours" worn by Joseph (Gen. xxxvii. 3) is probably due to a mistake, as the phrase here used seems to mean "a long garment with sleeves" (so R. V. margin). Of the names of dyes, the commonest are—shām (scarlet or vermillion, Gen. xxxviii. 28; 2 Sam. i. 24; Prov. xxxi. 21)—tēkēlēth (blue-purple, Ezek. xxvii. 7)—and argāmān (red-purple, id.), which last is a foreign word, possibly of Indian origin. Scarlet dye was obtained from the remains of certain small insects which are found attached to the branches of a shrub known as ilex coccifera. Purple, on the other hand, was prepared from sea-snails of a particular kind. These dyes were extremely valuable in the ancient world (Luke xvi. 19), and formed an important article of trade (Acts xvi. 14), especially on the Phœnician coast. See Purple, p. 280.

Of the ornaments worn by women in his time the prophet Isaiah has given us a very full list (Is. iii. 18-23), but as it was evidently his object to enumerate all the newest and most fashionable articles, it is not surprising that several of the terms he uses are to us unintelligible. It is important to notice that many of these ornaments were originally worn for religious, or rather magical, purposes, and were closely connected with various heathen cults (Gen. xxxv. 4).

In Architecture the Hebrews do not appear to have displayed any originality. It is probable that long after their settlement in Palestine a considerable proportion of the Israelites still continued to dwell in tents, and, in particular, tent-sanctuaries were employed from the earliest times (see 2 Sam. vii. 6, 7) down to the reign of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 7, R. V. margin, where we read of women who "wove tents for the Asherah," a species of idol). The simple life of the early Hebrews rendered large and elaborate buildings unnecessary. The communal assembly (qāhāl) and the legal suit were held in the open space near the gate of a city, and it was not till the establishment of the monarchy that the taste for sumptuous edifices began to shew itself. This was clearly due to foreign influence. David's house of cedar (2 Sam. v. 11) and the Temple of Solomon were both erected by Phœnician workmen. Phœnician architecture had not such marked peculiarities as distinguished that of Egypt or of Babylonia. The walls of Phœnician temples were mostly of massive stone blocks; the decorations generally consisted of metal plating or of carved cedar-wood. The Phœnicians, like other Semites, cared much more for richness of material than for beauty of form. Such was the style which, for purposes of luxury, prevailed among the Hebrews during the kingly period. Besides the products of Syria, ivory and sandal-wood (called almug trees, 1 Kings x. 11), brought by the Tyrians from the remote East, were occasionally employed. Thus Solomon had an ivory throne, overlaid, at least in part, with gold; and in later times there were ivory palaces (under Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 39; see also Psalm xlv. 8), that is, of course, palaces in which ivory formed the principal interior decoration. Under the Seleucid dynasty the Greek style of architecture was introduced, but, owing to the religious scruples of the Jews, was never completely naturalized. The plastic representation of men and animals, which constituted an essential feature of Greek art, could not be tolerated by the strict Jews, and so strong was the feeling on this subject that at the time of the Jewish Revolt it was thought necessary to demolish the palace built at Tiberias by Herod Antipas, because of the sculptured animals with which it was adorned.

The ordinary dwelling-houses of the ancient Hebrews were of brick, less often of stone (as we may infer from the phrase in Is. ix. 10); they were cemented with gypsum (sid) and roofed in with wooden beams. Unlike the Tyrians, who, for want of space, piled up their houses to an enormous height, the Israelites appear seldom to have exceeded two stories. The houses of the rich were built round a court, and sometimes contained different apartments for the summer and for the winter (Jer. xxxvi. 22). It was esteemed a great luxury to have the interior walls painted with vermilion (Jer. xxii. 14). Roofs were invariably flat, and could in many cases be reached by an outside staircase; the Deuteronomic law orders that they should be surrounded by a balustrade, for the prevention of accidents (Deut. xxii. 8). Upon the roof an "upper chamber" was often built, which served as a parlour or as a place for taking the midday siesta (Judges iii. 23, 25). Windows were closed in with lattice-work, as is still the case in Eastern countries. Glass could not be used for such a purpose, as it was an extremely costly material (see Job xxviii. 17, where glass is ranked with gold and precious stones).

The principal articles of domestic furniture were—The Bed, consisting of a rug or mattress such as could be carried by a single person (John v. 9); it was usually rolled up during the day, and was spread, when required, either on the ground or on a ledge by the wall (Is. xxxviii. 2). More rarely beds with canopies were used (Cant. i. 16).—The Lampstand (often translated "candlestick" in the E. V., 2 Kings iv. 10; Matt. v. 15).—The Table, that is, one or more boards which were laid out at meal-time upon wooden props (Is. xxi. 5; Ps. xxiii. 5). Around the table were couches on which the guests reclined at full length.

The engineering of the Hebrews was confined almost entirely to the making of fortifications and aqueducts. Roads were of a primitive kind, and bridges are nowhere mentioned in the Old Testament. In their fortifications the Hebrews doubtless followed the tradition of the Canaanites, whose city-walls were famous (Num. xiii. 28; Deut. ix. 1). How strongly Jerusalem was fortified in the time of the later kings is shewn by the fact that it was able to hold out for many months against the assembled forces of the Chaldeans (2 Kings xxv. 1 ff.), who were then at the height of their power, and whom, as was popularly supposed, no stronghold could resist (Hab. i. 10). Of the aqueducts made by the kings of Judah, considerable remains exist in Jerusalem and its neighbourhood. The Siloam inscription relates, in a manner which implies that such operations were by no means familiar to the Hebrews of the period, how the men employed in digging a long subterranean water-course worked from both ends until they met in the middle; whereupon they cut the inscription in the rock, near the exit of the tunnel, to commemorate their success.

That mining was to some extent carried on by the Hebrews is proved by Deut. viii. 9. The description of the miners in Job xxviii. 1–11 (which should be read in the R. V., for the A. V. is here somewhat unintelligible) is so vivid as to make it almost certain that the poet is relating what he had himself witnessed. But the precious stones, to which there are so many allusions in the Old Testament, were, as a rule, imported from abroad, particularly from South Arabia (Ezek. xxvii. 22). The art of engraving upon precious stones was well known to the Israelites. Thus we hear of engraved signets (Ex. xxviii. 11), and specimens of these, some of them dating from before the Exile and bearing short Hebrew inscriptions, exist at the present day.

The Hebrews were at no period a maritime people, and usually regarded the sea with vague terror (Prov. xxiii. 34). Though some parts of the Mediterranean coast were at one time or another inhabited by Israelites (Gen. xlix. 13; Judg. v. 17), shipping on a large scale was almost exclusively in the hands of the Phœnicians. Hence Solomon required the help of Tyrians, when he built a navy at the north-eastern extremity of the Red Sea, near Elath (sometimes spelt Eloth), for the purpose of carrying on trade with South Arabia (1 Kings ix. 26–28). In later times attempts were made to renew this very profitable traffic (1 Kings xxii. 48; 2 Kings xiv. 22), until the Syrians took final possession of Elath in the days of king Ahaz (2 Kings xvi. 6). Large vessels were called by the Hebrews "ships of Tarshish" (Is. ii. 16), that is, ships like those used by the Phœnicians for long voyages, Tarshish (Taressus in the south-west of Spain) being the extreme limit of Israelite geography (Jonah i. 3).

8. CALENDAR AND DIVISIONS OF TIME.

By PROFESSOR BEVAN, M.A.

Divisions of time are either natural, such as the day, the lunar month and the solar year, or artificial, such as the minute, the hour, and the week. All nations who have possessed a calendar have taken some natural division of time as the basis of their reckoning, but the artificial element can never be wholly excluded. For since the solar year does not contain an exact number of lunar months, nor the lunar month an exact number of whole days, it is only by means of some conventional arrangement that months can be made to fit into years and days into months. How this object was attained among the ancient Hebrews cannot at present be known with certainty. As they were, at least in historical times, mainly an agricultural people, and as agriculture necessarily depends on the seasons, it is evident that the solar year would be to them the most important division of time. But the observance of the lunar month, and particularly the celebration of the new moon as a religious feast, are of immemorial antiquity among the Semitic races. Hence, in the calendar of the Hebrews, the solar year and the lunar month were combined. Since the solar year is greater than 12 lunar months by a period of about 11 days, it is natural to suppose that the ancient Hebrews, like the later Jews, added from time to time an intercalary month to the year, but this is nowhere stated, or even suggested, in the Old Testament. With regard to the month, there can be no doubt that it began with the first appearance of the new moon. In New Testament times the Jewish month consisted either of 29 or 30 days; if the new moon appeared on the 30th day that day was reckoned as the first day of a new month. The Rabbins, with their usual conscientiousness, framed elaborate rules as to what constituted an appearance of the new moon, how many witnesses to the fact were necessary, what qualifications those witnesses must possess, &c.; but into these subtleties it is needless to enter. It is of more importance to notice that among the later Jews each year contained not more than 8, and not less than 4, months of 30 days, the other months having 29 days.

In the Old Testament the months are not usually named, but simply numbered, as among the Quakers; that is, it is said "in the first month," "in the second month," and so on. The later Jews, on the other hand, called their months by names, which were as follows:—

Month 1, Nisān. 2, Īyār. 3, Siwān. 4, Tam-mūz. 5, Āb. 6, Elul. 7, Tishri. 8, Markhesh-wān. 9, Kislew. 10, Tēbeth. 11, Shēbāt. 12, Adār. To these was added, when necessary, an intercalary month, called 2nd Adār. Of the above names, 7 occur in the Old Testament, but only in post-exilic writings, namely, Nisān (Neh. ii. 1; Esth. iii. 7), Siwān (Esth. viii. 9), Elul (Neh. vi. 15), Kislew (Neh. i. 1; Zech. vii. 1), Tēbeth (Esth. ii. 16), Shēbāt (Zech. i. 7), Adār (Esth. iii. 7, viii. 12). The origin of these names was long disputed, but it is now generally acknowledged that the Jews derived them from Babylon, for the names of months which occur in the cuneiform inscriptions are practically the same, with the exception of the 4th month (which appears as Duzu), and the 8th, called in Assyrian Arah sammū (i.e. eighth month), of which Markheshwān is a variation or corruption.

Besides the Babylonian names, however, we find in the Old Testament four names of months which were certainly in use among the Israelites before the Exile, viz. Ābib ("harvest month," Exod. xiii. 4, xxiii. 15, xxxiv. 18; Deut. xvi. 1), which corresponded to the later Nisān, and Ziw (or Zif—1 Kings vi. 1, 37), Ēthāntān (1 Kings viii. 2), and Bul (1 Kings vi. 38), which are stated to be the second, seventh, and eighth month respectively.

It is a much-debated question whether the ancient Hebrew year always began, like the Babylonian year, in spring. The Mishnah, compiled about two centuries after Christ, says that there are four beginnings to the year, one on the 1st of Nisān, one on the 1st of Elul, one on the 1st of Tishri, and one on the 1st of Shēbāt. Of these the most important are the 1st of Nisān, the beginning of the sacred year, and the 1st of Tishri, the beginning of the civil year. Hence most of the Rabbins affirm that, from the time of Moses onward, the Israelites had a sacred year beginning in spring, and a civil year beginning in autumn—a theory which has frequently been upheld by modern Christian scholars. Other people have maintained that the ancient Hebrew year always began on the 1st of Ābib (i.e. Nisān), and that the civil year beginning in Tishri is quite a late institution. A third party contend that before the Exile the Hebrew year always began in autumn, since in Exod. xxiii. 16, xxxiv. 22, the feast of ingathering (usually called the Feast of Tabernacles) is said to be at the end of the year; also in Lev. xxv. 9, the proclamation of the jubilee is made in the seventh, not in the first month, which appears to indicate that the seventh month originally stood first in the series.

The Hebrew week and the institution of the Sabbath are likewise subjects of controversy. Among the later Jews, as among us, the week invariably consisted of seven days, and was therefore quite independent of the month and the year. Whether this was always the case is disputed—the question turns mainly on the view which we adopt as to the origin of the week. The idea that the week was borrowed by the Israelites from the Egyptians may be dismissed at once, for the Egyptian “week” (if we may so use the word) consisted of ten days. Others have maintained the week of seven days to be a Babylonian institution, based upon the worship of the seven planets, and some have even attempted to derive the word “Sabbath” from the Assyrian. Finally, it has been suggested that the week was originally a division of the lunar month, which properly consists of about 29½ days. If therefore the month was divided into four periods, corresponding to the phases of the moon, those periods would usually consist of 7 days each, especially if, as is probable from 1 Sam. xx. 18, 27, the festival of the new moon originally lasted two days. It is also worthy of notice that the Sabbath and the new moon are frequently associated—2 Kings iv. 23; Amos viii. 5; Hos. ii. 11; Is. i. 13, lxvi. 23; Ezek. xlv. 17, xlii. 3.

The day among the Hebrews was reckoned from sunset to sunset (Lev. xxiii. 32). In the Old Testament no divisions of the day are mentioned, excepting the natural periods of morning, noon, and evening. The night, on the other hand, was divided into three watches, as is shown by the phrase “the middle watch” (Judg. vii. 19). In later times the number of night-watches was increased to four (Matt. xiv. 25; Mark vi. 48), in accordance with Greek and Roman custom.

The division into hours was no doubt borrowed from the Babylonians, who at a very early period began to make accurate astronomical observations and invented the system of hours, minutes, and seconds which we still employ. The word shā’ah, which among the later Jews meant “an hour,” appears nowhere in the Old Testament, excepting in the Aramaic portions of Daniel; even here it does not stand for “an hour,” but only for an indefinite space of time. In the New Testament period the use of the hour was thoroughly established among the Jews. The hours of the day were counted from sunrise, the hours of the night from sunset (John i. 39; Acts xxiii. 23), and consequently varied in length at different seasons of the year.

9. WEIGHTS, MEASURES AND COINAGE.

BY PROFESSOR BEVAN, M.A.

WEIGHTS.

The GERAH was the smallest weight used among the Hebrews, and amounted to the twentieth part of the shekel (Exod. xxx. 13; Lev. xlvii. 25; Num. iii. 47, xviii. 16; Ezek. xlv. 12).

The BEKA, or half-shekel, is mentioned only in Gen. xxiv. 22, and Exod. xxxviii. 26.

The SHEKEL was by far the most ordinary unit of weight; hence in stating weights the word “shekel” is often omitted, as in Gen. xx. 16, where “a thousand of silver” means a thousand shekels. It cannot be said that was the exact weight of the shekel among the Hebrews before the Maccabæan period (i.e. the latter half of the second century B.C.), when it amounted to 218 grains. The Phœnician shekel was a little more, about 224 grains. Some people are of opinion that in earlier times the Hebrews had two distinct shekels, one equal to 129 grains and the other to 258, in accordance with the Babylonian system of weights; but of this there is no positive proof. Nor yet is it certain that the “sacred shekel” or “shekel of the sanctuary,” mentioned in the Pentateuch, was really double of the ordinary shekel, as the Rabbins assert.

The Māneh (usually translated POUND both in A.V. and R.V., 1 Kings x. 17; Ezra ii. 69; Neh. vii. 71, 72) is often supposed to have amounted to 100 shekels, because 3 mānehs in 1 Kings x. 17 correspond to 300 shekels in 2 Chron. ix. 16. When, however, we consider the frequent discrepancies between the numbers given in Kings and those given in Chronicles, it will appear unsafe to attach much importance to such an argument. In the LXX. version of Ezek. xlv. 12 the māneh is fixed at 50 shekels, which modern commentators accept as the true reading, the received Hebrew text being unintelligible. From the Phœnicians the word passed on to the Greeks, who pronounced it mnā, and to the Italians, who pronounced it mina. But the weight of the Greek mnā varied greatly in different times and places.

The Kikkār (translated TALENT in the English Bible) consisted, according to Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26, of 3000 shekels. The same was the case with the Phœnician talent, which was accordingly about 96 lbs. avoird. A difficulty has sometimes been found in 2 Sam. xii. 30, where we read of a crown containing a talent's weight of gold. This crown, however, was not worn by a man but by an idol, presumably of colossal size—for the word malikām (translated “their king”) was used by the heathen Semites as a name for deities; see R.V. margin.

The Qēsītāh is mentioned only in Gen. xxxiii. 19; Job xlii. 11 (where the A.V. has “piece of money”); and Josh. xxiv. 32 (A.V. “pieces of silver”). It has been conjectured that the qēsītāh was equal to about 4 shekels, but we have no means of determining its true weight.

The Litra (Latin libra) which is translated POUND in John xii. 3, xix. 39, was the ordinary unit of weight in the Roman Empire. It was rather over 11 ounces avoirdupois.

The TALENT mentioned in Rev. xvi. 21 is probably the Attic talent, equal to about 57 lbs.

MEASURES OF LENGTH.

Of the measures of length in the Old Testament some are obviously mere approximations, for practical purposes, and as their meaning is plain they require no comment. Such are—

The FINGER, or FINGER-BREADTH, in Jer. lii. 21.

The HAND-BREADTH, Exod. xxv. 25, xxxvii. 12; 1 Kings vii. 26; 2 Chron. iv. 5; Ezek. xl. 5, 43, xliii. 13.

The SPAN, Exod. xxviii. 16, xxxix. 9; 1 Sam. xvii. 4; Ezek. xliii. 13.

The PACE or STEP, 2 Sam. vi. 13.

The following call for more special notice:

The AMMĀH, or CUBIT, was at all periods the ordinary unit of length among the Hebrews. Originally it was no doubt the length from the elbow to the tip of the fingers; hence we read of "the cubit of a man" (Deut. iii. 11). As to the real length of the ancient Hebrew cubit, the most trustworthy source of information is the so-called Siloam inscription, discovered only a few years ago. In this inscription, which was probably made about the 8th century B.C., a distance of 1758 feet is described as 1200 cubits. Hence the cubit at that time must have been equal to about 17½ inches. To this cubit there seems to be a reference in 2 Chron. iii. 3, "cubits after the first (or rather, former) measure"—a phrase which implies that at the time of the chronicler or of the source from which he copied (about 3rd century B.C.) another cubit had come into use. With this agrees the fact that Ezekiel speaks of a cubit longer by a hand-breadth than the ordinary cubit (Ezek. xl. 5). Under the Roman Empire the length of the ordinary Jewish cubit was 21½ inches, but two other cubits are mentioned (in Rabbinical literature), of which one was apparently longer and the other shorter, by a hand-breadth, than the common cubit. It is therefore probable that where in the New Testament we read of a cubit (Matt. vi. 27; Luke xii. 25; John xxi. 8; Rev. xxi. 17) we are to understand the Jewish cubit of 6 hand-breadths (21½ inches), not the Greek cubit, which measured a little over 18 inches.

The GOMED occurs only in Judges iii. 16, where it is variously translated (A.V. and R.V. "cubit").

The KIBRATH EREG, rendered somewhat vaguely "a little way" in the A.V. (Gen. xxxv. 16, xlviii. 7; 2 Kings v. 19), is a land measure which we have no means of fixing.

The SABBATH-DAY'S JOURNEY (Acts i. 12) is mentioned nowhere in the Old Testament, but was an invention of the Rabbinical theologians. Because in Exod. xvi. 29 the Israelites, during their journey through the wilderness, are commanded to "abide every man in his place" on the Sabbath, and because the extreme ends of the Israelite camp were supposed to have been at a distance of 2000 cubits from the Tabernacle, it was concluded by the Rabbins that no Israelite should move more than 2000 cubits from his home or city on the Sabbath. It need hardly be said that various means were discovered for modifying or evading this decree.

The following measures, borrowed from the Greeks or Romans, are mentioned in the New Testament.

The FATHOM (Greek orguia)—Acts xxvii. 28—varied from 747 to 729 inches.

The FURLONG (Greek stadion or stadios)—Luke xxiv. 13; John vi. 19, xi. 18; Rev. xiv. 20, xxi. 16—was equal to about 202 yards.

The MILE (Greek milion, from the Latin)—Matt. v. 41—was 1000 double paces, or nearly 1614 yards.

MEASURES OF AREA.

The ACRE (Hebrew Qemed, i.e. yoke)—Isai. v. 10, perhaps also 1 Sam. xiv. 14—was, like the Latin iugerum, the area which a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. In Isaiah the Qemed is the measure of vineyard land: corn land was also measured by the amount of seed it required (Lev. xxvii. 16).

MEASURES OF CAPACITY.

The ancient Hebrew measures of capacity cannot be accurately determined, as the Bible itself furnishes little information on the subject, and our only other guides are late writers, such as Josephus. The names mentioned are as follows.

The LŌG occurs only Lev. xiv. 10, 12, 15, 21, 24, and is believed to have been about 32 cubic inches, or very nearly an English pint.

The HIX, according to the Rabbins, contained 12 logs. It occurs only in Ezekiel and in the ritual portions of the Pentateuch.

The BATH is believed to have contained 6 hins, that is, about 2300 cubic inches, or about 8½ gallons.

The above measures were used only for fluids—the following for dry substances:

The QAB (mentioned only in 2 Kings vi. 25) was probably equal to about 128 cubic inches, or something less than two quarts.

The ŌMER (which word occurs, as the name of a measure, only in Exod. xvi. 16, &c.) or Issārōn (occurring only in the ritual portions of the Pentateuch—it is translated TENTH DEAL) contained the tenth part of an ephāh, i.e. about 230 cubic inches.

The SE'ĀH is translated MEASURE, and occurs Gen. xviii. 6; 1 Sam. xxv. 18; 1 Kings xviii. 32; 2 Kings vii. 1, 16, 18 (Isai. xxvii. 8 is doubtful). It formed the 3rd part of an ephāh, that is, it was equal to about 767 cubic inches, not quite 1½ peck. It has been conjectured that the word shālīsh (translated "measure" in Is. xl. 12 and "great measure" in Ps. lxxx. 5) was another name for the se'āh.

The ĒPHĀH was the most usual measure for dry substances. In the A.V. it is sometimes translated "measure" (Deut. xxv. 14, 15; Micah vi. 10; Prov. xx. 10). Ezekiel (xiv. 11) declares the ephāh equal to the bath (see above).

The Homer or Kör contained 10 ēphāhs or baths (Ezek. xlv. 11, 14), that is, it amounted to about 23,000 cubic inches, or 10 bushels and 3 gallons. The term kör was used both for solids and fluids (see 1 Kings v. 11), and is generally rendered by "measure" in the A.V. (1 Kings iv. 22; 2 Chron. ii. 10, xxvii. 5; Ezra vii. 22).

The Lethek (mentioned only in Hos. iii. 2) is supposed to have been equal to half a homer.

Of the measures of capacity mentioned in the New Testament, some have already been described. Thus the batos (translated measure—Luke xvi. 6) is the Hebrew bath; the satōn and the koros (also translated measure) are the Hebrew sē'ah and kör respectively. The former occurs in Matt. xiii. 33; Luke xiii. 21—the latter in Luke xvi. 7. The New Testament mentions also the following:

The Xestēs (translated por—Mark vii. 4) was a vessel containing a Roman sextarius, that is, about 35 cubic inches. The Syrian xestēs appears to have been larger, and to have contained about 41 cubic inches.

The Chœnix (translated measure—Rev. vi. 6) contained about 70 cubic inches (a quart). As a labourer could be hired for a penny (denarius) a day (Matt. xx. 2), we must suppose that "a chœnix of wheat or three of barley for a penny" implies great scarcity.

The Modios (the Latin modius) is properly a vessel containing 550 cubic inches, or two gallons. It is translated bushel (Matt. v. 15; Mark iv. 21; Luke xi. 33).

The Metretēs (FIRKIN—John ii. 6) contained about 2520 cubic inches, or over 9 gallons.

MONEY.

In spite of the important place which Palestine held in the commercial world of antiquity, the Hebrews appear to have been completely ignorant of coinage until the beginning of the Persian period. All through the Old Testament, however, we read of gold and silver used as a medium of exchange. Payments were made by weight (Gen. xxiii. 16; Jer. xxxii. 10), and in ordinary Hebrew "to weigh" and "to pay" are expressed by the same word (Is. lv. 2; Job xxviii. 15). Hence Amos (viii. 5) reproaches the corn-sellers of his time with "making the ephāh small and the shekel great," i.e. selling a scant measure of corn for an overweight of silver. So also we may explain the frequency with which, in Hebrew and Aramaic, the idea of "honour" or moral value is conveyed by words properly meaning "heaviness" (kābōd, yēqār). Pieces of silver, bearing probably a mark to indicate their weight, but without any official sanction, were called "silver current with the merchant" (see Gen. xxiii. 16). In weighing them stones were employed, and were therefore carried about by the trader in a bag or purse. So primitive a system offered strong temptations to dishonesty, as we may infer from the frequent allusions to false weights and false balances. It is illustrative of the practical character of the Old Testament religion that, just as Isaiah attributes the skill of the husbandman to divine teaching (Isaiah xxviii. 26, 29), so a right balance is said to be the Lord's, and the stones of the bag to be His work (Prov. xvi. 11). In New Testament times the "money-changers" (Matt. xxi. 12) or "bankers" (Matt. xxv. 27) formed a special class.

Before the Babylonian Exile sums of money were usually reckoned in shekels or talents. By a shekel we must always understand a shekel of silver, unless it is expressly stated to be of gold, as in 1 Chron. xxi. 25. It is clear that throughout the whole of antiquity gold as compared with silver was worth considerably less than at present. The ratio was not quite steady but was about 13 to 1.

The only coin, properly so called, which is mentioned in the Old Testament is the DARIC (so rendered in the R. V. always; A. V. has DRAM). It is written darkēmōn in Ezra ii. 69; Neh. vii. 70, 71, 72, and adarkōn in 1 Chron. xxix. 7; Ezra viii. 27. The older form was probably adarkēmōn—it is no doubt a foreign word, but its derivation is obscure. At all events, it has nothing to do with the name of Darius (Dārayavaush). That in 1 Chron. xxix. 7 darics are mentioned in connexion with David does not of course prove that they were really current in the time of that king. It is said that Darius I. (B.C. 521—486) was the first to coin darics. In any case the gold daric and the silver siglos, i.e. shekel (equal in value to the twentieth part of the daric), formed the official coinage of the Persian Empire from the time of Darius onwards. The weight of the Persian daric was 130 grains. On it was represented a kneeling figure, holding in one hand a bow, in the other an arrow or a spear, but it bore no inscription. It may be well to observe that in a Phœnician inscription recently discovered at the Piræus the word darkēmōn seems to be used as the equivalent of the Greek drachmē.

The earliest Jewish coinage is that of the Hasmonæan princes. Simon Maccabæus (B.C. 143—135) coined silver shekels and half-shekels (weighing about 218 and 109 grains, i.e. equal to half-a-crown and to 1s. 3d. respectively), as well as bronze money.

The silver shekel bears on one side the figure of a cup, with the inscription "Shekel of Israel" (written in the old Hebrew character, quite different from that used in our Hebrew Bibles), and on the other side a branch with three buds and the words "Jerusalem the Holy." The successors of Simon Maccabæus appear to have issued bronze coins only, presumably fractions of the shekel, bearing inscriptions in Hebrew or in Greek, sometimes in both languages.

The coins mentioned in the New Testament belong either to the Greek or to the Roman system.

The Drachmē (PIECE OF SILVER, Luke xv. 8, 9) was from an early time the most ordinary silver coin among the Greeks. Its weight varied from about 96 to about 60 grains, the heavier kind being known as the drachm of Egina. In the first century of our era, the drachm weighed little more than 60 grains, and was therefore nearly equal to the denarius (see below), that is, it was worth about 8½d. of our money.

The Didrachmon (TRIBUTE MONEY, Matt. xvii. 24, R. V. HALF-SHEKEL) was double of the drachm.

The Statēr (PIECE OF MONEY, Matt. xvii. 27, R. V. SHEKEL) was originally a gold coin, weighing about 130 grains, but in later times the name statēr was given to the silver tetradrachm, i.e. a coin worth four drachms. This is no doubt the statēr of the New Testament. It has been supposed that the "pieces of silver" mentioned in Matt. xxvi. 15, xxvii. 3, 5, 6, were statērs.

The Lepton (MITE, Mark xii. 42; Luke xii. 59, xxi. 2) was the smallest bronze coin in use among the Jews. According to Mark xii. 42, it was equal to half a quadrans (see below).

The three following coins are of Roman origin.

The Denarion (Latin denarius) was the principal silver coin among the Romans. It was about the size of a modern sixpence, and weighed from 60 to 52 grains. At the time when the New Testament was written the denarius was worth about 8 pence of our money. The A. V. always translates this word by PENNY (Matt. xviii. 28, xx. 2, 9, 13, xxii. 19; Mark vi. 37, xii. 15, xiv. 5; Luke vii. 41, x. 35, xx. 24; John vi. 7, xii. 5; Rev. vi. 6).

The Assarion (Latin assarius or as, A. V. FARTHING, Matt. x. 29; Luke xii. 6) was a bronze coin, originally equal in value to the tenth part of the denarius; but it was afterwards reduced in weight, so that 16 assaria went to the denarius; accordingly the assarion of the New Testament was worth about a halfpenny of our money.

The Kodrantes (Latin quadrans), also (translated FARTHING in Matt. v. 26; Mark xii. 42, was a fourth part of the preceding.

The TALENT (Matt. xviii. 24, xxv. 15) and the Mna (POUND, Luke xix. 13) are not coins but sums of money. In the Attic system of money, which was the most generally adopted among the Greeks, 100 drachmæ made a mna, and 6000 made a talent. It is to this system that the New Testament refers. Hence by a talent we must understand a sum of about £213, by a mna about £3. 11s.

VIII. THE NATURAL HISTORY OF THE BIBLE.

1. GEOGRAPHY, PHYSICAL AND POLITICAL.

BY THE REV. CANON BONNEY, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., PROFESSOR OF GEOLOGY IN UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

Though comparatively limited in area, no district on the earth's surface has been the scene of events more momentous than that which lies between the two great valleys, watered in the one case by the Nile, in the other by the streams of Tigris and Euphrates. On this elevated, almost mountainous, region—the 'great divide' between the two oldest civilisations of which a distinct record has been preserved in history—the forefathers of the Jewish nation had at first a transitory and afterwards a settled home. The lowlands by the twin Assyrian rivers were the cradle of the race, and at one time threatened to be its grave. In youth it lingered long on the plains of the Nile, and of these it retained varied memories. There were many of oppression and suffering, yet in Egypt it had received kindness in its earliest as in its latest days; and the relations of its rulers with the Pharaohs were more often friendly than with the monarchs of Assyria and Babylon. These nationalities, these regions, practically limit both the political and the geographical horizon in the Old Testament. In its pages we read rarely and only incidentally of intercourse with other lands. Its canon was closed before the chosen people came into contact with the two great civilisations of the West; for the sceptre had departed alike from Israel and from Judah long before Greece became a Mediterranean power or Rome was more than a petty state. Only in the books of the New Testament is the geographical horizon permanently extended and the scene of action shifted to any part of Europe.

This upland region is bounded on the west by the Mediterranean Sea and the Nile valley, or more correctly speaking by the lowland separating the western arm of the Red Sea from the Mediterranean, which is now crossed by the Suez Canal. On this side it descends steeply from an average height of two or three thousand feet, while on the east it shelves down more gradually to the valley of the two rivers and the Persian Gulf. Occasionally however it rises into considerable mountain ranges, and it is also cleft by the singular valley, occupied in part by the Jordan, which obviously is in a close structural relation with the eastern arm of the Red Sea, the Gulf of Akabah. On the north it is united to the highlands of Asia Minor, on the south to those of Arabia. Both however of these districts are practically outside the sphere of the Old Testament, and the races, by which they were occupied, had little influence on the history of the chosen people. After it had finally settled in Palestine, with Egypt on the one hand, with the Assyrians and Babylonians on the other, it occupied for no short time a position not unlike that held of late years by Afghanistan between England in India and Russia in Central Asia. Palestine was the highland region which they must cross in order to get within striking distance of each other; for whose friendship they must intrigue or whose resistance they must overcome. Only by fully realizing the physical structure of Palestine can its national history be perfectly illustrated or understood.

Palestine, or the Holy Land, measures nearly 180 miles from north to south, and about 85 miles in average breadth; indeed from the Jordan to the Mediterranean is rarely so much as fifty miles, so that the district mainly occupied by the Jews, the land of Canaan of the older books, is smaller than Wales. The whole upland region, mentioned above, extended from about lat. $27^{\circ} 40'$ to lat. $33^{\circ} 30'$. Its description may conveniently begin with the southern part, the triangular area between the two arms of the Red Sea. Of this the more southern portion, the Peninsula of Sinai, is almost an equilateral triangle in outline, except that its northern side curves slightly towards the south. It is approximately twice the size of Yorkshire. Except a narrow strip of desert which partially fringes both its eastern and its western coasts, the Peninsula is wholly occupied by bare and rugged mountains, furrowed by narrow valleys and rising into bold and lofty peaks of granite, 'porphyry,' or other hard crystalline rocks. Of these the most conspicuous are Um-Shomer (8449 feet), Serbal (6734 feet), and the group culminating in the twin summit of Jebel Katerina (8551 feet). One of the last, Jebel Musa (7373 feet), is usually identified with the scene of the Giving of the Law. In this region the children of Israel spent the fourteen months after their departure from the land of Egypt. Here, although parts of the district were occupied by miners of that nation, they were practically safe from pursuit. Here also some training could be given to the undisciplined horde, which had passed over the Red Sea, though it was proved to be insufficient when the people first reached the southern margin of the Promised Land and realized the nature of the task which lay before them.

To the north of this mountain region lies a lower and more hilly belt, chiefly of sandstone, through which in a north-easterly direction the people journeyed from Sinai to the head of the Gulf of Akabah, the eastern arm of the Red Sea. This region is overlooked by the escarpment of the great limestone plateau, which occupies the remainder of the space between the arms of the Red Sea, and ultimately passes into the Negeb or South Country of Judaea. This, now known as the Tih, was 'the Wilderness of the Wandering or of Paran,' in which the people, after their defection at Kadesh, were condemned to remain till death had removed the cravens born in slavery, and a desert life had brought to maturity a hardier race. The Tih is a plateau, elevated generally about 2000 feet above the sea, but with numerous undulations and hills which attain sometimes nearly to 3000 feet, intersected by many "ramifying valleys, sometimes narrow and deep like miniature cañons." The surface of the plateau is an arid waste, generally as monotonous as possible in scenery, and nearly waterless, but in the larger wadies (valleys) are occasional springs and watering-places, though the streams generally flow continuously only after the spring and the winter rains. Hence any approach to a permanent vegetation is restricted to the beds of these valleys. They drain for the most part towards the west and the north-west and debouch ultimately into the Wady el 'Arish, the 'river of Egypt' (Isaiah xxvii. 12).

North of the Tih desert, projecting into it as the Tih projects into Sinai, is a second and higher plateau, now called Jebel el-Magrah, about 70 miles long and from 40 to 50 across in a northerly direction. This also "terminates in steep escarpments towards the south, falling away to a lower level on the south-eastern side," and it extends northward in a "series of steps or terraces to within a short distance of Beersheba from which it is separated" by a valley called Wady er-Rakhmeh (Palmer). Its valleys communicate ultimately on the one side with the Wady el 'Arish, on the other with the Dead Sea, at its southern end. This is the Negeb or 'South' Country of the Bible (Num. xiii. 17, 22), through which the twelve spies passed on their mission from 'the wilderness of Paran,' Kadesh being probably identical with Ain Gadiis at the northern part of the Tih.

North of the Negeb, extending from Beersheba unto Dan, is the land of the original promise; for the settlement of two and a half tribes on the eastern side of the Jordan appears to have been the result of unforeseen circumstances, and the hold of the nation on that side of the river to have been generally more or less precarious. No district can be more sharply defined by natural features than is this Promised Land on its eastern and western side. On the former is the deep gorge down which the Jordan hurries to the Dead Sea, a gorge prolonged southwards over a comparatively low watershed to the Gulf of Akabah. On the latter lies the Mediterranean, though here a lowland fringe intervenes almost without interruption between the sea and the escarpment of the plateau. This is broadest at the southern end, where the hilly district of the Negeb declines towards the north, and the plateau of which it has formed a part is consequently narrowed—but though this lowland is comparatively speaking a mere strip, its influence on the history of the chosen people was for long most important, for prior to their arrival it had been occupied by the Philistines, a powerful race, which excluded them from the sea, and which not only was too strong to be dislodged but also not seldom became an oppressor.

But on the northern side as on the southern the upland region occupied by the children of Israel is less sharply defined by its natural features. The whole plateau west of the Jordan, together with that east of this river, may be regarded as two great expanding spurs from the same number of northern mountain ranges, namely that of Lebanon on the western and of Anti-Libanus on the eastern flank of a kind of trough, in which the Jordan has its origin, but which can be traced as an orographical feature in the country for a long distance northward roughly parallel with the Syrian coast. The former range is indeed apparently separated from the western plateau by the valley of the Litany, but as this river rises and flows for a considerable distance in the above-mentioned trough, east of the Lebanon, the physical connexion of the region is no more interrupted by it than is that of the Alps by the Rhone, above the Lake of Geneva.

To return then to the northern frontier of the Negeb, on the western side of which in the days of Abraham and Isaac was the territory of Gerar, where the names of Rehoboth and Sitnah as well as of Beer-sheba may be still identified. There begins the hilly limestone plateau, bounded, as mentioned above, by the Dead Sea on the east and the maritime plain of Philistia on the west, the surface of which lies generally at an elevation of from about 2000 to 3000 feet above the level of the Mediterranean. The watershed of this plateau, by no means sharply indicated, runs irregularly in a northerly direction, not far from its central part, but as the Dead Sea lies nearly 1300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, and as the maritime plain shelves gently upwards towards the plateau, the beds of the valleys fall much more rapidly on the eastern than on the western side. For example the glen of the Kidron, which rises near Jerusalem, falls nearly 3500 feet in about 16 miles, measured across the country; while a valley beginning west of that city would have a total fall of about 2200 in a distance, similarly measured, of some 30 miles, and during its course through the hill country would hardly descend more than about 1500 feet; so that in the latter the fall of the eastern would be fully double of that of the western valley. Thus all the valleys debouching eastward from the southern part of the great plateau are narrow glens, often mere ravines in the mountain rampart which overlooks the Dead Sea and the lower Jordan valley.

On this plateau, west of the Dead Sea, the tribe of Judah had its lot. Here, in the Hill Country, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah intrenched himself to guard the frontier of the chosen land, with Simeon, Dan and Benjamin nestled around him" (Stanley). The villages, fortified of old,—the 'fenced cities'—occupy the rounded hill-tops; the slopes of the broad upland valleys are terraced for the cultivation of corn or of the vine, and in their beds wells are dug. It is a land which, though less barren than the territory to the south, is not naturally very fertile, but still it is one from which labour would insure a fair return, and which was eminently fitted to be the nurse of a brave and hardy race. On this account, from its natural difficulties, and as lying away from the more easy line of communication between the valleys of the Nile and of the Euphrates, it more than once escaped the ravages of invading armies and remained "the last, because the most impregnable of the tribes of Israel."

In the southern and higher part of the district, near its actual watershed, at a height of 3040 feet above the Mediterranean, is Hebron (or Kirjath Arba), built "seven years before Zoa in Egypt." Perhaps there is no town, still inhabited, which can claim a higher antiquity than this. At Hebron Sarah died, and Abraham bought from Ephron the Hittite the field and cave of Machpelah for her tomb. Here, in 'the double cave,' jealously hidden beneath the floor of its ancient mosque, the patriarch himself, his son Isaac, and his grandson Jacob were buried. The city afterwards became the property of Caleb, the son of Jephunneh. It is not quite 20 miles south of Jerusalem and the same distance in a N.N.E. direction from Beersheba. Between Hebron and Jerusalem, standing at an elevation of 2550 feet above the Mediterranean, is Bethlehem, twelve miles from the latter city. It stands on a limestone hill, bounded on north, south, and east by valleys, the terraced sides of which are occupied by vineyards and olive groves. This also is a very ancient town, once named Ephrath, associated with memories of Ruth and of David, of the death of Rachel and the birth of the Saviour. South of Bethlehem are three large reservoirs inclosed by ancient masonry, called the Pools of Solomon, from which an aqueduct still conveys water to Jerusalem. To the west of this part of the country, overlooking the plain of Philistia, was the original settlement of the tribe of Dan. Of that plain they failed to make themselves masters, and this compulsory restriction of their original allotment to its less fertile portion doubtless caused the emigration of a part of the tribe, as related in connexion with the episode of Micah in the Book of Judges (ch. xviii.). The relations of the highlanders and lowlanders, with their occasional friendships and more frequent feuds, are illustrated by the history of Samson.

North of the territory of Judah the plateau was occupied by the tribe of Benjamin. Across this elevated region lies the southernmost of the practicable routes from the eastern side of the Jordan, for the Dead Sea rendered the tribe of Judah invulnerable on its eastern flank. Thus the earliest conflicts of the invading Israelites, after crossing the Jordan at its southernmost fords near Jericho, occurred in the territory afterwards occupied by Benjamin. Close to its southern frontier, only just without the limit of the tribe of Judah, is Jerusalem. The city stands on a flattened spur, running southward from somewhat higher ground on the north. This spur is sharply defined by two narrow valleys; the Kidron, which, originating in a depression on its northern part, after a short eastward course turns south and forms its eastern boundary; and the Wady-er-Rababy, which some identify with Hinnom, on the west, where it is more shallow, and on the south. The spur itself is divided by a depression which, however, at the present day is only sharply marked at its lower end, where it joins the valley of the Kidron, a little above its junction with that of Wady-er-Rababy, very near to an ancient pool, which has been identified with the Pool of Siloam. From this depression, called of old the Tyropæon valley, a shallow offshoot towards the west almost insulated the southern portion of the western fork of the spur.

On the upland rocky area thus naturally defended stood the old town of Jebus, a true hill-fortress, which maintained its independence till it was stormed by David, when the confidence of the defenders in the strength of their position appears to have proved their ruin. On the rocky summit of the eastern fork of the spur, at that time outside the walls, was the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite, which became the site of the Temple of Solomon. Recent excavations have proved that the great accumulation of débris—the result of many sieges—has considerably modified the original features of the site of Jerusalem, by partially filling up the protecting glens and diminishing the steepness of their sides, but the foundations of the south-eastern and south-western walls of the Temple area, as reconstructed by Herod, and as seen by our Lord, lie more than 80 feet below the present level of the ground, and its summit rose some 200 feet above the bed of the valley. Across the Kidron the ridge of the Mount of Olives rose from about 100 to 300 feet above the city. Standing thus at a height of nearly 2600 feet above the sea—the height of Mickel Fell in the Pennine chain of England—Jerusalem is emphatically a city set on the hills.

In the days of the kings of Judah the northern wall of circumvallation (the exact course of which is still a matter of some controversy) probably lay not far south of the line of the northern face of the present Haram (the ancient Temple) inclosure, but after the return from the Captivity the city gradually spread over the comparatively level ground towards the north, and the suburb thus formed was ultimately included within the wall of Herod, which coincides with the present northern wall¹. It may be disputed whether Jerusalem was the city of Melchizedek, or Moriah was the scene of the offering of Isaac, but from the days of David to the close of the Bible history it becomes the centre of the national life and of the national worship. Calamity did but strengthen its hold upon the heart of the Jewish patriot, and the words of one of the Psalms of the Captivity, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning," express a feeling which has outlasted twenty-five centuries of trial, and eighteen continuous centuries of alienation.

Jerusalem being thus defended by crags and deep glens and by its strong walls, its siege in the days when gunpowder was unknown was never an easy task. Even the great Assyrian conqueror, Sennacherib, evidently preferred to avoid it, if possible, for he attempted to obtain its surrender by menace and cajolery instead of making a direct attack, and the Roman armies, notwithstanding internal dissensions, were more than once kept for a considerable time at bay before its defences, and had to win their way into the city step by step. The estimation in which Jerusalem was generally held is indicated by the reluctance of the Persian kings to allow the repair of its walls, and by the laborious destruction of its fortifications at the hands of the army of Titus.

To the natural strength of its position, to its situation as a highland city, constant references are made in the Bible. "The hills stand about Jerusalem," not indeed looking down on to its walls, as the Alps on Briançon; for Jerusalem in some respects is more like Durham, and like it was "half house of God, half castle 'gainst' the foe; the ground on the north is not much higher, and even Olivet only rises some two hundred feet above the general city level, but for miles around there is a sea of hilly ground, and the mountain wall of Moab, towering more than four thousand feet above the Jordan valley, and sometimes attaining even that height above the Mediterranean, is seldom absent from the view and is visible from the very streets of Jerusalem.

Olivet, as said above, lies on the eastern side of the Kidron valley. It is a long ridgy limestone hill, with four prominences differing little in elevation, of which one is traditionally, but probably incorrectly, regarded as the site of the Ascension. On its western flank, down in the Kidron glen, lay the garden of Gethsemane, on its eastern were Bethphage and Bethany. To the latter place, which "is now known by a name derived from Lazarus—El-Azariyeh"—more than one path leads from the city, and on that which crosses the ridge from east to west, a little north of the most southern and lowest prominence, the site of the spot where the Saviour wept over Jerusalem may be identified with reasonable probability (Stanley). Beneath that summit, now called the Mount of Offence, as the traditional scene of idolatrous worship in the later days of Solomon, the Kidron sweeps eastwards on its steep descent towards the Dead Sea.

To enumerate and to discuss the minor localities in Jerusalem, many of them the subject of much controversy, would occupy too great a space; suffice it to say that the Temple of Solomon stood upon the summit of the eastern fork of the plateau above described, the Holy House itself being very near to the place occupied by the Mohammedan mosque called the Kubbet-es-Sakhrah (Dome of the Rock), which was erected A.D. 691 by Abd-el-Melik¹, over a projecting limestone rock, in which is a cave identified generally with that by the threshing-floor of Araunah. At the north-west angle of the Haram inclosure stood the castle Antonia, into which St Paul was hurried from the temple-courts by the Roman guard. Sion occupied the site of the old Jebusite town, now to a great extent outside the walls; and north of it, across the depression mentioned above, the church of the Holy Sepulchre marks the traditional site of the new rock-cut tomb, in which the body of the Lord was laid. Ophel, also now extra-mural, was on the southern spur of the temple-hill, and at its base is the Pool of Siloam; while probably not far from it was Tophet in the valley of Hinnom.

Outside Jerusalem the priests' village, Nob, is thought to have stood on the northernmost part of Olivet. In the hilly district north of the city lay Anathoth and Michmash, and the village Jeba between them probably marks the site of Gibeah of Benjamin and Gibeah of Saul. It is about four miles north of the city, on a conspicuous eminence called Tulei-el-Ful, and the rugged region about is a suitable scene for the struggles recorded (1 Sam. xiii., xiv.). Bethel lay to the north. At the present day ruins and rock-cut caves, among which a few poor hovels are built, mark the site of the old Canaanite town of Luz, which centuries after it had been called the 'House of God' became the southern sanctuary and the scene of an idolatrous calf-worship for the kingdom of Israel. The rounded hill-top is still strewn with limestone slabs, one of which might readily be set up as a pillar, as described in the account of Jacob's dream. N.N.W. of Jerusalem, at a distance of rather more than six miles, is a prominent hill, conspicuous from many quarters, which still bears the name of Nebv Samuil. On this stood Gibeon, the great high place in the early days of Israel, which some have identified with the actual summit of the hill about a mile distant from the village. The hills in the surrounding region "are rounder and more isolated than those nearer Jerusalem, and rise in well-defined mamelons from broad undulating valleys of tolerable extent and of fertile soil." On these hills were perched the villages of Benjamin, the names of which receive frequent incidental mention. In this district the limestone strata are more nearly level than about Jerusalem, and crop out 'like contour lines' from the steep slopes of the hills. The modern name of Nebv Samuil comes from its being the traditional burial-place of Samuel. If so, the village of Ramah must have occupied the summit of this—the highest hill in the neighbourhood.

To the north-west lies the ridge of Beth-horon, up and down which the 'kings' of southern Canaan were chased by Joshua from before the walls of Gibeon. Here also Judas Maccabeus won his first victory, and in later days, along the line of the Roman road which had then been made from Caesarea to Jerusalem, the forces of Cestius Gallus were driven back in confusion (A.D. 66).

North of the territory of Benjamin was that of the great tribe of Ephraim. In the later days of the monarchy the frontier between the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah ran across the possession of Benjamin, passing to the south of Bethel. But though the relationship of the inhabitants was thus once changed, the physical structure of the district is unaltered; the upland plateau extending northward to form 'the mountains of Ephraim,' and ranging up to a height of about 2700 feet above the Mediterranean. Only in this respect is there a change, that the land becomes distinctly more fertile. "The closely set structure, and the rocky soil of the hills of Judah and Benjamin, though still continued to a great extent, are here for the first time occasionally broken up into wide plains in the heart of the mountains and diversified both in hill and valley by streams of running water and by continuous tracts of verdure and vegetation." The lot of Ephraim was in a 'good land.'

In the southern part of this tribe's territory, the only place of importance was Shiloh, identified with the modern Seilun. The ruins are scattered "over a slight eminence which rises in one of those softer and wider plains" (Stanley), mentioned above; a little removed from the great central route of the country. A few miles further north in a yet wider plain, "the wildest and most beautiful of the plains of the Ephraimite mountains," was Shechem. The district is about 1800 feet above the Mediterranean. "Over the hills which close the northern end of this plain, far away in the distance, is caught the first glimpse of the snowy ridge of Hermon." Its western side is bounded by the abutments of two mountain ranges running from west to east. These ranges are Gorizim and Ebal, and up the opening between them, not seen from the plain, lies the modern town of Nabbus, on the watershed between the Jordan valley and the Mediterranean. The ancient Shechem however stood a little lower down (whether identical with the Sychar of the New Testament is by some disputed), and so nearer to the old well at the mouth of the trough in which Nabbus lies. This is universally admitted to be the well dugged by Jacob in the "parcel of ground" bought "of the children of Hamor, Shechem's father." Near at hand a Mohammedan chapel claims to cover the burial-place of Joseph. In this valley, which forms a kind of natural highway through the Palestine uplands from the lands east of the Jordan, both Abraham and Jacob halted on their way from Aram, and Shechem is often mentioned, till after Rehoboam had fled it became for a time the capital of the northern kingdom. Gerizim rises about 800 feet above the plain and Ebal is higher by about 100 feet, both with precipitous faces, the two summits being about a third of a mile apart. On the former, the 'mount of blessing,' the Samaritan temple was afterwards built; from the latter the curses of the Law were ordered to be read.

Six miles northward, but below Shechem, "following the course of the same green and watered valley" (Stanley) the traveller finds himself in a wide basin encircled with hills. In the centre of this, on a flat-topped hill with steep sides, is the site of Samaria, afterwards Sebaste, from the days of Omri to the Captivity the capital of the northern kingdom.

The lot of the half tribe of Manasseh (which was not a large one) lay to the north of Ephraim, and was, like that of the latter tribe, more undulating, varied in scenery, and fertile than the land of Judah. It is clearly defined on its northern, or more correctly its north-eastern frontier, by the first important interruption to the continuity of the plateau of central Palestine. This is the great plain of Esdraelon—commonly called in the Old Testament the valley of Jezreel—which runs up into the uplands from the western coast in a south-easterly direction, its broad verdant basin piercing into and parting the hill-country like a gulf of the sea, and ending in comparatively low 'strait-like' passes which lead down into the Jordan valley. To this plain, drained by "that ancient river, the river Kishon," the hill-country of Manasseh descends in valleys which are steep though less glen-like than in the district further south. Among the hills, as the border of the plain is approached, Dothan has of late years been identified, still bearing its ancient name, about 12 miles north of Samaria. A grassy plain surrounds the low hill occupied by the existing village; by it still runs a remnant of the 'old north road' of the kingdom of Israel, which, starting from Jerusalem, keeps nearly along the watershed, and near it is that which leads from Egypt to Syria by the head of the plain of Esdraelon. The north-western angle of the hill-country gradually narrows as the Kishon approaches its confluence with the sea, but it is prolonged to the actual coast by the projecting spur of Carmel. This ridge rises boldly from the sea to a height of about 500 feet, but it continues to mount more gradually till at the highest part of its crest it attains an elevation of 1742 feet; after which it is separated from the main plateau only by a gentle depression of about 160 feet. Opposite to this part, the northern hills—the land of Zebulun—approach rather near to the base of Carmel, so that a comparatively narrow strait of lowland leads up from the coast into the great plain of Esdraelon, where was the rich territory of Issachar.

The general height of this undulating lowland basin is less than 300 feet above the Mediterranean, and as it shelves up towards its eastern end it divides into short terminal branches. The southernmost of these comes to an end on the western flank of Mount Gilboa, which is a long spur from the southern plateau land, running at first northward and then curving towards the west, its elevation being about 1400 feet above the sea. North of the end of Gilboa rises the mass of Little Hermon, insulated on both sides by arms of the plain; across the southern the watershed—not marked by any ridge—runs towards the west. Between Little Hermon and the northern mass of the watershed is equally ill marked, and on the other side of the trough Tabor rises to a height of 1843 feet above the sea, overlooking the slopes which descend towards the Jordan, and connected with the massif on the north side of Esdraelon by a low range of hills. Thus the upper part of the valley—which is by no means a true plain, but rather a gently undulating region—is connected by two low and rounded depressions with the glen of the Jordan, now steadily deepening as it descends from the Lake of Gennesaret towards the Dead Sea; so that on the eastern side the fall from the watershed exceeds a thousand feet.

From the earliest times these clearly-marked depressions have afforded a natural highway across Palestine from the east to the west. Through these the caravans of merchants and the armies of invaders would alike pass between Egypt on the one hand, and Damascus, Babylon or Nineveh on the other. Thus the plain has passed into a proverb as the battle-field of nations (Rev. xvi. 16). On its southern side was Megiddo, near to which, on the banks of the Kishon, the host of Sisera was scattered, and in later days Josiah was slain in the vain attempt to check the army of Pharaoh-necho. The place was at or near the village el-Lejjân, which is "on the caravan route from Egypt to Damascus." From his camp on Gilboa Gideon swooped down upon the Midianites in the valley and drove them down the eastern descent towards the Jordan. On that hill also the troops of Saul were defeated by the Philistines, and the king was slain. On the previous night he had crossed the plain and rounded the western base of Little Hermon on his way to Endor, a village on its northern flank. On these slopes also is the site of Nain.

Very nearly on the flattened watershed between Gilboa and Little Hermon, on the site marked by the village Zer'in, was Jezreel, the residence of Ahab and Jezebel, which sometimes gave a name to the upper part of the plain. Its ruins cover a hill which commands a view both eastward and westward, so that the troop of Jehu when it had reached the summit of the ascent from the Jordan valley would be in sight of the watchmen on the walls. A few miles to the south-east, on a knoll guarding the lower part of the ascent from the Jordan, is Beisan, the ancient Beth-Shean, afterwards Scythopolis, on the walls of which the corpses of Saul and his sons were exposed.

Tabor, which may be regarded as an outlier of the northern plateau, is a hill of more commanding aspect than its altitude (about 1300 feet above its base) suggests. From some points of view, its rounded summit is not unlike the Wrekin of Shropshire, a resemblance which is increased by its steep wooded sides.

The plateau north of the plain of Esdraelon bears nearly the same relation to the Lake of Gennesaret as the plateau of Judah to the Dead Sea, but its physical features are less boldly defined. It rises generally to a less elevation above the Mediterranean, though some summits are rather lofty, one attaining a height of 3934 feet; and its descent to the lake is neither so great nor so abrupt. Its undulations are more fertile, its wooded districts more frequent. At the first allotment of the land, Zebulun held the southern part, while north of that tribe were settled Naphtali and Asher, the one resting on the north-west shore of Gennesaret, the other extending to the Mediterranean about Acco (afterwards Ptolemais, the modern Acre). The district in Roman times was the province of Galilee, that of Samaria lying on the other side of the Kishon. Few of its localities are prominent in the Old Testament history, Kedesh-Naphtali (probably identical with the modern Kades, on a ridge 4 miles N.W. of the upper end of Merom) being perhaps most important as the residence of Barak and in the neighbourhood of the tent of Jael; but in the New, Nazareth on its southern border becomes of note as the home of Jesus. This town is among the hills, W.N.W. of Tabor and almost due north of Jezreel. It occupies the slope of a fertile basin, almost inclosed by hills, being about 1100 feet above the sea and so considerably higher than the general level of Esdraelon. The other sites of importance in this part of Galilee lie near to the Lake of Gennesaret, and will be mentioned in connexion with the valley of the Jordan.

The uplands occupied by the tribe of Asher throw off spurs which reach the coast, and terminate in the elevated headlands now called Ras-el-Abiad (the ladder of Tyre) and the Ras-en-Nakûrâ. The inland plateau narrows somewhat in breadth, but rises in height as it continues northward. The valley of the Leontes or Litany, as above said, fissures rather than interrupts the continuity of the region, which now becomes distinctly mountainous in character. North of it is the long limestone range of Lebanon, rising to a general elevation of from eight to nine thousand feet above the sea, its highest summit indeed somewhat surpassing ten thousand. This is still a land of rich glades and forests, although the groves of cedar-trees, so noted in the days of Solomon, are now reduced in extent. Opposite to it rises the parallel range of Anti-Libanus, the trough-like depression between being traversed for many miles by the Litany, before it turns westward to cut its way to the Mediterranean; Hermon, which will be mentioned again, forming a kind of huge outlier, nearly opposite to this angle of the river.

These two ranges extend northward for more than a hundred miles, severed indeed by the channel of the Orontes, but fusing ultimately with the highlands of Asia Minor, the only plains of importance being about the city of Antioch on that river. For a considerable distance however a narrow strip of lowland intervenes between the outposts of the Lebanon range and the sea. On this stands Sidon, an ancient and once wealthy port, and nearly 20 miles further south the yet more important city of Tyre, which in the days of the Jewish kings and for centuries afterwards was the great commercial emporium of this part of the East. It was in fact the Venice of ancient times, which, though besieged and captured by more than one conqueror, did not receive a fatal blow till it became a prey to the Saracens in the year 1291 A.D.

The important maritime lowland south of the ridge of Carmel, which hitherto has been only incidentally mentioned, must be briefly noticed before dealing with the Jordan valley. The northern portion, called the Plain of Sharon, is about ten miles in width and full thirty in length, extending to Lydda and Joppa (Jaffa). The ground is generally marshy by the sea shore, and more fertile as it rises slightly inland. The only other town of importance on it is Cæsarea, which, as it was founded by Herod the Great, is not mentioned in the Old Testament. South of Joppa extends the Shephelah or Philistine lowland, which is about 40 miles long and expands from about 10 miles in the northern part to double that width near Gaza. This rich and fertile region was in old times the territory of the Philistines, and in it were their chief cities—Ashdod, Ashkelon, Ekron and Gath, besides Gaza.

Returning to the north of Palestine, the main eastern ridge—Anti-Libanus—less lofty than Lebanon, is itself perhaps unmentioned in the Bible, but the commanding position and elevation of its southern outpost—Mount Hermon (about 9400 feet)—bring this into frequent notice. Hermon is visible not only from many places near the Lake of Gennesaret, over which it rises much more than twice the height of Ben Nevis above the sea, but also from many spots in Palestine. The whole range falls away more gently on its eastern side to the rich Syrian plain around the city of Damascus.

The Jordan, the one important river of Palestine proper, has its birth in the confluence, of various streams, three of them perennial and considerable in volume, which are fed by springs issuing from the base of Hermon. Of these three groups of springs, one is at the foot of the hill wrested from the Sidonians by the band of Danite emigrants. The Sidonian Laish then became the Hebrew Dan, where afterwards, at one extremity of the northern kingdom, the 'golden calf' was set up by Jeroboam. Four miles away another stream issues from the limestone rock by the Roman town of Cæsarea Philippi. Once only was this northern boundary of the land visited by the Saviour, but here His Divinity was acknowledged by Peter, and the Mount of the Transfiguration was probably some part of Hermon.

The streams become confluent shortly before the Jordan enters the swampy elongated plain in which is situated Lake Huleh (the Waters of Merom), a rather shallow triangular sheet of water about three miles on each side, almost unapproachable on all but its western margin owing to its wide fringe of marsh. From Huleh the Jordan issues at a height of about seven feet above the Mediterranean, and descends as a "deep impetuous stream between green treeless banks to the Sea of Galilee." The table-land of Naphtali rises on the one side, the rugged volcanic district of Bashan, to be noticed presently, on the other. After a course of about 12 miles, the Jordan enters the oval or pear-shaped sheet of water, called in the Old Testament the Sea of Cinneroth or Chinnereth, and later the Lake or Sea of Galilee, the Sea of Tiberias, and Lake or Sea of Gennesaret. This is about 13 miles long and at its broadest part 6 miles wide. The maximum depth appears to be about 165 feet, and its surface is 682 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. On the east the ground ascends rather steeply for about 1000 feet, on the west the hills rise more gradually from a strip of lowland and are more monotonous in outline. Capernaum was on the western shore, but its exact locality has been disputed. The name Bethsaida was probably borne by two villages—one on the western, the other on the eastern shore. Magdala was on the former, and Tiberias still remains as the impoverished town of Tüberieh on the same shore, rather below the middle of the lake.

The Jordan descends from the southern end through a valley between the two plateaux already mentioned, bounded on the east by steep hills, on the west by a wall of irregular precipitous cliffs from 800 to 1200 feet in height. The greatest breadth of the valley, which after a contraction rather below the middle part widens as it approaches the Dead Sea, is between 10 and 12 miles; its length is about 66 miles, and its total fall about 610 feet. Thus the scenery becomes bolder and grander towards the south; the normal current is everywhere strong and the river practically unnavigable. Within this well-defined valley is a kind of lower terrace, formed of alluvial deposits (see GEOLOGY), between the scarps of which—often steep—the river itself flows. No place of note, so far as we know, has ever stood on or very near its banks between the Lake and the Salt Sea. At the present day, "except for three miserable villages" in the upper part, "the Jordan is utterly lonely" (Robinson).

The tributary streams from the west, which have a perennial flow, are unimportant; those from the east are larger. Of these the Hieromax (Arab. Yarmük), not mentioned in the Bible, is the first of importance in the whole course of the river. It drains part of the once populous Hauran (Land of Bashan) and the hill-country to the south, and enters the Jordan some few miles below the Lake of Gennesaret, as a river about 40 yards wide. Near this it is bridged by the high road from Damascus to Jerusalem. About 30 miles lower down is the confluence of the Nahr-es-Zerka, the "Brook Jab-bok" of the Bible, flowing from the hills of Gilead on the east. Here the Jordan can be forded, and by this route both Abraham and Jacob went up to Shechem. There is another ford higher up opposite to Beisan, leading to the plain of Esdraelon, and more than one on the lower part of the river, as it approaches the Dead Sea. These however cannot as a rule be crossed on foot. Jericho stands at the foot of the western hills, about six miles from the river, but the village which now bears the name does not occupy the site of the Jericho of the Old Testament or even of that of the New. It held the key of the glen which, in ancient days, afforded the most ready ascent to the heart of the uplands around Bethel.

The Jordan falls into the Dead Sea as a stream about 80 yards wide and 3 feet in depth. This, generally called the Salt Sea, in Scripture (now the Bahr Lüt—Sea of Lot), is about 47 miles long and generally about 10 wide, but a considerable, though rather low, peninsula extends from the eastern shore, nearer the southern end, and thus produces a strait in the sea hardly three miles across. The mountains of Moab rise grandly from its eastern shore, on which it receives the Arnon and other perennial streams; on the western are steep cliffs furrowed by deep ravines leading up to the highland plateau of Judæa. Down these, many of them dry for some months of the year, the winter torrents rush impetuously. The mean level of its waters—the season of the year makes a difference of nearly two yards—is 1292 feet below that of the Mediterranean, and the greatest depth of its bed is 1278 feet. No other inland sheet of water lies so far below the ocean level, and in few is a larger proportion of mineral salts present (see GEOLOGY). The 'cities of the plain' are generally supposed to have stood near the southern end, and after their destruction no place of importance arose on the shore, if we except Engedi or Hazazon-Tamar, which occupied a little delta at the mouth of one of the more practicable ravines, leading up to the highlands of Judah.

The great valley, down which the Jordan has flowed, does not terminate abruptly with the Dead Sea, but continues southward, as a well-marked division (the Arabah) between the lofty highlands on either side, though its bed gradually rises until, at a distance of some sixty miles from the Dead Sea, a flattish watershed is reached, about 700 feet above the level of the Gulf of Akabah. From this point the bed of the valley shelves gradually down to this arm of the Red Sea, which is reached after a course of about 45 miles. Thus from the foot of Hermon a deep and sometimes rather wide trench, forming, in its broader physical features, one single valley, a great part of which is below the sea level, extends down to the Red Sea, completely severing the highlands of Palestine on the one hand from those of Eastern Syria on the other, and thus giving to the Promised Land a natural frontier of great strength, which was only vulnerable from the east at a few points. On the shore of the Red Sea was Ezion-Geber, in the more prosperous days of the monarchy the port for trade with India and perhaps even with China.

The region east of the Jordan, as stated above, forms another highland district similar to but generally with more varied physical features than that west of the river. Its northern part, from the foot of Hermon down to the Lake of Gennesaret, is a rather level upland some 3000 feet above sea level, naturally fertile, now called the Jaulan, the ancient Gaulonitis. East of this, on the northern side, is the Leja, the ancient Argob, later the main portion of the district Tra-chonitis, a rugged volcanic land, a region of lava streams and craters, rising sharply, like a rocky shore, above the smooth and grassy downs of Jaulan on the west and Hauran, a region similar to this, on the south. These three formed, roughly speaking, the territory of Og the king of Bashan, and after the conquest became the possession of the half-tribe of Manasseh. The southern frontier of Bashan proper may be regarded as extending to the river Hieromax, and from this stream southward the Jordan formed the western frontier of the land of Gilead. This is also a highland district, rather more varied in scenery than that immediately north, which rises to elevations of about 4000 feet above the sea. The plateau which from a distance "seems a boundless elevated plain and covered with forest" is really furrowed by many glens which descend towards the Jordan, and afford much beautiful scenery. Somewhere in this great mountain woodland, which has not yet lost its original distinctive feature, the critical battle between the troops of Joab and of Absalom must have been fought in 'the Forest of Ephraim.' Mahanaim cannot now be identified with certainty, but on the hills near the river Hieromax many ruins indicate the position of Gadara, the place mentioned in the New Testament, though its distance from the lake introduces some difficulties into the topography of the Synoptic Gospels.

The part of the highland of Gilead north of the "brook Jabbok," which also belonged to Og, king of Bashan, and afterwards was occupied by Manasseh, rises towards the south into higher hills—the range of Ajalon (Jebel Ajlun). This is a rich country still partly covered with fine and extensive forests and passing towards the north-east into "one boundless corn or grass plain, covered with crops. It is, in fact, the granary of North Arabia. Here was the wealth of Roman Syria, and the source of its population, and here the swarming Midianites, like the Beni Sakk'r of to-day, pastured their thousands of camels" (Tristram). The whole land, together with that of Moab further south, is naturally fertile, for while but few of the streams which descend to the Jordan from the west are perennial, all are so on the east. "This simple cause has made east and west to differ, till Gilead, it has been remarked, as far surpasses Western Palestine as Devonshire surpasses Cornwall. The whole is wonderfully diversified and impressive" (Tristram).

South of the Jabbok, surrounded by a region similar in its physical characters, and in a ravine overlooked by a rocky headland, was Ramoth in Gilead, now the comparatively flourishing town es-Salt, "a place which must always have been the key of Gilead—at the head of the only easy road from the Jordan opening immediately on to the rich plateau of the interior, and with this isolated cone rising close above it, fortified from very early times by art as well as by nature" (Tristram). This was the possession of the tribe of Gad, whose land extended about as far as Ilesham. To the south wandered the tribe of Reuben.

About 12 miles away to the south-east, in an elevated valley among low rounded hills, is Rabbath Ammon (Amman), the stronghold and apparently the only important town of the 'Children of Ammon.' It consisted of a lower town, 'the city of waters,' in which is the source of a perennial stream, and an upper—the citadel—which rises abruptly on the north. Notwithstanding the destruction of its inhabitants by David, the town did not cease to be a place of importance, and at last received the name of Philadelphia, from Ptolemy Philadelphus. It is not indeed mentioned in the New Testament, but it was a town of first importance during the Roman domination, when it was the eastern limit of the region of Peræa and one of the cities of the Decapolis, and ultimately became the seat of a Christian bishopric. It was in ruins at the time of the Moslem conquest, and in ruins "remarkable for their extent and desolation even for Syria, 'the land of ruins,'" it still remains. None of these however, so far as is known, is anterior to Roman times.

The limits of the children of Ammon are not definitely known, beyond the fact that they lay to the north of Moab. "Probably the latter was the civilized and settled half of the nation of Lot; the Beni-Ammon formed its predatory and Bedouin section" (Diction- ary of the Bible). The 'Land of Moab' is "a rolling plateau about 3200 feet above the sea level, the western edge being cut up into deep valleys and descending by a series of sloping hills into the Dead Sea" (Palmer). The plateau is divided on the west by the great chasm of the Arnon (Wady el Mojib), through which that stream descends to the Dead Sea; "the grass-covered uplands fed the enormous flocks of Mesha king of Moab." In the northern part—east of the upper end of the Dead Sea—is Heshban. "Moab is here a vast table-land, on the brow of which, to the west, the crest is a little elevated, and to the eastward of it is a slight depression of three or four miles in extent, beyond which the rounded hills rise 200 feet, and gently slope to the east. In the centre of this depression is a small hill of perhaps 200 feet high, but entirely isolated, with a little stream running past it on the east. This is Heshbon. The hill is one heap of shapeless ruin, while all the neighbouring slopes are full of caves, which have once been occupied, turned into use as habitations" (Tristram). The city at the time when the children of Israel were moving towards the Jordan from their forty years wandering was in the hands of Sihon, king of the Amorites, who had wrested it from Moab. They "smote him with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon, for the border of the children of Ammon was strong" (Num. xxi. 24). By this victory a comparatively easy road was opened to the lower valley of the Jordan, and the epoch of the wandering was practically closed. West of Heshbon is the high ground of Nebo, in the Abarim of the Pentateuch; a group of eminences which, though high (more than 4000 feet above the sea), are only separated by shallow undulations. From some one of these, similar to that described by Tristram, the Pisgah view of the Promised Land must have been outspread before Moses as death approached; for it overlooks the valley of the Jordan with the Dead Sea, and all the hills of Palestine, not only Hebron and Olivet, with probably a part of Jerusalem, but more distant Gerizim, with Tabor and possibly Carmel, even to the mass of Hermon.

Further south among the uplands is Ar or Rabbath Moab (Rabba), the capital of Moab, and Kir (Kerak), the second important city of that nation. The towns lie about six miles apart, and the latter is about ten miles east of the southern end of the Dead Sea. Both are on the line of a Roman road, and the ruins at the latter place are extensive and important. The situation is naturally strong, for it occupies the summit of a steep hill perhaps 3000 feet above the sea, defended on all sides by valleys, but it is overlooked beyond these by yet higher hills.

South of Moab is the original territory of Edom, "a narrow slip of mountainous country extending northward from Akabah as far as Wady Kerek, the southern boundary of Moab." The northern part answers to the Gebel of the Hebrew and the Gebelene of the ancient Romans, the southern to the Mount Seir of the Bible. The ruins in Wady Musa are those of the ancient capital of Edom, called in Hebrew Sela, or the Rock (2 Kings xiv. 7), and in Latin by the equivalent name Petra. The great rock-hewn buildings which have been so often described are however of Roman date. On the western side lies the rocky backbone of the land, the summits of which rise to 4000 feet above the sea, and occasionally higher, but the fringe of limestone hills west of Petra and the wider plateau on the east are generally extremely fertile. These hills slope down towards the Arabian desert, and are still skirted by the pilgrim road from Damascus to Mecca, which must have been the route taken by the Israelites when they were refused a passage through the territory of Edom. Mount Hor (4580 feet)—now called Jebel Haran—lies south-west of Petra, overlooking the Arabah, and on its jagged summit a Mohammedan chapel indicates the traditional site of the tomb of Aaron. His death occurred while the people were still camped in the Arabah waiting for permission to cross the land of Edom, which afterwards they 'encompassed' by turning back and passing round its southern frontier.

Syria, the Hebrew Aram, is a name applied rather vaguely to include apparently both the region of the two mountain ranges north of the frontier of Palestine and the land far away to the east, which is traversed by the upper waters of the Euphrates and Tigris. Of these two rivers, the former rises in the mountains of Armenia, its branches flowing at first south-westward, but after their union the main stream is diverted in a south-easterly direction by the interposition of the ranges parallel with the coast. The Tigris also rises in the Armenian mountains east of, and in the case of one of its feeders near to, the Euphrates. Between the upper part of the two main rivers lay Mesopotamia, and to the north of it Padan-aram, or the Syria of the plain, the region about Haran, to which Terah and Abram migrated from Ur of the Chaldees, a place which has been identified variously, many authorities inclining to Edessa, in the northern district, but the more recent placing it at the modern Mugheir on the western bank of the Euphrates, near Erch (Warka) to the south of Babylon.

Damascus, in another portion of Syria, has been already mentioned. This ancient city stands on a rich plain, "stolen as it were from the desert." The latter region, a prolongation of the great Arabian desert, extends yet further northward—"an elevated upland, for the most part of gypsum and marls, producing nothing but a few spare bushes of wormwood and the usual aromatic plants of the wilderness." To the south it widens out till it occupies the chief part of the region between the border of Moab and the broad valley of the two rivers. The region is traversed with difficulty and is little known. "Tadmor in the wilderness" is built on an oasis crossed by almost the only road from Damascus to the Euphrates. Thus this desert was a most important safeguard to the children of Israel. So long as they could hold their own against Edom and Moab, the king of Syria was their only formidable foe on their eastern flank, and it was not till Damascus had fallen that a way lay open for the more irresistible potentates who ruled in Babylon or in Nineveh.

In the Old Testament history references to places more distant than the valley of the Nile or of the two rivers are few and often vague. Chittim is considered to be Cyprus, and Tarshish to be some place on the Spanish coast, probably Tartessus, of which town however the locality is not beyond dispute. Arabia is occasionally mentioned in general terms: Sheba is identified with its southern portion, roughly corresponding with that now called Arabia Felix, and Ophir is by some located on the Arabian coast, by others on the Indian. Ethiopia or Cush extended from Syene on the frontier of Egypt southwards to the neighbourhood of Khartoum, at the junction of the Blue and White Nile; it included the modern Nubia, with the states to the south and perhaps part of Abyssinia.

In the Apocrypha the horizon widens. The Macedonian king, Alexander the Great, invaded Palestine, and the dynasty established in Syria after his death ruled and, for a time, persecuted the Jews. Then came the Roman armies, and the incorporation of Palestine into that dominion, so that when the Saviour was born it was included in the census of the empire. In the later books of the New Testament we read of journeys not only throughout Asia Minor, Greece, and some of the Mediterranean islands, but also to Rome itself.

2. HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY.

BY THE REV. CANON BONNEY.

To a considerable extent this subject has been noticed in connexion with the Physical Geography of Bible Lands, so that a few additional remarks and a brief recapitulation may suffice. The earlier books of the Bible give apparently rather precise details of the relationships of the different nations therein mentioned, but the result of linguistic research and the study of ancient monuments indicate that these relationships are geographical rather than ethnological.

Passing then by these, it may suffice to say that in the days of Abraham two nations at least had attained to a comparatively high state of civilisation; the one in the valley of the two rivers, the other in that of the Nile. Each probably had already existed as a nation for over a thousand years. That in Babylonia originated in a non-Semitic race speaking an agglutinative language, and holding a Shamanistic religion¹, similar to that of the native Siberians and Lapps. But by degrees a race of Semites whose creed was a more definite theism, but characterized by a pair of divinities, the male sun-god and his female double, had obtained the upper hand; partly, it is probable, by conquest, partly by peaceful immigration, and "from the mixture sprang the peculiar civilisation of Babylon and the peculiar type of its people." One of their kings, prior to the date of Abraham, is said to have extended his conquests to the Syrian coast, and even as far as Cyprus. The well-known incursion into Palestine of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, with his allies, probably indicates a pre-dominance of the Persian tribes in the kingdom or kingdoms of the Euphrates valley, similar to but less permanent than that which afterwards occurred.

The civilisation of Egypt (Mizraim) is hardly less ancient than that of Babylonia. The people appear to be of a non-Semitic stock, intermediate in race between the Nigritian and the Caucasian: "their language agglutinative, monosyllabic, though with Semitic infusions, but their mythology shewing little trace of Semitic influences." The dates assigned to the founder of the first dynasty, Menes, vary considerably, ranging from B.C. 5004 to B.C. 2700; but it seems established that when Abraham went down into Egypt the Sphinx had been sculptured and the three pyramids of Gizeh had been built. It is probable that at this time and in the days of Joseph the Hyksos or 'Shepherd kings' had made themselves masters of Lower Egypt, but they were expelled some time before the Exodus.

When Abraham came from Syria into the Land of Promise, it was apparently but thinly peopled. The Canaanite, who "was then in the land," was, like himself, of the Semitic stock, and was already distinguished into separate tribes. Other and probably more nomad tribes of this stock wandered over the eastern hills, but the Horites, who then inhabited Mount Seir, and were dwellers in caves, were perhaps a primitive and non-Semitic people, like the Rephaim, men of unusually tall stature, who at various times are found both east and west of the Jordan.

A third powerful kingdom was that of the Hittites, which also had been long established in the days of Abraham. It lay between the Orontes and the Euphrates, extending probably from below Carchemish on that river to the Mediterranean, and perhaps yet further west; but it is difficult to connect its people with the "children of Heth" around Hebron; while as regards the south the phrase "king of Gerar" indicates that the Philistines had already settled on the southern coast.

Palestine in patriarchal times appears to have been in a condition something like parts of Australia at the present day—its towns few in number and far apart, with large tracts of open country better fitted for pasture than for the plough. The habits of the people were partly nomadic, and they spoke languages so nearly related as to enable them to communicate readily one with another. Among them, as a rule, the life of a man of the same race was safe. They must in short have differed but little from many Arab races at the present day. It is worth notice that Jacob and Joseph pass across the country apparently without thought of danger, and on the disappearance of the latter his father attributes his loss to wild beasts, not to the hand of man.

Considerable changes appear to have taken place in Western Syria during the long stay of Israel in Egypt, for on the return of the children of Israel we find the Edomites, Midianites, Moabites and Ammonites now become comparatively powerful nations, and occupying the highlands from the Gulf of Akabah northwards, between the Jordan and the eastern desert. Of these, the Moabites appear to have led the most settled lives, the Midianites perhaps the most nomadic, for we read of them now in the Peninsula of Sinai, now as neighbours of Moab. The northern part of these highlands had been occupied by Og, king of Bashan, one of the Rephaim, a warlike and powerful chief, and south of him the Amorites, a highland clan of Palestine, had wrested from Ammon and Moab some territory between the Jabbok and the Arnon. Palestine itself appears to have become more thickly peopled; towns had replaced encampments, and many of them were fortified. On the approach of the Israelites, the Amorites, the Hittites and the Jebusites held the highland region of Palestine. The Canaanites proper occupied the northern maritime region and extended from it by the valley of the Kishon to the upper part of the Jordan valley. Kindred tribes, each with its own chief, but apparently recognising some kind of leadership in Jabin king of Hazor (a town of which the exact site is not known, but which seems to have been on the high ground overlooking the Lake of Merom), extended for a considerable distance towards the north-east.

The Israelites on entering Palestine, after conquering a few towns in detail, defeated a confederacy of five highland (Amorite) chiefs, before the walls of Gibeon: but the great struggle was with the Canaanite confederacy, headed by Jabin, near the waters of Merom. This crushing victory, when horse and chariot went down before the Jewish footmen, gave to Israel the northern regions, as the former one had secured the south, so that the land was theirs "from Baal Gad in the valley of Lebanon, under Mount Hermon," down to the plateau of the Tih, and the Arabah valley.

Much however of the region was not permanently secured. The invasions of the Israelites, like those of their eastern neighbours and of the wilder Arab tribes at the present day, were, in many cases, successful forays rather than permanent conquests; they swept over the land like a tornado, their path marked by slaughtered corpses and burning ruins; but they were not numerous enough to establish permanent settlements in every conquered district. This would hold especially of the borderlands of Palestine. Where a walled town was stormed a clean sweep could be made of its inhabitants, but the destruction of nomad tribes in the open country is far more difficult. A large part of the tribe escapes from the running fight into mountains or deserts, where the difficulties of the region and their superior local knowledge render them safe from serious attack, and in a few years they recover from the blow. The 'snake is scotched but not killed,' and in another generation is as venomous as ever. So after the two and a half tribes had settled on the rich pastures about the hills of Gilead and Bashan, and the main body had occupied the highlands of Palestine, their ancient foes returned to the attack. The first invasion was from the greatest distance. Cushan-rishathaim, "king of Mesopotamia," precursor of the later Assyrian and Babylonian invaders, for eight years became master of a part of the country; until from some unknown cause his arm could no longer reach so far, and his yoke was thrown off.

The south of Palestine next was for a time oppressed by Moab; and then the northern Canaanites led by the king of Hazor, overran the north, until the hosts of Sisera were defeated by a league of the tribes around the Kishon valley, namely Zebulun, Issachar, the Western Manasseh and Ephraim, aided by the tribe of Benjamin, and under the leadership of Deborah and Barak. The hordes of Midianites and Amalekites from the eastern deserts then broke through the trans-Jordanic tribes, again occupied the rich lowlands near the Kishon, and extended their forays even to Gaza, till Naphtali, Manasseh and Asher, led by Gideon, drove them with great slaughter into the eastern deserts, thus arousing the jealousy of Ephraim. After a period of internal dissension the trans-Jordanic tribes were conquered, and all the southern highlands harried, by the children of Ammon, until Jephthah of Gilead smote them with a great slaughter. Ephraim again took offence, invaded Gilead, and was defeated with great loss.

An enemy, formidable from the first, now begins to press hard upon Israel; and from a new quarter, the west. The Philistines are said to have been a colony from Caphtar, by which some authorities understand part of the delta of Egypt, some Crete. They too were a Semitic race, speaking a language only dialectically different from Hebrew; and their religion, if not Semitic in origin, had been greatly modified by Semitic influences. By the time of the Israelite immigration they had gained full possession of the maritime plain, and formed a powerful confederacy, which first held its own, and ultimately pressed hardly upon the Hebrews, bringing that nation very low in the later days of the Judges, and even in those of Saul.

But in the reign of David all was changed. The Philistines were driven back and made tributary. Edom, Moab, Ammon had to acknowledge his overlordship. Yet more distant conquests were made, and his son Solomon reigned over all the land from the western bank of the Euphrates to the border of Egypt. Both kings maintained an alliance with the kings of Tyre; indeed this nation and the kindred Sidonians appear to have rarely been at feud with their southern neighbour even in earlier times. The Phœnicians, allied in race and in language with the Hebrews, were famed from a very early period for their skill in arts and activity in commerce. As all the harbours along the maritime plain are bad, Solomon made use of Tyre as a port for his trade with the Mediterranean, while that with the East was carried on from Ezion-geber on the Gulf of Akabah.

The golden age of Israel died with Solomon; the nation became weaker after its division into two realms; Moab and Edom recovered their independence from Judah, and the king of Syria ruling at Damascus was the most formidable foe of the northern kingdom. Both Israel and Judah were 'cut short,' and at last the fall of Damascus laid open the way for the Assyrian conqueror. The tribes east of the Jordan were carried away captive by Tiglath-pileser. Next the northern kingdom was destroyed, and the majority of its inhabitants carried away to the district between the Euphrates and the Tigris, west of Nineveh, where they disappear from history. Colonists were imported from Babylon and from conquered towns higher up the Euphrates, and a mongrel race replaced the northern tribes.

The southern kingdom, however, still maintained itself in the highlands of Judah for full 130 years longer, invaded now by Egypt, now by Assyria, but at last it fell before the king of Babylon (for this city had now displaced Nineveh in the overlordship of the valley of the two rivers), and many of the people, including all the principal families, were carried off as captives to Babylon. Of the residue a part emigrated a few years later into Egypt, where they disappear. Babylon in its turn fell before the increasing power of the highland races of Media and Persia; races of the Aryan stock, who from various causes were less distrustful of the Jews; the exiles returned, and were permitted to rebuild their city and Temple, though an important section still remained in Babylon. The Samaritans claimed kinship and were repulsed, and for many years the area of Jewish history is restricted to the territory formerly possessed by Judah and Benjamin, but limited on the south by the Edomites, who on the fall of Jerusalem had taken possession of the country west of the Jordan, being known to later history as the Idumæans.

Judæa was included in the conquests of Alexander the Great, and after his death formed a part of the kingdom of the Ptolemies; from them it was ultimately wrested by Antiochus the Great and added to his Græco-Syrian kingdom (b.c. 197). Its varying fortunes are described in the Apocryphal Books. Under the Maccabæan princes the Jews for a time were independent, and with John Hyrcanus as leader even destroyed the Samaritan temple on Gerizim and conquered the Idumæans (a.c. 108), but in the year a.c. 63 Pompey the Great besieged and captured Jerusalem, and henceforth Judæa was a subject state in the Roman empire. At the time of the Saviour's ministry Palestine was included in the Roman province of Syria, and was subdivided into Judæa, Samaria, both governed by a Roman proprætor, and Galilee, ruled by Herod Antipas as tetrarch; part of the district near the base of Hermon, extending eastward, was called Ituræa, and with the neighbouring Trachonitis was ruled by Philip, with the same title. A district closely connected with these last named, mostly east of the Jordan, and in part south of the Lake of Gennesaret, bore the name of Decapolis. In the ten cities implied by this name, Bethshean (Scythopolis) and Gadara were included, and generally Damascus, while the district further south, and east of the river, was rather vaguely termed Pæraa.

The disposition of the land was more than once altered in regard to the subject kings, but with the destruction of Jerusalem by the army of Titus, the last shadow of independence vanished from the Jewish people. But in this case a blow which seemed to have destroyed their nationality has really intensified its individuality. They were most truly patriotic when the fatherland had become but a memory and a longing regret. Calamity drew the remnant closer together; it intensified both the pride of race and the aversion to impair the purity of its descent. As in the case of some trees, cutting down the main stem caused the roots to throw up numerous distant shoots. The exiles of Assyria were but slowly absorbed; those of Babylonia for many centuries retained their individuality; the Princes of the Captivity are names in history even to the middle ages, while the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles shew both the importance and the wide distribution of Jewish settlements, and Jewish exclusiveness was a proverb at Rome. At the present day Jews have penetrated to almost every part of the world, and still retain their racial characteristics unimpaired, whether physical, mental, or moral.

3. GEOLOGY AND CLIMATE.

BY THE REV. CANON BONNEY.

The geology of Palestine and of the adjoining districts south and north is comparatively simple. The southern part of the Peninsula of Sinai consists mainly of igneous rock—chiefly granite, diorite, and various felstones. In its northern part is a belt of country in which metamorphic rocks, gneisses and schists, predominate. These are probably, geologically speaking, of very great antiquity. The less elevated district between this mountain region and the escarpment of et-Tih is mainly composed of sandstone. This sandstone, on examination, has been found to be divisible into two masses, differing widely in their age. The lower, with which a little limestone is occasionally associated, is proved by fossil evidence to belong to the Carboniferous Period. The upper, or Nubian sandstone, which extends over a much wider area than the other, belongs either to the lower part of the Cretaceous or possibly to the Neocomian; thus it is coeval with either the bluish clay known in England as the gault or the brown sands, which occur below it in many places, for instance, in the Weald of Kent and Sussex, in Bedfordshire and in Cambridgeshire. This sandstone, together with crystalline rocks similar to those of Sinai, both igneous and metamorphic, occurs in Africa on the western side of the Gulf of Suez. Crystalline rock also forms the hills east of the Gulf of Akabah, and can be traced at intervals as far as the southern edge of the Dead Sea; it is also prolonged northwards for a considerable distance from Sinai on the west side of the Arabah. Here it is overlain by an extension of the Nubian sandstone, and the latter, crossing the Arabah, forms the hills of Edom about Petra, and extends northward at the base of the plateau of Moab for some way up the valley of the Jordan, its thickness often exceeding 1000 feet. It is no doubt wholly composed of the detritus of the older crystalline rocks, and is noted for the variety and beauty of its colours, tints of dull red being very common. In some places, however, the older sandstone is found to underlie it. Newer than the Nubian sandstone is a series of limestones representative of the Cretaceous group, and corresponding roughly in age with the chalk of England. This is the dominant rock in the region most intimately connected with the Bible history. The stone for the more important ancient buildings in Jerusalem has been obtained from beds about the age of the upper part of our chalk, the reservoirs and sepulchres being excavated in their lower part, which is rather softer than the higher.

In England and in Northern France the chalk is separated from the lowest of the Eocene rocks by a considerable break, which forms a well-marked division between the Secondary and the Tertiary Series. This break does not appear to occur in Palestine, but there is a gradual transition from Cretaceous to Eocene deposits, one of the latter, the nummulitic limestone, a rock of the age of the sandy clays which occur on the shore of Bracklesham Bay in Sussex, forming the surface rock over a large area of country. The latter, underlain by the Cretaceous limestone, forms all the western portion of the Tih plateau, and fringes for some distance the western side of the Sinai mountains on the shore of the Gulf of Suez. Across that it extends away westwards into Africa, and for a long distance borders the valley of the Nile above Cairo. From the northern margin of the Tih, the nummulitic limestone runs roughly parallel with the Mediterranean coast, and forms the western margin of the hill country of Judah and of Ephraim as far as the headland of Carmel, being overlain at intervals on the western slopes by a calcareous sandstone, probably of late Eocene or Miocene age. Of this softer material the undulations of the maritime plain are often composed.

The eastern half of the Tih, almost the whole of the Palestine highlands as far as the Lebanon, the corresponding plateau east of the Jordan from near the south end of Gennesaret to where the red sandstones or the crystalline rocks of the mountains of Edom rise from beneath it, consist of the same Cretaceous or Cretaceous-Eocene limestones, crowned in one or two places by outlying remnants of the nummulitic (Middle Eocene) rock. The beds of these limestones are generally nearly horizontal, dipping, usually at low angles, in an easterly or south-easterly direction, which circumstance is obviously very favourable to the formation of a plateau-like region with rather deep and steep-sided valleys. But in the mountain chains which terminate the plateau on the north, in Lebanon and the opposite range, the strata, as is usual, are inclined at higher angles and are greatly disturbed and contorted.

A very considerable area, roughly triangular in form, east of the upper waters of the Jordan, from the foot of Hermon to below the south end of Gennesaret, consists wholly of volcanic rock; craters, scattered scoria and lava streams of black basalt. Of the same nature is the Lejah (Argob) yet further east. On the west side also of the Jordan, between Huleh and Gennesaret, is a considerable district similar in character, and a smaller outbreak of basalt occurs on the western shore of the latter lake. Still smaller outbreaks of the same rock occur near Nazareth to the south-west, and there are several patches of moderate size among the hills of Moab, east of the Dead Sea. Two or three more occur in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem on the eastern side of the town. Dykes of basalt also break through the older igneous rocks of the peninsula of Sinai. Very probably these basaltic eruptions belong approximately to one geological age, which must be later than the Eocene, though older and younger outbreaks, separated by a considerable interval of time, have been distinguished, as in Auvergne. As the craters and cones in the northern region are still very perfect and the lava streams descend into the existing valleys, the last volcanic eruptions there may be, geologically speaking, comparatively modern.

From what has been stated above, it follows that the valley of the lower Nile, the Gulfs of Suez and of Akabah, the whole of the 'great glen' partially occupied by the Jordan, with the uplands, both to east and to west—in short, the scene of Hebrew history from the Call of Abraham to the Captivity—are physical features of comparatively recent date. Being carved in part out of Lower Tertiary rock, their development—like that of the Alps—cannot have begun before Middle Tertiary times. The mountains of Sinai, however, are probably of much greater antiquity and may have risen as parts of an island group from the waters of the Cretaceo-Eocene sea.

Still, though in one sense modern, the more marked physical features of the Promised Land, if measured by the standard of years, must be of very great antiquity. The lowlands, which in many places intervene between these plateau regions and the sea, in several instances can be proved to be 'raised beach' deposits, indicating that the whole region once stood about 250 feet below its present level—a depression which would convert the lower part of the Nile valley into a sea loch, and would connect the Mediterranean with the Red Sea by submerging the Isthmus of Suez. Still, the separation of these seas cannot have been a very recent event, even geologically speaking, for the fauna of the one differs greatly from that of the other, only about eight per cent. of the mollusca being common to the two.

There is corroborative evidence of the antiquity of the Jordan valley. According to Professor Hull and earlier writers, lacustrine deposits occur abundantly in that valley up to a height of about 1400 feet above the present level of the Dead Sea. Hence the valley must once have been occupied by a long but relatively narrow lake, which extended without a break from north of the present Lake Huleh at least to the foot of Mount Hor. Its surface therefore would be a hundred feet or so above the present level of the Mediterranean, with a watershed at its southern end which only rose above it some five or six hundred feet and separated it from the Gulf of Akabah. As these marly lacustrine deposits—which form the lower and inner terraces of the Jordan valley—contain at various levels rock salt and gypsum, the waters of the lake, even at the time of its greatest extent, may have been salt, though their salinity has been increased by evaporation. Very probably this great extension of the inland sea occurred during some part of that time of exceptional cold called by geologists the Glacial Epoch. Then climatal conditions, almost as severe as those of Greenland, prevailed in the northern parts of Britain and of the mainland of Europe. Then the glaciers of the Alps covered the lowlands of Switzerland, and their margins rested high up on the flanks of the Jura. At this time the peaks of Sinai may have been capped with snow, and permanent fields of it lay thick on the twin Lebanon ranges; for at the present day the rocks of Hermon are striated and rounded by vanished glaciers, and the famous grove of the cedars on Lebanon is rooted on an old moraine. Conditions such as these would probably increase the rainfall; the dry glens of Palestine would be occupied by perennial streams and be flooded every spring by the melting of the accumulated winter snow, and the lower temperature of the summer would diminish the evaporation from the surface of the lake. This would no doubt be a period favourable to denudation, and from it may date many of the more superficial physical features of the country.

A very marked feature in the geology of Palestine is a great fault which has been traced by Prof. Hull along the foot of the hills of Edom from the Gulf of Akabah to the Dead Sea. Other faults cut these hills obliquely or run roughly parallel with it in the Arabah. Probably it extends for a very long distance up the Jordan valley, the displacement diminishing as it runs northward. This no doubt has determined the general course of the whole valley from the Lebanon to the Red Sea, though it does not seem possible to connect the minor physical features of the region, such as the watershed in the Arabah, with this displacement, as some authors maintain. Though volcanic eruptions, as has been said, are comparatively speaking of recent date, there is no evidence that any have occurred in historic times, or that would justify us in attributing the destruction of the 'Cities of the Plain' to this cause. Earthquakes, however, have been and still are not unfrequent in Palestine, and sometimes the shocks are severe. Hot springs also occur in several places. Bitumen is washed up on the shore of the Dead Sea, and is found in more than one other locality, but this is not necessarily connected with volcanic disturbance.

Palestine has little mineral wealth. There are some mines of iron and coal—which do not appear to be important—in the Lebanon, and there is a valuable deposit of bitumen at the foot of Hermon. Salt and gypsum have been already mentioned. In the Sinaitic peninsula copper, iron, and manganese, especially the first-named mineral, are found in the north-western angle of the Sinai mountains, to the south of the escarpment of the Tih, and were worked by the ancient Egyptians, probably both before and after the date of the Exodus. Turquoise also was obtained by the same nation in this district, where the mineral can still be procured.

The salt waters of the Dead Sea have been already mentioned. This sheet of water, exceptional in its position so far below sea level, is hardly less remarkable from its high percentage of mineral matter in solution. Like the water of the Great Salt Lake in Utah, its saltiness is due to desiccation. The Jordan carries certain mineral substances in solution into the Dead Sea; these remain behind, while the pure water is evaporated by the sun. Hence, as in the case of the Great Salt Lake of Utah, which once, when far more extensive, was actually fresh, the Dead Sea waters are now much more salt than when they reached almost to the foot of Hermon; more salt indeed than those of any other important inland lake. Hence the general absence of animal life, their extreme bitterness, and their unusual buoyancy, so often noticed by bathers. Their specific gravity is from 1.210 to 1.253, according to the locality, that of average ocean water being 1.028. They contain about 24.6 per cent. of mineral salts, especially magnesian (chloride of magnesium and sodium); approximately 14 per cent. being chloride of magnesium and 7.5 per cent. chloride of sodium; average ocean water containing respectively 0.36 and 2.7 per cent. and a total amount of about 3.5 of salts. The only other salt present in the Dead Sea water at all in large quantity is chloride of lime. The analyses however exhibit considerable variety, both in the actual amount of mineral matter present in solution and in its components, but the above figures will serve to give a general idea of this remarkable water.

Climate. The climate of a district so variable in its elevation as Palestine must of course differ much with the locality. On the western plateau however the summer is warm, but not generally extremely hot, though occasionally a scorching and oppressive wind blows for a few days. At Jerusalem July and August are the hottest months, having a mean temperature varying from about 78° to 80° (Fahrenheit), according to the year. January is the coldest month, its mean temperature ranging in different years from 47° to 51°. Frosts occur not unfrequently, but the ground does not solidify, and only a pellicle of ice forms on the pools. Snow falls occasionally, sometimes for a depth of a few inches, but does not lie long. On the higher ground, as on the mountains of Moab, its depth and duration increase. The upper parts of Lebanon and Hermon are snow-clad in the winter months, and on the latter mountain patches linger in sheltered places, almost if not quite throughout the summer. But the lower part of the Jordan valley has a much higher temperature, and in the summer time is extremely hot. This region is far from healthy, being, like all low ground in hot countries, a region liable to malarious fevers, but as a rule the uplands of Palestine are very salubrious.

The winter half of the year is the season of rain. This begins to fall late in October or early in November (the early rain), coming with W. and S.W. winds, and the amount for a time increases. Altogether a considerable quantity falls—though there are intervals of fine weather—in November and December. Then these intervals increase in duration and the precipitation diminishes in amount. The rainfall increases again in the month of March (the latter rain), and sometimes continues into the early part of April. Showers also occur in May, but after this until the autumnal equinox rain hardly ever falls in Palestine, though on the high ground the dews at night are often heavy. This protracted rainless period gives an almost priceless value to perennial streams and springs of water, explains the labour expended on the excavation of wells, and in many places necessitates the storage of water for the summer supply in rock-hewn cisterns.

The fertility of the upland region, as has been already said, increases as we proceed northward. The rugged mountain district of Sinai, except in certain of its valleys, is singularly barren; so also is a large part of the Tih. The Negeb or South Country is slightly less infertile, and the hill country of Judah is better. Still, even that, compared with the maritime plain on the one hand, and the greater part of the land of Moab and Gilead on the other, is far from being a fertile region. But the hills of Ephraim are better, and the improvement continues northwards. Thus a considerable tract of the Promised Land at first sight hardly seems to justify the phrases often applied to it in the Pentateuch, and it is difficult to understand how a very large body of people with flocks and herds could have subsisted in the mountains of Sinai and in the wilderness of the wandering. But there is good reason to believe that every part of the region was once more fertile than it is at the present time. It is possible that the general desiccation which is known to have taken place in historic times over a very large area in south-western Asia may have had some influence even here, but apart from this, the deteriorating effects of centuries of rapine and misgovernment, the abandonment of cultivation, the reckless destruction of forests, and the neglect, often total, of every effort to husband the natural resources of the country, have produced their usual disastrous consequences. Every traveller in the more barren parts of Judæa notes the indications of former cultivation; even the arid Negeb is still covered with the remains of artificial watercourses, and terraces, and with little heaps of stone indicating the former culture of the vine. These too are not wanting yet further to the south, shewing that at any rate a portion of the Tih plateau "at the time of the Exodus must have borne a similar relation to the then fertile region of the Negeb, which that now barren tract at the present day bears to the rest of Palestine" (Palmer). At that time, even among the bare mountains of Sinai, perennial streams and fertile valleys may have been rather more frequent than now. It is at any rate difficult to understand how large colonies of Egyptians could have been maintained in the neighbourhood of the mines, unless the district were less arid than it is at the present time.

4. ZOOLOGY AND BOTANY OF THE BIBLE.

BY THE REV. W. HOUGHTON, M.A.

MAMMALS.

APES (Heb. gôphim) occurs only in 1 Kings x. 22, and 2 Chron. ix. 21, as one of the commodities imported by Solomon in Tarshish-ships from Ophir. The "ivory, apes and peacocks" were originally Indian exports. But we must not conclude that Ophir must therefore have been in India. Ophir may have been an intermediate emporium.

ASS (Heb. khamôr; âthôn, "she ass"; 'ayir, "foal" or "colt," fit for riding). The domestic ass of the East is a finer, stronger, swifter, and more spirited animal than that of Western Europe and colder climates. It was used for riding, carrying burdens, war-baggage, and for ploughing; also for turning a large mill, as the Greek (in Matt. xviii. 6; Luke xvii. 2) for "millstone" shews. White asses were much esteemed, being of great beauty and of large size. The expression (Judg. v. 10) "ye that ride on white asses" refers to the nobles of the land.

ASS, WILD- (Heb. 'ârôd, pere). The Biblical notices of wild-asses refer to their wild and shy nature, their refractory and untameable disposition, their great swiftness, and their home in desolate districts. Of Ishmael it is said, "He shall be a wild man" (Heb. pere âdâm, "a wild-ass man"), Gen. xvi. 12; R. V. "a wild-ass among men"; an emblem of the wild character of the tribe. Other references to wild-asses are Isa. xxxii. 14; Jer. ii. 24, xiv. 6; Hos. viii. 9; Job xxiv. 5, xi. 12.

BADGER-SKINS. R. V. "seal-skins"; m. "porpoise-skins." (Heb. 'ôrôth tekhashim, takhash.) Some strong enduring material used for the outer covering of the tabernacle, and for wrapping up sacred things when they were removed (Numb. iv. 8; Exod. xxvi. 14 and other passages); used also as shoes or sandals (Ezek. xvi. 10).

BAT (Heb. 'atalêph). Bats were forbidden as food to the Israelites, and are included in the list of unclean birds (Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18); Isaiah (ii. 20) refers to the bat as frequenting ruins and desolate places.

BEAR (Heb. dôb). The bear of Palestine is the Ursus syriacus, a local variety of the common brown bear, Ursus arctos, from which it is chiefly distinguished by its light colour. In Biblical times bears were more common than they now are in Palestine, although they are frequently seen on Mounts Lebanon and Hermon. The ferocity of the bear when deprived of its young is referred to in 2 Sam. xvii. 8; Prov. xvii. 12; Hos. xiii. 8; its deep monotonous groaning is mentioned in Isa. lix. 11. David slew one single-handed (1 Sam. xvii. 36). Two she-bears are said to have come out of a wood near Bethel, and to have killed forty-two children (2 Kings ii. 24).

BEHEMOTH. R. V. m. "hippopotamus." This word is the Heb. plural number of be-hēmūth, and signifies "beasts," but in Job xl. 15-24 some large animal, e.g. the hippopotamus, is evidently intended.

BOAR, WILD- (Heb. khazir), is mentioned only in Psalm lxxx. 13 as destructive to vineyards.

BULL, WILD- or WILD-OX; R. V. "antelope" (Heb. tô, tēô). No doubt some kind of antelope is denoted by the Heb. word, which is found only in Deut. xiv. 5 as one of the animals fit for food, and in Isa. li. 20, "thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets like a tô in a net."

CAMEL (Heb. gāmāl; Assy. gammalul). The Arabian or one-humped camel is the species always mentioned in the Bible.

CATS (Gr. ailouroi) are mentioned only in Baruch vi. 22 in the passage which declaims against the idols of Babylon. The domestic cat was unknown to the early Hebrews. With the Egyptians it was a great favourite when alive, and venerated when dead.

CATTLE. There was no animal held in higher esteem by the Jews than the ox, on which useful animal all the ordinary operations of farming depended. The Jews generally pastured their cattle in the open country or in wooded districts, where they would roam about for a great part of the year in a half wild state, and were consequently sometimes dangerous; hence the laws with respect to "g. ring." The Psalmist complains of the troubles his enemies gave him, and compares them to wild-bulls, "Many bulls have compassed me, the strong ones of Bashan have beset me" [Ps. xxii. 12 (13)]. Cattle were also stall-fed. Both sorts are mentioned in 1 Kings iv. 23 (v. 3 in Heb.), "ten fat oxen and twenty out of the pastures."

CHAMOIS (Heb. zemer) occurs only in Deut. xiv. 5, as an edible ruminant. The Hebrew word denotes some "springing" or "leaping" animal. The chamois was probably not known in Western Asia, and is most unlikely to be the zemer of Scripture. Perhaps the mouflon (Ovis montanus), though now as a rule restricted to the islands of Corsica and Sardinia, may be the zemer.

CONEY. R. V. m. "the Hyrax Syriacus or rock-badger" (Heb. shaphán). The shaphán of the Heb. Bible is mentioned as one of the unclean animals in Lev. xi. 5 and Deut. xiv. 7, where, however, it is erroneously said to chew the cud. Its resort among rocky hills is mentioned in Ps. civ. 13, and its shyness and cleverness in avoiding danger in Prov. xxx. 24, 26. The Hebrew name signifies the "hiding" animal.

DOG (Heb. keleb; Assyr. calbu). The Scripture references to the dog are numerous, and in all cases shew the aversion in which it was held by the Hebrews. It was regarded as a half-wild, greedy creature, running about at will, without a master, and eating human corpses. The only duty of the dog of Palestine in Biblical times was to guard the flocks (Job xxx. 1).

DRAGON. R. V. "dragon," "sea-monster," "jackal" (Heb. tan, pl. tannim or tannin, and tannin, pl. tanninim). There are two very similar but distinct Heb. words rendered generally "dragon" in the A. V., but sometimes "whale," "serpent," "sea-monster." The Heb. tan occurs in the plural number in the following passages, Job xxx. 29; Ps. xlv. 19 (20); Isa. xlii. 22, xxxiv. 13, xxxv. 7, xliii. 20; Jer. ix. 11 (10), i. 22, xiv. 6, xlix. 33, li. 37; Mic. i. 8; Mal. i. 3; Ezek. xxix. 3, xxxii. 2; in all these passages except the last two, where tannin, "a sea-monster," instead of tannim, pl. of tan, should be read, the word tan evidently refers to a "jackal," as the context shews (see Fox). The other word tannin occurs in Gen. i. 21; Exod. vii. 9, 10, 12; Deut. xxxii. 33; Neh. ii. 13; Job vii. 12; Ps. lxxiv. 13, xci. 13, cxlviii. 7; Isa. xxvii. 1, li. 9; Jer. li. 34; Lam. iv. 3; in all these passages except the last, where tannim (pl. of tan, "jackals") should be read instead of tannin, the word clearly denotes some monster of the sea or the Nile, as the crocodile (an image of Egypt), or a serpent. See LEVIATHAN.

DROMEDARY. There are two Heb. words thus rendered, béker or bikráh (fem.), Isa. lx. 6; Jer. ii. 23; R. V. m. "young camels"—which is the correct rendering, and rekes, which the A. V. variously translates "dromedaries," "mules," and "swift beasts," 1 Kings iv. 28 (v. 8); Esth. viii. 10, 14; Mic. i. 13. The R. V. has "swift steeds," which is the correct rendering; in Esth. l. c. the A. V. gives "young dromedaries" as the translation of the Heb. expression bené rammákim, R. V. "bred of the stud." The dromedary, a finer breed of Arabian camel used when despatch was necessary, is denoted by the Heb. word kirkaráh, which is found only in Isa. lxvi. 20; kirkároth (pl.), from a root meaning to "run swiftly," occurs here as a feminine plural, the female camel being generally supposed to be a swifter animal than the male; in this place the margin of the R. V. gives "dromedaries" as the alternative of the "swift beasts" of the text, and this is the true meaning.

ELEPHANT. There is no distinct mention of the elephant in the canonical books, but "ivory," one of the imports from India introduced into Judæa by Solomon, 1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21, is in the margin of the A. V. explained as "elephants' teeth." In the Heb. word shenhabbim, "teeth of elephants," the habbim has no derivation in Hebrew, and is no doubt a corruption of the Sanskrit name for elephant, ibha, preceded by the Semitic article.

FALLOW-DEER. R. V. "roebucks" (Heb. yakhmúr), occurs in the list of edible ruminants (Deut. xiv. 5), and as forming part of the daily provision for Solomon's table (1 Kings iv. 23). Although fallow-deer occur sparingly in Palestine it is pretty certain that some antelope is denoted by the Heb. word; yakhmúr is one of the Arabic names of the bubale, and is identified with it by Freytag. Moreover the LXX. and Vulg. support this meaning. The Greek boubalis is none other than the bovine antelope, Alcephalus bubalis, which is still to be found on the eastern borders of Gilead and Moab.

FERRET. R. V. "gecko" (Heb. anâqáh), occurs only as the name of some unclean creeping thing in Lev. xi. 30; elsewhere the Heb. word denotes "sighing" or "groaning" "of the needy," or "of the prisoner" [Ps. xii. 5 (6), lxxix. 11]. The anâqáh appears to be some kind of lizard which gives forth a sighing or groaning sound, and more than this it is impossible to say.

FOX. retained in R. V., but in m. explained as "jackal" (Heb. shu'ál). The jackal and not the fox is more definitely the animal designated, though probably the same word may have included both animals. The word, with one exception, Neh. iv. 3 (iii. 35), always occurs in the plural number, thus suiting the habits of jackals, which hunt in packs, while foxes do not. "They shall be a portion for shu'alim" (Ps. lxxiii. 10) must refer to the carrion-feeder jackal and not to any species of fox. Jackals are also spoken of under the name of tannim (see DRAGON); and of qiyim, i. e. "desert animals," which includes other wild desert creatures. Jackals were also called "howlers" (iqyim) from their nocturnal cries (Isa. xlii. 22, xxxiv. 14). In the N. T. the fox (alopéx) is definitely mentioned (Matt. vii. 20; Luke xiii. 32). Two species of fox are known in Palestine.

GOAT. There are several Hebrew names for the goat, expressing either sex or age; these animals were used in the sacrifices; their milk was, and still is, an important item of food, being used both fresh and curdled, and made into butter and cheese. Goats' hair was used as a woven material for the curtains of the tabernacle; their flesh, especially that of the kid, was highly prized, and it scarcely differs in flavour from that of the lamb. The skins of goats and of sheep were made into vessels for carrying water, milk, wine or other fluids.

GOAT, WILD. [Heb. yé'el, yé'elim (pl.)]. Wild-goats are mentioned three times in the O. T. as inhabiting high hills and rocks. The animal signified is most probably the Syrian ibex (Capra bedon), still found in the ravines of Moab and in the wilderness of Judæa near the Dead Sea.

GREYHOUND. R.V. m. "war-horse." The Hebrew expression, "one girt" or "well-knit in the loins," has been variously explained: it occurs only in Prov. xxx. 31, with the lion, the he-goat, and the king "when his army is with him" (see m. R.V.), things stately in their march. The war-horse is very probably the animal signified: the expression "girt in the loins" may refer to the ornamental girths of the war-horse, as depicted on ancient monuments.

HARE (Heb. arnebeth) is mentioned only in Lev. xi. 6 and Deut. xiv. 7 as an animal forbidden as food. As with the coney, so with the hare; both were erroneously considered by the Hebrews to be true ruminants. Three or four species of the Leporidae are found in Palestine.

HART and HIND (Heb. ayyál, ayyaláh). One or more species of the Deer family are signified by the Hebrew and Assyrian words; the hart is mentioned as fit for food (Deut. xii. 22, &c.); as panting for water (Ps. xlii. 1 (2)); as a bounding or leaping animal (Isa. xxxv. 6; Song ii. 8, 9, 17). The activity of the hind is referred to in Gen. xlix. 21; 2 Sam. xxii. 34; Ps. xviii. 33 (34), &c.; its habit of concealing its young in Job xxxix. 1. The fallow-deer occurs only sparingly in the N. of Palestine. Perhaps the deer with which the Hebrews were best acquainted is the Cervus dama, which was common in Biblical times, as is evidenced by the "valley of Ajalon" (Heb. ayyálon), "place of stags."

HORSE. The allusions to horses that occur in the Bible have all, or nearly all, of them reference to their use in war. They were not used at all by the early Hebrews. Solomon introduced numbers from Egypt into Palestine. The Canaanites, in the time of Joshua, made use of war-horses and chariots (Josh. xi. 9). In the hilly portions of Palestine the services of the war-horse and chariot were unsuited for military purposes; in plains and level country they were employed by the Canaanites, often successfully, against their enemies. The spirited war-horses of Assyria and the warriors in the battle-field are referred to by Nahum (iii. 2, 3); the Assyrian horses depicted on the monuments shew a fine breed of animal. Job (xxxix. 19-25) gives an admirable description of the war-horse. There is only one allusion to the horse being employed for agricultural purposes among the Jews, viz. for threshing out corn (Isa. xxviii. 28), as among the Romans.

HYENA. There is no direct mention of the hyena in our English Bible, and very little is to be gathered from the Hebrew. The presence of the hyena is, however, implied in the name of a valley and town in the tribe of Benjamin, "the valley of geb'ím," i.e. "of hyenas" (1 Sam. xiii. 18; Neh. xi. 34). The Hyena striata is common all over Palestine.

JACKAL. See DRAGON, FOX.

LEOPARD (Heb. námér). The Heb. name of the leopard means the "spotted" animal. It is often alluded to in the Bible, and was apparently common in Palestine formerly, as in certain localities places derived their names [Bethnimrah, Nimrah (Numb. xxxii. 36), and Nimrim (Isa. xv. 6; Jer. xlviii. 34)] from leopards. The cunning habit of this animal in concealing itself for plunder is alluded to in Jer. v. 6; Hos. xiii. 7; its spotted skin in Jer. xiii. 23; for its swiftness see Hab. i. 8. The leopard (Felis pardus) is still found in Palestine, though in small numbers.

LION. There are several Heb. names of the lion, denoting generally the animal's great strength, its roaring or fierceness. From the frequency with which it is mentioned in Scripture it must have been common in former times. It disappeared from Palestine about the time of the Crusades, when it existed near Samaria.

MOLE (Heb. khephór péroth). There is no true mole known to inhabit Palestine; the mole-rat (Spalax typhlus) however, which is very like a mole in external form, but larger, is common throughout the country, living among ruins and stone-heaps. It is mentioned only once in the Bible, viz. in Isa. ii. 20. As to the tinshemet rendered "mole" in Lev. xi. 30, A.V., see LIZARD.

MOUSE (Heb. 'akbár). The 'akbár was forbidden as food (Lev. xi. 29), and is called one of the abominations in Isa. lxvi. 17. Reference to the destructive properties of mice is made in 1 Sam. vi. 4, 5, 11, 18, "mice that mar the land." The mice that marred the land of the Philistines were probably species of the Arvicola, or short-tailed field-vole; the A. arvensis is common in the cultivated districts of Palestine.

MULE [Heb. pered, pardáh (fem.)]. Two other Hebrew words, viz. rekesh and yémim, are rendered "mule" or "mules" in the A.V. Rekesh has been explained as a swift breed of horse; the word yémim (Gen. xxxvi. 24) is correctly rendered "hot springs" in the R.V. Mules are frequently mentioned in the Bible; the first mention of them occurs in the history of Absalom, who rode on one when he met his death (2 Sam. xviii. 9). Armenia, famous for its excellent horses, exported mules and horses to Tyre (Ezek. xxvii. 14).

PYGARG, or bison (Heb. dishón), is mentioned only in Deut. xiv. 5, as one of the clean ruminants. The dishón may denote the addax (Antilope addax), a large white antelope, found in Nubia, Abyssinia, Egypt, and Arabia, but nothing definite can be affirmed of the Heb. word.

RAM (Heb. ayil). The ram, being a type of strength, was held in special honour in the sacrifices; the words rendered "trumpets of rams' horns" (Josh. vi. 4, A.V., R.V.) probably denote rather "horns of jubile" (see R.V. margin) or "horns of soundings." The anointing oil was probably carried in a ram's horn, which may have been also used for various other purposes. Rams' skins dyed red were used as a covering for the tabernacle (Ex. xxv. 5). The ram of Syria is the broad-tailed variety of the Ovis aries and has large recurved horns.

ROE, ROEBUCK. R.V. "gazelle" and

"roe." (Heb. sebi.) The Hebrew word in all cases signifies a gazelle. It is frequently mentioned in the Bible. The species especially designated is the Gazella dorcas, and is still very common throughout Palestine, S. of Lebanon.

SATYRS. R.V. m, "he-goats" (Heb. se'irim). The Hebrew se'ir, i.e. "rough" or "hairy," is frequently used to signify "a he-goat." In Isa. xiii. 21, xxxiv. 14, the word in the pl. number seems to denote not "he-goats" literally, but some kind of mythological creatures, goat-like in form, supposed to inhabit desolate places and to make night hideous, in company with lilith, the night-fairy, who was supposed to steal and devour children. In Lev. xvii. 7, the se'irim are translated "devils," A.V.; where the R.V. has "he-goats"; m, "or satyrs."

SHEEP. The most common breed of sheep now reared in Palestine is the broad-tailed variety, Ovis aries (laticaudata); in the north of the country a breed occurs which somewhat resembles the merino; but the other variety is the sheep of the country. The enormous fat tail—it is a mere mass of fat—is used for cooking purposes, for grease and for lamps. Immense numbers of sheep were reared in Palestine in Biblical times, and in some parts of the country this is still the case. The flocks were protected from wild beasts at night by men who watched them with their shepherd dogs. Shepherds still, as of old, go before the sheep, and the sheep follow, being apparently more or less attached to their masters, whose voice they instantly recognise.

SWINE are always spoken of in the O. and N. Testaments with horror and disgust (Isa. lvi. 3, 17; Prov. xi. 22; 2 Pet. ii. 22). The pig was regarded as the type of all unclean beasts. The Gergesenes kept large herds of swine in the time of Jesus (Matt. viii. 32); and the prodigal son of the parable was driven in his necessity to the degrading employment of a swine-herd (Luke xv. 15, 16).

UNICORN. "Rhinoceros" in m. of Isa. xxxiv. 7; R.V. "wild-ox," "ox-antelope" in m. of Numb. xxiii. 22 (Heb. re'em; Assy. rîmû). The animal denoted by the Heb. word is undoubtedly a wild ox, the Bos primigenius, now extinct, but once common in Syria and the adjacent countries. The unfortunate rendering of the A.V. arose from following the LXX. interpretation, monoceros; the Heb. name clearly speaks of a two-horned bovine; see Deut. xxxiii. 17, "his (Joseph's) horns are the horns of the re'em." The figures on the bas-reliefs of the Assyrian monuments evidently proclaim the animal intended, and the Scriptural allusions are equally suitable.

WEASEL (Heb. khôled) occurs only in Lev. xi. 29, as one of the unclean creeping things of the earth.

WHALE. It is doubtful whether the ancient Hebrews were ever acquainted with any species of large zoophagous cetacean. A few species of whale sometimes occur in the Mediterranean. The Heb. word tannin denotes generally any great animal of the depths of the sea, or a great serpent (see DRAGON), whether real, or mythological like the Apophis of the Egyptians. The translation of the A.V. in Lam. iv. 3, "even the sea-monsters (sea-calves, m) draw out the breast, they give suck to their young," is wrong; the Qeri reading is tannim, rightly rendered "jackals" in the R.V. In the margin of the R.V. of Matt. xii. 40, "sea-monster" is given as the translation of the Greek word, which, like the Hebrew tannin, stands for any sea-monster.

WOLF (Heb. ze'eb). The ferocity and the night-prowling habits of the wolf are several times mentioned in the O. and N. Testaments; see Gen. xlix. 27; Ezek. xxii. 27; Hab. i. 8; Jer. v. 6; Zeph. iii. 3; Matt. vii. 15, and elsewhere.

BIRDS.

BITTERN. R.V. "porcupine" (Heb. qip-pôd). The identification of the qip-pôd is uncertain; it is spoken of as one of the animals characteristic of desolate places and ruins (Isa. xiv. 23, xxxiv. 11; Zeph. ii. 13, 14). The old versions and most authorities are in favour of the porcupine or hedgehog.

COCK, HEN. The domestic fowl was unknown in Western Asia till the Persian conquests, and it is nowhere mentioned in the O.T. It is not seen on Egyptian monuments, otherwise so full of illustrations of ancient house-keeping. In the time of our Lord domestic fowls were common in Palestine, and He has made the maternal affection of the hen for her brood a type of His own love for Jerusalem and her people (Matt. xxiii. 37; Luke xiii. 34). The "fatted fowl" [barburim abasim, 1 Kings iv. 23 (v. 3)] of Solomon's table cannot mean poultry proper.

CORMORANT (Heb. shôlak). Etymologically the Heb. word points to some bird which "plunges" or "throws itself forcibly down" from a height into the water; and the cormorant is most probably the bird denoted. It is mentioned as one of the unclean birds in Lev. xi. 17; Deut. xiv. 17. In the A.V. "cormorant" is given in Isa. xxxiv. 11 and Zeph. ii. 14 as the translation of the Heb. qath, for which see PELICAN.

CRANE (Heb. qûr). This bird (Grus cinerea) is mentioned in Isa. xxxviii. 14 and in Jer. viii. 7; in the former passage Hezekiah compares his mourning to that of a crane or a swallow. Jeremiah (L.c.) alludes to the migratory habits of the bird. See under SWALLOW.

CUCKOO. R.V. "sea-mew" (Heb. shâ-khaph), mentioned only among the unclean birds (Lev. xi. 16; Deut. xiv. 15). Several kinds of gull (Laridae) are common on the coast of Palestine and on the Lake of Galilee.

DOVE, TURTLE-DOVE (Heb. tôr). The dove is first mentioned Gen. viii. 8, but there the Heb. word is yônâh (pigeon). A pair of turtle-doves (tôrîm) or two young pigeons (yônâh) were allowed as a substitute in some of the offerings for a lamb or kid in the case of poor persons (Lev. i. 14, v. 7; Luke ii. 24). In Song ii. 12 and Jer. viii. 7 the migratory habits of the turtle-dove are mentioned; as an emblem of affection and timidity see Ps. lxxiv. 19.

EAGLE. R.V. m. "vulture," "great vulture" (Heb. neshet). The griffon vulture, and not an eagle, is the bird specially denoted by the Hebrew name. All the Biblical allusions are better suited to this bird than to any of the Falconidae, while some of the allusions are suited to this vulture alone, as in Mic. i. 16, "Enlarge thy baldness as the neshet."

FOWL. Three Hebrew words are thus translated; oph, a general name for birds, from oph, "a wing," hence "winged creatures"; ait, "a bird of prey," from a root meaning to "rush upon," and cippor, "a small chirping bird," the Hebrew being evidently imitative. For Fatted fowl see COCK, HEN.

GIER-EAGLE (Heb. rakhām, rakhāmāh), mentioned only as one of the birds forbidden as food (Lev. xi. 18; Deut. xiv. 17). The English name is akin to the German geier, "a vulture." Geire was an old English word for a vulture; in Holland's Pliny (x. 6) there is a chapter on "Vultures or Geires."

GLEDE (Heb. dāah). The Heb. name as that of an unclean bird occurs next to that of the ayyah (Lev. xi. 14; Deut. xiv. 13), in Lev. it is rendered "vulture" by the A.V., and "kite" by the R.V. A similar word (day-yih) is found in Isa. xxxiv. 15, where the A.V. gives "vultures" and the R.V. "kites." Glede is an old English word, meaning "kite."

HAWK (Heb. nēç). The nēç after its kind was forbidden as food (Lev. xi. 16; Deut. xiv. 15). In Job xxxix. 28 it is asked, "Doth the nēç fly by thy wisdom?"

HERON. R.V. m. "ibis" (Heb. anāphāh). One of the unclean birds which, "after its kind," was forbidden as food. The anāphāh remains unidentified.

KITE. R.V. "falcon," in Job xxviii. 7 (Heb. ayyah). Another unclean bird (Lev. xi. 14; Deut. xiv. 13); the keen vision of the ayyah is referred to in Job (l. c.), where the A.V. has "vulture."

LAPWING. R.V. "hoopoe" (Heb. dāki-phath), is found only in the list of unclean birds. There is no doubt about the meaning of the Hebrew word.

NIGHT-HAWK. see R.V. m. (Heb. takhmās). Some bird forbidden as food, Lev. xi. 16; by "night-hawk" the A.V. probably meant the night-jar (Caprimulgus).

OSPREY (Heb. osriyyāh), only mentioned as an unclean bird (Lev. xi. 13). The Osprey or Fishing Hawk is the bird denoted, although the Heb. word may include other strong-winged raptorial birds, such as the short-toed Eagle (Circæus cinereus), common in Palestine.

OSSIFRAGE. R.V. "gier-eagle" (Heb. peres). The peres is mentioned only as an unclean bird (Lev. xi. 13); it is without doubt the Bearded-vulture (Gypætus barbatus), which, from its habit of breaking the marrow and other bones of the animals on which it preys, has in several languages received the name of the "bone-breaker," or "ossi-frage." The Hebrew peres is the "breaker" or "cleaver."

OSTRICH (Heb. bath hayya'anāh, f., i. e.

"daughter of howling," ye'énim pl. rendnim pl.). The above Hebrew words all denote the ostrich, although in the A.V. text the ostrich is mentioned only twice, viz. in Lam. iv. 3, and in Job xxxix. 13 where the A.V. is quite in error and the R.V. correct.

OWL. In the undermentioned passages of the A.V. text, ostrich should be read instead of owl. Lev. xi. 16; Deut. xiv. 15; Job xxx. 29; Isa. xlii. 21, xxxiv. 13, xliii. 20; Jer. i. 39; Mic. i. 8.

OWL, GREAT (Heb. yanshūph), is mentioned as an unclean bird in Lev. and Deut., and in Isa. xxxiv. 11 where the R.V. has "owl" in text and "bittern" in margin. There is great reason for identifying the yanshūph with the Great Eagle-owl (Bubo ascalaphus), the Eastern representative of our Great Eagle-owl (B. maximus). The Heb. gippōz (Isa. xxxiv. 15), rendered "great owl" by the A.V. and "arrowsnake" by the R.V., clearly points, as the context shews, to some bird, though the precise meaning of the word is unknown.

OWL, LITTLE (Heb. kōs), some kind of "owl" forbidden as food, and mentioned as an inhabitant of ruined places in Ps. cii. 6.

OWL, SCREECH. m. "night-monster," R.V. "night-monster" (Heb. lilith). The lilith is mentioned only in company with satyrs in Isaiah's (xxxiv. 14) denunciations against Edom. "Night-monster" is the correct rendering. The lilith was a female deity of popular mythology, the belief in whom, mixed with Persian elements, continued among the Jews of Mesopotamia as late as the seventh century A.D.

PARTRIDGE (Heb. qōrē). Mention of this bird occurs in 1 Sam. xxvi. 20, and in Jer. xvii. 11 (see R.V. m.). Decoy partridges are referred to in Eccles. xi. 30.

PEACOCKS (Heb. tuckiyyim) are mentioned only as one of the commodities imported from Ophir into Judæa by Solomon (1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21) in company with ivory and apes; the Heb. word is of Sanskrit origin, sikhin "having a crest." On Job xxxix. 13 see OSTRICH.

PELICAN (Heb. qāath); one of the unclean birds (Lev. xi. 18), mentioned also as a bird of the wilderness Ps. cii. 6 (7), to which the Psalmist compares himself; also as an emblem of desolate places Isa. xxxiv. 11; Zeph. ii. 14, where the text of the A.V. has incorrectly "cormorant," R.V. "pelican."

PIGEON (Heb. yōnāh) is very frequently mentioned in the Bible. The Heb. yōnāh is generally rendered "dove" by the A.V., but in all cases it must be distinguished from the tōr, "turtle." Pigeons were domesticated from the earliest times; the windows to which the doves are represented as flying (Isa. lx. 8) are the latticed openings of the dove-cotes.

QUAILS (Heb. selān) are mentioned only in connexion with the wanderings of the Israelites in the peninsula of Sinai. On two occasions enormous quantities of these birds appeared, and flying near the ground, "as it were two cubits high," and fatigued from a long flight, they were easily slaughtered by the people, see Exod. xvi. 13; Numb. xi. 31, 32; Ps. lxxviii. 27. Numbers were dried in the sun, "spread round about the camp" (Numb. xi. 32), as was the custom with the Egyptians (Herodotus i. 77).

RAVEN (Heb. 'ôreb) is first mentioned in the narrative of Noah's Deluge (Gen. viii. 7); it also figures in that of the Chaldean flood, where it is represented as feeding on the floating carcasses, and not returning to the ship.

SPARROW (Heb. sippôr). The Heb. word denotes any "chirping" bird; it is generally translated "bird," but in Ps. lxxxiv. 3 (4) and cii. 7 (8) the A.V. gives "sparrow." It is probable that some particular species is alluded to in the Psalms (ll. cc.), as the sippôr which "sits alone on the housetop," or which, like the swallow, builds its nest in the temple; but as the word is a general one for small passerine birds of which about 150 species are known, nothing definite can be proposed.

STORK (Heb. khasîdâh) is mentioned as an unclean bird in the lists of Lev. and Deut.; in Ps. civ. 17 the fir-trees are said to be her abode; her migratory habits are referred to in Jer. viii. 7; her affection for her young is implied in the Heb. name, the "kind" or "merciful" bird, and is contrasted in Job xxxix. 13 (R.V. m.) with the supposed cruelty of the ostrich.

SWALLOW (Heb. derôr and sûs or sîs). These names denote the swallow and the swift respectively: the former word occurs in Ps. lxxxiv. 3 (4) and in Prov. xxvi. 2. The Heb. derôr signifies a bird which wheels in its rapid flight. The other name sûs occurs in Jer. viii. 7 and in Isa. xxxviii. 14; here the swift is more especially meant, to whose shrill scream Hezekiah compares his mournings.

SWAN. R.V. "horned owl"; m. "swan" (Heb. tinshemeth). The swan, being purely vegetarian in its diet, was not likely to have been considered an unclean bird, and swans are rare in Palestine, being known only on their winter passage. The tinshemeth, as some bird, is only mentioned in the forbidden food lists. It has not been identified. For this Heb. word rendered "mole" (A.V.) in Lev. xi. 30 see LIZARD.

TURTLE-DOVE. See DOVE.

VULTURE. See EAGLE, GIER-EAGLE.

REPTILES AND AMPHIBIANS.

ADDER AND ASP. See SERPENT.

ARROWSNAKE, R.V. (Isa. xxxix. 15). See OWL, GREAT.

CHAMELEON (Heb. kôakh) is mentioned only in Lev. xi. 30 as an unclean animal. The Heb. name denotes "strength." The R.V. has "the land-crocodile." The chameleon seems to be meant by the Heb. word tinshemeth, "mole" (A.V. Lev. xi. 30). See LIZARD.

COCKATRICE, m. "adder"; R.V. "basilisk," "adder" (Heb. sepha, ciph'oni). There seems no reason to doubt that some actual venomous snake is intended in all the passages where the Heb. word occurs.

DRAGON. See LEVIATHAN and DRAGON (Mammalia).

FIERY SERPENTS. See SERPENT.

FROGS (Heb. cephardê'a) are mentioned only in connexion with the plagues of Egypt (Exod. viii.; Ps. lxxviii. 45, cv. 30). The common frog of Egypt is the edible species, Rana esculenta.

LEVIATHAN. R.V. "leviathan," m. "i.e. the crocodile" (Heb. lwyâthân). The word denotes any great sea or land monster generally, as the crocodile either as an actual creature, see Job iii. 8, R.V., xli. 1 (xl. 25), or as symbolic of a nation, as of Egypt (Ps. lxxiv. 14), or some large serpent, either as an emblem of a hostile power, as Egypt or Assyria, or as a mythic personification of darkness and light-obscuring clouds (Isa. xxvii. 1). In Ps. civ. 25 leviathan stands for any large sea-monster. For the Heb. word tannîn, also denoting a monster of the deep, or serpent, see DRAGON among the Mammalia.

LIZARD (Heb. letâkh). Mentioned only in Lev. xi. 30 as an unclean creeping thing; the old versions are in favour of the "gecko." The chameleon is probably represented by the Heb. word tinshemeth, "mole" in A.V. (Lev. xi. 30), and "chameleon" in R.V.

SERPENT. The following Heb. words denote different species of serpents, pethen, shephiphôn, eph'eh, akshûb, and sepha or ciph'oni: for the last name see COCKATRICE. The pethen is "the deaf adder" of Ps. lviii. 4, where there is allusion to snake-charming. The Egyptian cobra is most probably the pethen of the Scriptures. The shephiphôn (Gen. xlix. 17) is the horned snake (Cerastes hasselquistii) of Egypt and deserts of S. Judæa. Other Heb. names, variously rendered "Adder," "Viper," "Asp," are difficult to identify. The fiery flying serpents of Isa. xiv. 29, xxx. 6 may be analogous to the flying serpents of Arabian literature. The general name for a serpent in the Hebrew is nâkhâsh, from its "hissing."

TORTOISE, R.V. "great-lizard" (Heb. gâb), only in Lev. xi. 29, as an unclean thing. Land and water tortoises are common in Palestine.

FISHES.

There is no distinct mention of any fish in the Bible. Fishes were divided into two classes, (1) "those that have fins and scales," which were allowed as food, and (2) "those which have not fins and scales," which were to be considered an abomination. The Jews of O.T. times do not seem to have paid much attention to the fisheries, for Biblical allusions are few. The Tyrians brought fish to Jerusalem for sale (Neh. xiii. 16); Tyre and Sidon were Phœnician fishing ports. The fishery of the Lake of Galilee in the time of Christ was extensive and of commercial importance, and a fish market existed in Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxxiii. 14; Neh. iii. 3), the supply for which came chiefly from the Mediterranean coast.

INVERTEBRATE ANIMALS.

ANT (Heb. nemâlah) occurs only in Prov. vi. 6-8 and xxx. 25. The storing-up properties of ants in the summer for a winter's supply, though possibly implied in the Proverbs and clearly stated in classical authors, were unknown to naturalists till a few years ago, when Mr Moggridge proved that such was the case in four species of ants whose habits he had studied in the Riviera. In Palestine two common species are Atta structor and A. barbara.

BEE (Heb. debôrâh). Palestine abounds in bees, both wild and hived; the common species is the Apis fasciata, not unlike our hive-bee but smaller and lighter in colour.

BEEBLE. R.V. "locust" (Heb. khargôl), only in Lev. xi. 22 as an unclean insect, evidently, from the expression "having legs above their feet to leap withal," some saltatorial locust or grasshopper.

CANKERWORM (Heb. yeleg), sometimes rendered caterpillar by the A.V., occurs in Ps. cv. 34; Jer. li. 14, 27; Joel i. 4, ii. 25; Nah. iii. 15, 16. Some destructive locust either in the winged or larval state is probably intended. See LOCUST.

CORAL (Heb. nîmôth). A precious commodity (Job xxviii. 18) brought from the Red Sea by the Syrians to Tyre (Ezek. xxvii. 16). The coral of the Red Sea has long been famous; it is broken off from the rocks by long hooked poles and then drawn out. The Heb. peninyyim, A.V. "rubies," seems to denote some "branched" coral.

CRIMSON. See WORM.

FLEA (Heb. par'ôsh), so called in Heb. from its "leaping," occurs in 1 Sam. xxiv. 14 (15) and xxvi. 20.

FLIES (Heb. arôb and zebûb). The latter Heb. word is found only in Eccles. x. 1 and in Isa. vii. 18. Some blood-sucking insect, as the gnat or tsetse, injurious and sometimes fatal to man and beast, is here intended. In Eccles. x. 1 zebûb is used generally for any fly. The arôb is well rendered "swarms of flies" in the account of the Egyptian plague (Exod. viii. and Ps. lxxviii. 45, cv. 31).

GNAT (Greek cônops) occurs only in Matt. xxiii. 24.

GRASSHOPPER (Heb. khâgâb), Lev. xi. 22, allowed as food; Numb. xiii. 33; Eccles. xii. 5; Isa. xl. 22. Some small species of either locust or grasshopper, very common in Palestine, is intended.

HORNET (Heb. qir'âh) is mentioned in Exod. xxiii. 28; Deut. vii. 20; Josh. xxiv. 12. There are several kinds of hornets in Palestine, but unless provoked they are not generally disposed to attack.

HORSE-LEECH. R.V. "vampire" (Heb. alûkâh), occurs only in Prov. xxx. 15, "the alûkâh hath two daughters crying, Give, give." The Heb. word denotes a "sucker," and is now generally understood by scholars to refer to a vampire-like monster, like the ghoul of the Arabian Nights, supposed to drain men of their life-blood.

LICE. R.V. "sand flies or fleas" (Heb. kinnim, kinnûm), only spoken of in reference to the third Egyptian plague. Some think that gnats or mosquitos are intended; but the evidence zoologically is rather in favour of lice or ticks which spring from the dust, see Exod. viii. 16; gnats or mosquitos are produced from the water.

LOCUSTS. There are nine or ten words in the Heb. Bible which appear to denote either different species of locusts or stages in their existence;—these names are variously rendered by the A.V. as "locust," "bald-locust," "caterpillar," "grasshopper," and "palmer-worm"; "the bald locust" (sof'dâm) probably denotes some species of Truxalis, which genus has a long smooth head and projecting antennæ. The general name for a locust is arbeh, i.e. "that which multiplies." The Acridium peregrinum and Edipoda migratoria are the species which still ravage the East in their migrations; they come with an east wind into Egypt (Exod. x. 13), and into Syria usually with a south or south-east wind.

MOTH (Heb. âsh). There is no mention of any butterfly or moth in Scripture with the single exception of the clothes-moths (Tineidæ), whose destructive habits were well known. See Isa. i. 9; Job xiii. 28; Matt. vi. 19, &c.

ONYCHA (Heb. shekhêleth), one of the ingredients of the sacred perfume (Exod. xxx. 34); the A.V. name is from the Greek onyx, i.e. the nail or claw-shaped operculum of the Strombidæ; it is the Unguis odoratus, or Blatta byzantina of old English writers. Its pleasant smell (when burnt) is referred to in Eccles. xxiv. 15.

PALMER-WORM (Heb. gâzâm), probably the larval stage of a locust (Joel i. 4, ii. 25; Amos iv. 9), destructive to fig and olive trees; the Heb. word means the "cutting off" or "devouring" insect. See LOCUST.

PEARL. R.V. "crystal" (Heb. gâbîsh). There is no mention of pearls in the O.T.; the Heb. word is rightly rendered by crystal in the R.V. of Job xxviii. 18. The word gâbîsh occurs with abnê ("stones") in Ezek. xiii. 11, xxxviii. 22, i.e. "stones of ice," "hail-stones," to which rock crystal may well be likened. Pearls are frequently mentioned in the N.T., the most valuable being procured from the Avicula margaritifera of the Indian Ocean and Persian Gulf.

PURPLE (Heb. argâmân). The celebrated Tyrian dye was obtained from two or three species of molluscous animals, Murex and Purpura; thick layers of crushed shells of M. trunculus and M. brandaria still testify to the importance of this now extinct ancient industry. Another mollusc, producing a blue cerulean purple dye, is indicated by the Heb. word tekeleth, frequently mentioned in the O.T.; this has been referred to the Helix ianthina, which exudes a copious violet fluid, but the question of identification remains undecided.

SCORPION (Heb. agrâb) is mentioned as one of the dangers of the wilderness of Sinai (Deut. viii. 15); Ezekiel (ii. 6) compares the rebellious Israelites to scorpions; the pain inflicted by their sting is alluded to in Rev. ix. 5.

SNAIL (Heb. shabîlûl) is mentioned only in Ps. lviii. 8; the Heb. word denotes rather a slug than a snail. The Heb. khômet, Lev. xi.

30, rendered "snail" by the A.V., is some kind of lizard, and is so rendered by the R.V.

SPIDER (Heb. 'akkābīsh) occurs in Job viii. 14 and in Isa. lix. 5 in reference to the frail texture of its house or web. There are a great number of species of spiders in Palestine, one of which is a mason or trap-door spider (Mygale cementaria). The Heb. word semmīth [A.V. "spider" which "taketh hold with her hands and is in kings' palaces" (Prov. xxx. 28)] is some kind of lizard, so R.V.

WORM. Three Heb. words are thus translated, sās, rimmāh and tōlē'ah; the first appears to be the larva of the clothes-moth, tinea (Isa. li. 8); the manna kept on the morning of a week-day "bred worms (tōlā'im) and stank." The tōlā' or tōlā'ath, fem., was destructive to vineyards (Deut. xxviii. 39). Joined with shānī, it means the "worm of coccus," from which the crimson dye is prepared. It is common on the Syrian holm-oak (Isa. i. 18; Exod. xxv. 4; Lev. xiv. 4). Rimmāh is a collective noun, and denotes worms which accompany "putrefaction" (Job vii. 6, xvii. 14, xxiv. 20; Exod. xvi. 24). There is no mention of worms in the Hebrew text of Job xix. 26; see R.V. "Worm" as a symbol of anything vile occurs in Ps. xxii. 6; Isa. xli. 14; to express the stings of conscience in Hades, Mark ix. 44, &c. The "worms of the earth" in A.V. Mic. vii. 17, compared with Deut. xxxii. 24, shew that the "crawling things of the dust" (Heb.) signify serpents.

PLANTS.

ALMOND, ALMOND-TREE (Heb. shāqēd, lūs). The former word denotes both the fruit and the tree (Gen. xliii. 11; Jer. i. 11; Eccles. xii. 5), and perhaps the blossoms or buds (Exod. xxv. 33); the latter word, rendered "hazel" A.V. Gen. xxx. 37, is identical with the Arabic and is also "the almond-tree" (R.V.). Shāqēd means the tree that "hastened" to bloom, the flowers appearing in early spring, hence the play on the word in Jer. l.c.

ALMUG, ALMUG-TREE. R.V. m. "sandal wood" (Heb. almugmīm, almuggīm). The wood of this tree was imported from Ophir by Solomon with gold and precious stones, for the house and temple at Jerusalem, and for musical instruments (1 Kings x. 11, 12; 2 Chron. ii. 8, ix. 10, 11). The red sandal wood of India (Pterocarpus santalinus), of which musical instruments are still made, is very probably the wood intended.

ALOES, LIGN-ALOES (Heb. ahālīm, ahālōth). Some aromatic and highly-prized wood is indicated, see Ps. xlv. 8; Prov. vii. 17; Song iv. 14. In Numb. xxiv. 6 Balaam compares the condition of the Israelites to the lign-aloes which Jehovah has planted. A mixture of myrrh and aloes was used for embalming (John xix. 39).

ANISE (Gr. anēthon), only in Matt. xxiii. 23; the Anethum graveolens, or "dill," cultivated for its seeds as a carminative and for seasoning dishes, like the caraway.

APPLE (Heb. tappriakh). Palestine is quite unfavourable to the growth of apples. The tappriakh is spoken of as a tree affording shade, as bearing fruit sweet to the taste, with fragrant and restorative properties (Song ii. 3, 5; vii. 8 (9)). The apricot may be the tree intended; it is common in Palestine and yields abundant fruit. The Heb. word denotes that which "breathes forth or emits" perfume. The apricot, however, is not truly indigenous; its birthplace is Armenia, from which country it may have been introduced into Palestine in early times.

ASH, R.V. "fir-tree" (Heb. ōren), occurs only in Isa. xli. 14 as a tree out of which idols were made. The ash is not a native of Palestine; "pine" or "fir-tree" has the best claim to denote the ōren.

BALM, R.V. m. in Gen. xxxvii. 25 "mastic" (Heb. qorī), probably the gum of the Pistacia lentiscus or mastic, common in Palestine, and of the Balanites aegyptiaca, used for healing wounds, &c.; see Gen. xliii. 11; Jer. vii. 22, xli. 11, li. 8. The true balm of Gilead is yielded by the Balsamodendron gileadense.

BARLEY (Heb. se'orīch). Barley, with other cereals, has been cultivated from the earliest times. The ordinary variety, now cultivated in Palestine, is the two-rowed (Hordeum distichum); the H. hexastichum also is grown in the plains of Moab. Barley is usually sown from the beginning of November till the beginning of December, according as the rains have fallen to prepare the soil; barley harvest is generally about three weeks earlier than the wheat harvest.

BAY-TREE. R.V. "a green tree in its native soil" (Heb. ezrākh). There is no authority whatever for the textual reading of "bay-tree" (A.V.) in Ps. xxxvii. 35.

BDELLIUM (Heb. bedōlakh). There seems to be no doubt that bdellium is some resinous exudation, held in high esteem by the Orientals, yielded by some tree (Balsamodendron or Ammyris). The only Scriptural allusions to bdellium are in Gen. ii. 12, as a product of the land of Havilah, and in Numb. xi. 7, where the appearance (Heb. "eye") of it is said to be as that of manna. Pliny and Dioscorides under the names of bdellion, madelon, botchus speak of a gum of a tree, found in Arabia, India, Media and Babylon, which is pellucid, and like wax, and of great value. The LXX. and some writers think that bdellium is the name of a precious stone.

BEANS (Heb. pōl) are mentioned in 2 Sam. xvii. 28 and Ezek. iv. 9. This valuable leguminous seed is much cultivated in Palestine, Egypt and the East.

BITTER-HERBS (Heb. merōrīm). The Israelites were commanded to eat the Paschal lamb with unleavened bread and with bitter herbs (Exod. xii. 8).

BOX-TREE. R.V. m. "cypress" (Heb. teashshūr and ashūr), mentioned in A.V. only in Isa. xli. 19 and lx. 13. Ezek. xxvii. 6 is in favour of the box tree as the teashshūr or ashūr; the isles of Kittim refer to the islands or maritime districts of the Mediteranean, to the inhabitants of which the art of veneering wood, box especially, with ivory, was well known.

BRAMBLE, BRIERS. See THORNS and THISTLES.

BULRUSH. R.V. m. "papyrus" in Exod. ii. 3 and text in Isa. xviii. 2 (Heb. gômeh). The Hebrew word without doubt means the papyrus; Moses was hid in a vessel made of papyrus (Exod. i. c.); it grew in marshy and muddy soil (Job viii. 11); the Ethiopians used boats made of papyrus (Isa. xviii. 2). The use of papyrus as a writing material dates from very early ages. The papyrus (Cyperus papyrus) still grows abundantly in Lake Huleh and near Gennesaret. For the Heb. word agmôn, "rush" A.V., see REED.

BUSH. See SHITTAN-TREE.

CALAMUS, SWEET (Heb. qâneh and qenêh bôsem). Some aromatic cane or grass, highly valued, and imported from a "far country" (Jer. vi. 30) into Judæa, and used as one of the ingredients of the anointing oil, Exod. xxx. 23; see also Song iv. 14; Isa. xliii. 24; Ezek. xxvii. 19.

CAMPHIRE. R.V. "henna-flowers" (Heb. kôpher). The R.V. is correct; the kôpher is the henna plant (Lawsonia alba or inermis), prized for its fragrant flowers, and as a cosmetic dye, obtained from the bruised leaves, for colouring the finger and toe nails, and other parts of the body, familiar to all travellers in Egypt and Palestine. In the Song (i. 14) the henna flowers are spoken of in connexion with the vineyards of Engedi, the only spot in Palestine where the plant is still found.

CANE. See CALAMUS.

CAPER-BERRY. R.V. "desire," A.V. (Heb. abiybênâh). The Heb. word occurs only in Eccles. xii. 5. There is no doubt that the caper-berry is denoted. The seeds were supposed by the ancients to promote appetite and increase virility. The expression "the caper-berry shall burst" (R.V. m., l.c.) refers to the bursting of the ripe seed-pods, and is thus an emblem of the dissolution of an old man as he "goeth to his long home"; or we may translate "the caper-berry shall fail" (Heb. "make itself of no avail"), i.e. shall no longer, in old age, act as a stimulant.

CASSIA. R.V. m. "costus" (Heb. qiddâh). In Exod. xxx. 24 one of the ingredients in the anointing oil, and in Ezek. xxvii. 19 an article of merchandise imported into Tyre by Greek merchants (Javan) from Uzal (see m. R.V. in Ezek. l.c.), the old name of Senaa, the capital of Yemen in Arabia. There is another Heb. word (qec'ôth) rendered "cassia" in A.V., which occurs only in Ps. xlv. 8 (9), "all thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes and cassia." Both these Heb. names denote foreign aromatic plant-products: the former is a cinnamon; the latter may be Indian orris, or costus. As the names are apparently identical and the qec'ôth is mentioned with aloes, an Indian product, in Ps. l.c., this identification is very probable.

CEDAR (Heb. erez). Nearly all the numerous Bible references to cedar relate to the Cedar of Lebanon still existing in Lebanon, but in no part of Palestine proper; it is strictly a native of Asia Minor, abundant on the Taurus range, and growing also in Algeria. The cedar wood used in purification (Lev. xiv. 4) was probably the fragrant timber of a juniper which grows in the Sinaitic peninsula. The "masts" of the Tyrians (Ezek. xxvii. 5) were probably made of some pine wood, and not of cedar, which is unsuited for such a purpose. The value of the cedar timber for building purposes has been sometimes disputed, but without good reason. Portions of cedar beams from the palace at Nineveh, now in the British Museum, have been pronounced to be genuine Lebanon cedar, still, considering their great age, in a remarkably perfect condition.

CHESNUT-TREE. R.V. "plane tree" (Heb. 'armôn), mentioned in Gen. xxx. 37 in connexion with Jacob's stratagem with the peeled rods, and in Ezek. xxxi. 8 in comparison with the glories of Assyria. The 'armôn is almost certainly the oriental plane (Platanus orientalis), which grows to a very large size by the sides of streams and in plains in some parts of Palestine.

CINNAMON (Heb. qinnâmôn) is mentioned as one of the ingredients of the anointing oil (Exod. xxx. 23); as a perfume for the bed (Prov. vii. 17), and in Song iv. 14 as a symbol of the sweetness of the Shulammitte.

COCKLE, m. "noisome weeds" (Heb. bo-shûh), occurs only in Job xxxi. 40; and in Isa. v. 2, A.V. "wild grapes." The Heb. word denotes specially "that which stinks," or generally "that which is evil" (Prov. xiii. 5), the idea of smelling badly being used for an evil disposition.

CORIANDER (Heb. gad) is mentioned only in connexion with its similarity to manna (Exod. xvi. 31; Numb. xi. 7) in its outward form. The gad is the Coriandrum sativum, whose fruit is a well-known aromatic carminative.

CORN. See BARLEY, WHEAT.

COTTON (Heb. karpas). This substance is not mentioned in the A.V. of Esth. i. 6, the only place where the Heb. word is found; but the R.V. m. explains it as "cotton"; the A.V. translates "hangings of green."

CUCUMBERS (Heb. qishshûim), mentioned (Numb. xi. 5) in connexion with the melons and other cooling fruits which the Israelites remembered to have eaten when in Egypt. Two kinds of cucumber, Cucumis sativus, the common species, and C. chude, are grown in Palestine.

CUMMIN (Heb. kammôn), the well-known umbelliferous plant Cuminum sativum Linn., which is carefully cultivated in Palestine, and used as a condiment and a medicinal stimulant (Isa. xxviii. 27). Cummin was one of the small garden herbs thithed by the Pharisees (Matt. xxiii. 23).

CYPRESS. R.V. "holm-tree" (Heb. tir-zâh); mentioned (Isa. xlv. 14) as one of the trees out of which idols were made. The Juniperus excelsa common on the Lebanon has been suggested for the tir-zâh.

EBONY (Heb. hobnim) is mentioned only in Ezek. xxvii. 15 as a valuable commodity imported into Tyre with ivory by the men of Dedan: the Heb. name (in the plural) seems to express the billets into which ebony was cut previous to exportation, and signifies "wood as hard as stone." Ebony wood is the heart-wood of trees growing in India and Africa.

ELM. R.V. "terebinth" (Heb. elāh). The terebinth (Pistacia terebinthus) is, there is no doubt, the tree denoted. See OAK and TEIL-TREE.

FIG, FIG-TREE (Heb. tefnāh). The fruit and tree (Ficus carica) are everywhere common in Palestine, both wild and cultivated; figs form an important article of daily food for the people; the tree is one of the earliest to shew its fruit-buds, which appear before the leaves.

FIR, R.V. m. "cypress" (Heb. berōsh, berōthim), is spoken of (often in connexion with Lebanon) as a tree of fine growth (2 Kings xix. 23; Isa. xxxvii. 24), as supplying timber for building purposes (1 Kings vi. 15, 34; 2 Chron. iii. 5), as wood out of which musical instruments were made (2 Sam. vi. 5). The A.V. "fir" is preferable to the R.V. m. "cypress," the general Biblical allusions suit a fir better, and definitely the expression in Ps. cii. 17, "as for the stork the berōshim are her house," is against the close-growing erect branches of the "cypress."

FITCHES. R.V. m. "black cummin," M-gella sativa (Heb. qecakh), mentioned only in Isa. xxviii. 25, 27 as a field product which was "beaten out with a staff" in order to thresh out the seed, which was and is still used as a condiment sprinkled over the cakes of the country. For Heb. kussemeth "fitches" A.V. in Ezek. iv. 9 see RYE. (See p. 299.)

FLAG. R.V. "reed-grass" (Heb. ākūh). The cattle "came up out of the river and fed in the ākūh," "meadow," A.V. Gen. xli. 2, 18. It is mentioned with the papyrus reed in Job viii. 11, "Can (the) ākūh grow without water?" see also Isa. xix. 6. The "reed-grass" of the R.V. is an excellent translation. The Heb. siḥp (flag) in Exod. ii. 3, 5, Isa. xix. 6, and Jonah ii. 5 (6), is probably also of Egyptian origin.

FLAX, LINEN TOW (Heb. pishtāh, pishteh). The plant (Linum sativum) and the materials into which it was made are frequently mentioned. In Egypt it was almost the only textile fabric for clothing in early times.

FRANKINCENSE, INCENSE (Heb. lebōnāh) is the fragrant resinous exudation of various species of Boswellia growing along the coast of Hadramaut. It was imported into Judaea in early times from Arabia, see Isa. lx. 6; Jer. vi. 20; was an ingredient in the holy incense for sacrificial purposes (Exod. xxx. 34), and highly valued as a perfume.

GALBANUM (Heb. khebnāh), one of the ingredients of the sacred incense (Exod. xxx. 34), is the product of at least two umbelliferous plants; the gum-resin of Exod. l. c. is probably that of the Galbanum officinale, a native of Persia.

GARLICK (Heb. shām) only in Numb. xi. 5, as one of the good things remembered by the Israelites when in Egypt. The Allium sati- vum was and is much cultivated both by Egyptians and Jews.

GOPHER-WOOD, Gen. vi. 14, the wood of which Noah's ark was made. The Heb. gopher denotes a tree which yields a "resinous" or "pitchy" substance, from kāphar = gāphar, to "cover," "smear over," whence Heb. kōpher, gopherith, "pitch, bitumen." Some resin-yielding conifer is doubtless intended, and there is every reason to believe that the tree which furnished the material for Noah's ark was the cypress (Cupressus sempervirens).

GOURD. R.V. m. "Palma Christi" (Heb. qiqayōn), occurs only in the account of Jonah's plant (Jonah iv. 6, 7, 9, 10). There is very strong evidence that the castor-oil plant (Ricinus communis) is the plant denoted. The Hebrew word is related to the Egyptian kiki or kaka, "an oil-producing plant," kik-oil being castor-oil. The plant is of quick growth, and in sub-tropical climates attains the height of twelve or fourteen feet; it has been observed to be subject to sudden destruction by caterpillars, and its broad palmate leaves would afford ample protection from the sun's rays. It is not stated that the qiqayōn grew over the booth like a climbing-plant.

GOURD, WILD (Heb. paqqēbōh). The plant which caused one of Elisha's companions to cry out "there is death in the pot" (2 Kings iv. 38-40) was doubtless the colocynth (Citrullus colocynthis), which has vine-shaped leaves and tendrils, hence called a "wild vine."

GRASS. The ordinary Heb. word for grass is khācīr, which denotes grass grown up or ripe for mowing; it is distinguished from deshe which is the young green tender grass, Deut. xxxii. 2; 2 Sam. xxiii. 4; the fresh greenness is mentioned in Ps. xxxvii. 2. In Isa. xv. 6 khācīr is translated "hay" by the A.V.; correctly "grass" by the R.V.; in this passage both the khācīr and the deshe are spoken of as withering away. In Prov. xxvii. 25, where the A.V. has "the hay appeareth," the R.V. m. has correctly "the grass (khācīr) is carried" ["and the tender grass (deshe) sheweth itself"]. The latter word refers to the aftermath. The khācīr was cut for the cattle either green or when the culms were more or less withered, compare Ps. xxxvii. 2, lxxii. 6 where there is allusion to mown grass. Aftermath is referred to in Amos vii. 1, "the latter growth after the king's mowings." The dried herbage of Palestine as seen in the summer months is expressed by the Heb. word khashash, A.V. "chaff"; in Isa. v. 24 "the flame consumeth the chaff," A.V., appears in the R.V. better as "the dry grass (khashash) sinketh down in the flame." The unprofitable nature of the khashash is shewn in Isa. xxxiii. 11, "ye shall conceive khashash, ye shall bring forth qash, i.e. chaff or light straw," i.e. if ye meditate plans as worthless as the dried grass, they shall result in nothing more lasting than the chaff. The Heb. word ēseb or asab also signifies grass or green herbage; in Gen. i. 11 it denotes herbs for human food, but it is not thus generally distinguished.

GROVE. R.V. "tamarisk-tree" (Heb. ēshel).

A tree is clearly denoted in the passages where the word occurs, Gen. xxi. 33; 1 Sam. xxii. 6, xxxi. 13. The tamarisks of the lower Jordan often grow in dense clusters, forming with their long feather-like branches graceful objects.

HAY. See GRASS.

HAZEL. R.V. "almond tree" (Heb. láz), only in Gen. xxx. 37. Hazel trees occur in Galilee and the Lebanon districts.

HEATH, Jer. xlviii. 6, m. "a naked tree"; xvii. 6, R.V. m. "a tamarisk" (Heb. 'ar'ér, 'ar'ár). The tree denoted is the savin (Juniperus sabina), or dwarf juniper, which grows in desert and rocky places. In Jer. xvii. 6 this tree is an emblem of the man "whose heart departeth from the Lord."

HEMLOCK (Heb. rósh). The Heb. word in Hos. x. 4, Amos vi. 12 denotes some bitter (poisonous) herb, growing in the furrows of the fields.

HUSKS. R.V. m. "the pods of the carob tree," only in Luke xv. 16; the husks are the pods of Ceratonia siliqua, or the locust-tree, common in Palestine; they are sweet to the taste; steeped in water they afford a pleasant drink, but are chiefly used for feeding cattle and horses. Locust beans are imported into England for feeding cattle. The pods are sometimes called "St John's bread," from the (erroneous) notion that they are the locusts on which the Baptist fed.

HYSSOP (Heb. ézbh) is first mentioned in Exod. xii. 22 when the Israelites were in Egypt; it was used for sprinkling purposes in the purification of lepers and leprous houses (Lev. xiv. 4, 51), and in the sacrifice of the red heifer (Numb. xix. 6); see also Ps. li. 7 (9), and 1 Kings iv. 33, where the plant is said to grow upon or near walls. According to the tradition of centuries, the ézbh is some kind of Origanum, or wild marjoram. The necessary requirements of the passages where the ézbh is mentioned are (1) that it grew in Egypt and the Sinaitic peninsula, (2) that it afforded suitable branches to form a "bunch" or "bundle" for sprinkling purposes. Putting the accounts of the Evangelists together, it seems clear that a bunch of hyssop was fastened underneath the sponge, and both tied to a reed; the vinegar or sour wine for the purpose of alleviating thirst, and the hyssop, on account of its aromatic odour, for restorative purposes.

JUNIPER, R.V. m. "broom" (Heb. róthem), is a large kind of broom (Retama retam) which grows abundantly in some districts of Palestine, in the Sinaitic peninsula and other countries. It grows to the height of about twelve feet, is able to afford shade (1 Kings xix. 4, 5), while its roots are at present and in ancient times used as charcoal (Ps. cxx. 4). Job (xxx. 4) refers to the outcasts of Edom cutting (bitter) róthem roots for food. It is a plant of the deserts, and produces an abundant blossom of a delicate white or pinkish-white colour, which is certainly very beautiful.

LEEKs (Heb. kháqir). The Heb. word generally denotes that which is "green," "grass," "herbs," &c.: in Numb. xi. 5 it signifies leeks, and is mentioned with onions and garlick, &c., which the Israelites ate in Egypt. The Allium porrum has long been and still is a favourite article of diet in the East.

LENTILs (Heb. 'adashim) are the seeds of different kinds of vetch; the 'adashim refer to the Ervum lens, long used for food and still cultivated in Palestine. Esau's red potage consisted of lentils.

LILY (Heb. shóshannah, shóshan). The Heb. word appears to stand for various kinds of bright-coloured flowers, whether ranunculus, tulip, anemone, &c., although originally the colour of the plant seems to have been white, as its Heb. name indicates.

LOTUS-TREES, R.V. (Heb. ceelim). This is the reading of the R.V. in Job xl. 21, 22, where of Behemoth, the hippopotamus, it is said "he lieth under the shady trees."

MALLOWS, R.V. "salt-wort" (Heb. mal-liakh), occurs only in Job xxx. 4. The Heb. name points to some plant of salt taste, or growing in salt marshes. The sea-purslane (Atriplex halimus) is probably intended; it grows abundantly on the shores of the Mediterranean and near the Dead Sea, where it attains the height of ten feet. The leaves are sour, but they would be readily eaten by people in need.

MANDRAKES, R.V. m. "love-apples" (Heb. dúddim), unquestionably the fruit of the Mandragora officinalis, concerning which many strange superstitions have been held. The Heb. name denotes "love-fruit"; it is mentioned in Gen. xxx. 14-16 and Song vii. 13. The peculiar odour was grateful to the Oriental, and the taste is said to be sweet and pleasant. The mandrake is common in Palestine, and the belief in its virtues as assuring conception, as old as the days of Rachel, is still held by the natives.

MANNA (Heb. mán). It is impossible to name any natural product that will answer to the requirements of the Scriptural narrative in regard to this heaven-sent food. There is some uncertainty as to the rendering of the passage in Exod. xvi. 15. The people, seeing the small scale-like substance, as small as hoar-frost, said one to another, mán hú, "for they knew not what it was." The R.V. translates mán hú "What is it?" with the m. reading "It is manna."

MASTICK-TREE, m. lentisk (Gr. schinos), occurring only in the Apocrypha (Susan. 54), is a shrub or small evergreen tree, the Pistacia lentiscus, common in the Mediterranean countries, and also indigenous in Palestine.

MELONS (Heb. abattikhim) are mentioned only in Numb. xi. 5 as one of the good things which the Israelites ate in Egypt. Both the water-melon (Citrullus vulgaris) and the flesh-melon (Cucumis melo) are denoted by the Heb. name, but the former, which attains an enormous size, more extensively than the flesh-melon.

MILLET (Heb. dókhán) occurs only in Ezek. iv. 9 as an ingredient in bread. The seed is yielded by at least two species of millet cultivated in the East, Panicum miliaceum, and Sorghum vulgare; the meal is made into cakes, and the stems of the former are used as fodder for cattle and horses.

MINT (Gr. hedyosmon). Various species of Mentha are found in Palestine, both wild and cultivated; the M. sylvestris is the common wild mint of the country, and it grows to a large size (Matt. xxiii. 23; Luke xi. 42).

MULBERRY, R.V. m. "balsam-trees" (Heb. bekûm). The bekûm trees grow in the valley or lofty plain of Rephaim (2 Sam. v. 23, 24; 1 Chron. xiv. 14). It is not possible to say what tree is intended. For the mulberry trees of Palestine see SYCAMINE.

MUSTARD (Gr. sinapi). The mustard plant of the N.T. is the common mustard (Sinapis nigra), which in Palestine will grow to the height of ten feet or more. The birds, which in the parable (Matt. xiii. 31; Mark iv. 31; Luke xiii. 19) are said to come and lodge on the branches, are the small insectorial birds which would frequent the plant for the sake of the mustard seeds.

MYRRH (Heb. môr) was used in the preparation of the holy ointment (Exod. xxx. 23), in the purification of women (Esth. ii. 12), as a perfume (Ps. xlv. 8 (9); Prov. vii. 17; Song i. iii., iv., v.), and for embalming (John xix. 39); it is the aromatic exudation (hence the Heb. môr, "dropping," "distilling") of Balsamodendron myrrha and other allied species of thorny shrubs of the dry districts of Arabia and East Africa. The Heb. word lôl, rendered "myrrh" in Gen. xxxvii. 25, xliii. 11, is the gum of the Cistus or rock-rose, of which several species occur in Palestine.

MYRTLE (Heb. hadas). The common myrtle (Myrtus communis) is spoken of in Isa. xli. 19, lv. 13; Zech. i. 8, 10, 11; Neh. viii. 15; it is still found through central Palestine, on the slopes of Carmel and in other places; it has always been a favourite tree.

NETTLES (Heb. qimôsh, qimôsh). Nettles grow to a large size in Palestine, the common Urtica pilulifera to that of five or six feet; its sting is very severe; it often grows among old ruins (Isa. xxxiv. 13; Hos. ix. 6); another form of the same Heb. word occurs in Prov. xxiv. 31 (A.V. and R.V. "thorns"), where the slothful man's field is said to be all "grown over with qimêshônim." "Nettles" are most probably intended by this Heb. word, which, however, may be also used generally for stinging or prickly weeds. Another Heb. word (khârûl) is also rendered "nettles" in A.V.; in R.V. m. "wild vetches," Job xxx. 7; Prov. xxiv. 31; Zeph. ii. 9. The Heb. word denotes "that which burns"; from Job i.c. the plant must have been of some size, "under the khârûl they were gathered together." Perhaps it is the prickly acanthus (Acanthus spinosus), which, as a troublesome weed growing to the height of six feet, chokes the corn, and the sting of which is most irritating.

NUTS (Heb. botnim and egôs). By the former word the fruit of the Pistachio-tree (Pistacia vera) is intended; by the latter that of the walnut-tree (Juglans regia). The pistachio-tree is not common now in Palestine; it is a native of Syria, Persia and Afghanistan. The egôs (walnut-tree) is mentioned only in Song vi. 11.

OAK. Six Hebrew words are thus rendered, all of which are from a root denoting "strength"; one of these, lâh, is the terebinth, see TEIL-TREE. Three kinds of oak are now found in Palestine. Frequent mention is made of oaks in Scripture, and in several passages the Heb. word for "oak" is wrongly rendered "plain" in the A.V., correctly rendered in the R.V. The celebrated "Abraham's Oak" near Hebron is 23 feet in girth, and the noblest tree in Southern Palestine.

OIL-TREE. R.V. "wild olive," "olive wood," "oil-tree," m. "oleaster" (Heb. êq shemen). The Hebrew words are in 1 Kings vi. 23 rendered "olive-tree," in Neh. viii. 15 "pine," and in Isa. xli. 19 "oil-tree." The oleaster (Elaeagnus angustifolius) is by some writers supposed to be the tree denoted; it seems, however, improbable that so characteristic a property as is implied in the name "tree of oil" should be used for the oleaster, whose yield of oil is small and inferior. The most probable interpretation is that the Heb. êq shemen is used generally for any oily tree.

OLIVE-TREE (Heb. zâith), of frequent mention in the Scriptures, is the well-known Olea europæa, a native of Asia. It is abundant all through Palestine and is extensively cultivated for its valuable oil. The olive requires to be grafted; hence St Paul's allusion to the Gentiles, "the wild olive," being grafted, "contrary to nature," upon the "good olive" (Rom. xi. 24).

ONIONS (Heb. becâlim) occurs only in Numb. xi. 5, as one of the good things of Egypt of which the Israelites regretted the loss in the Sinaitic desert.

PALM-TREE (Heb. tâmâr). The date-palm (Phoenix dactylifera) is said to have been first cultivated in the plains bordering the Lower Euphrates and the Tigris, from whence the cultivated tree spread to Jericho, Phœnicia, and the Red Sea. Though once common in some parts of Palestine, especially Jericho, "the city of palm-trees" (Deut. xxxiv. 3), the date-palm, as a cultivated tree, is nearly extinct west of the Jordan. The erect habit of the date-palm, its beauty, its employment for architectural adornment, are referred to in the Bible; but it is curious to note that there is not one single undoubted allusion to date-fruit.

PANNAG (Ezek. xxvii. 17). R.V. m. "perhaps a kind of confection." The Heb. word is retained in this, the only passage where it occurs. It was apparently an article of commerce exported from Judæa to Tyre.

PINE-TREE, R.V. m. "plane" (Heb. tidhar), is mentioned in Isa. xli. 19, lx. 13. The tree grew on Lebanon.

POMEGRANATE (Heb. rimmôn); both the tree and fruit are frequently mentioned. The Punica granatum, both wild and cultivated, is found in many parts of Palestine; it was early cultivated in Egypt and is figured on the monuments. Pomegranate-wine (Song viii. 2) is still used in the East.

POPLAR, R.V. m. "storax tree" (Heb. lîneh), occurs in Gen. xxx. 37; Hos. iv. 13; it is some tree growing on hills affording a good shade. The storax-tree (Styrax officinale) has by some writers been thought to be the tree denoted. The storax, however, is a bushy shrub incapable of affording shade. The white poplar (Populus alba), abundant on high ground in Palestine, is probably the tree intended in Hosea; and the P. euphratica, Euphrates poplar, the tree of the story of the peeled rods in Genesis.

PULSE, R.V. m. "herbs" (Heb. zêr'ômim, zêr'ômim), occurs only in Dan. i. 12, 16 as the food on which "the four children" thrived for ten days. The Heb. word means "seeds," and may include besides the grains of leguminous vegetables other edible seeds.

REED. Several Hebrew words denote some kinds of reed; for gômê see BULrush; amôn occurs in Isa. ix. 14 (13), xix. 15, lviii. 5; Job xl. 26 (A.V. xli. 2), in which latter passage the A.V. has "hook," R.V. "rope," m. "rope of rushes." Some tall reed, probably the Arundo donax, is intended. The passage in Job probably refers to a rope of reeds or rushes put through the gills of fishes to carry them: the expression of v. 20, "out of Leviathan's nostrils a smoke goeth forth, as of a seething pot or rushes" (A.V. "cal-dron"), appears to refer to the dank vapour arising from marshy places. Qânêh is a generic name for any kind of reed, the stalk of wheat, &c. For "sweet cane" see CALAMUS, SWEET. The grôth of Isa. xix. 7 (A.V. "paper-reeds," R.V. "meadows") denote the open grassy land on the banks of the Nile. There are several kinds of reeds both in Egypt and Palestine; but the most striking of all is the Arundo donax.

ROSE. R.V. m. "autumn crocus" (Heb. khabaçeleth), occurs only in Song ii. 1, "the rose of Sharon," and in Isa. xxxv. 1, "the desert shall blossom as the rose." According to the old versions and many commentators, "the narcissus" (N. tazetta) or the autumn crocus (Colchicum autumnale) is the plant intended.

RUE (Gr. pégamon) occurs only in Luke xi. 42 as a titheable garden herb; it is the common Ruta graveolens. Four species of wild rue occur in Palestine.

RYE. R.V. "spelt" (Heb. kûsemeth). The Heb. word, rendered "rye," "fitches," "spelt" by the A.V., denotes the Triticum spelta or "spelt," a cereal differing but slightly from common wheat. Rye is a northern plant and probably scarcely ever cultivated in Egypt or Palestine. Exod. ix. 32; Isa. xxviii. 25; Ezek. iv. 9. Spelt was sown on the "headlands" of the fields, and was used, mixed with other cereals, for making bread.

SAFFRON (Heb. karkôm) is mentioned only in Song iv. 14 with other odorous substances; the Hebrew word signifies the Crocus sativus, the bright orange-yellow stigmas of which are collected, dried, pounded, pressed into small cakes, and sold in Eastern bazaars.

SHITTIM-WOOD, SHITTAH-TREE. R.V. "acacia wood" and "tree." (Heb. shittâh.) The shittah-tree of Scripture, the wood of which was extensively used in the construction of the tabernacle, and for other sacred purposes, is without doubt the Acacia seyal, a thorny acacia, and the only tree of any size in the Sinaitic regions, where it is scattered more or less abundantly over the whole district; it flourishes also near Engedi and on the western shores of the Dead Sea. The burning bush (Exod. iii. 2; seneh, Heb.) is an allied species, the A. nilotica.

SOAP (Heb. bôrith, bôr). The Hebrew word denotes alkali or lye obtained from species of Salsola and Salicornia, abundant on salt marshes and on the shores of the Dead Sea, where the Arabs still collect these plants and burn them for potash. The Salicornia fruticosa of the Mediterranean shores is the most important of these plants; the potash mixed with boiled olive oil forms a soap for ordinary use. The Heb. nether, "soap," signifies a mineral alkali or "natron," see Jer. ii. 22, where both the mineral and vegetable soap are mentioned; Mal. iii. 2.

SPICE, SPICES. Three Heb. words are thus rendered in the A.V., beseem or bôsem, nekôth and sammim: the first word refers generally to sweet aromatic substances; nekôth is probably the gum of the Astragalus tragacantha and other allied species of the genus; it appears to have been a product of Palestine (Gen. xxxvii. 25, xliii. 11). The genus Astragalus is abundantly represented in the country from the shores of the Dead Sea to the top of Hermon. Sammim denotes odoriferous substances generally which were used in the preparation of the anointing oil and incense offerings (Exod. and Lev.).

SPIKENARD (Heb. nêrd; Song i. 12, iv. 13, 14; the nardos of the Gr. N. T.) is certainly the root of the Nardostachys jatamansi, a native of Nepal and Bootan, a kind of valerian with an aromatic odour, and an ingredient in ointments, &c. It was and is still exported from India into Persia, where it was called nard (hence Heb. nêrd), all over the East and to the Levant. Spikenard was very costly, hence the indignation of Judas (John xii. 3). As a perfume and a stimulant medicine it was highly esteemed by Orientals. The "pistic nard," Gr. of Mark xiv. 3, has been the subject of discussion among commentators; "liquid" from pino "to drink," or else "unadulterated" from pistos "true," "genuine," have been proposed, both improbable derivations. I think the true etymology is from the Sanskrit pisita or pisi, "fleshy," another name of the Jatamansi, or "spikenard," and that this Indian name has been, with the article itself, imported into Greece and Syria. See my paper in Proc. Soc. Bib. Arch. Vol. x. p. 144.

STACTE. R.V. m. "opobalsamum" (Heb. nâtâph), Ex. xxx. 34, one of the "sweet spices" or ingredients of the holy incense, very probably the gum of the storax tree (Styrax officinale).

SYCAMINE-TREE (Gr. sucamīnos), only in Luke xvii. 6. The sycamine is the mulberry tree; both the black and white mulberry-trees, Morus alba and nigra, are common in Palestine.

SYCOMORE (Heb. shikmáh, Gr. sucamínos and sucomoráia). The Hebrew word is used only in Ps. lxxviii. 47 in reference to the destruction of these trees in Egypt by the hail-stones. The Gr. word sucomoráia occurs in Luke xix. 4. The LXX. always renders the Heb. word by sucamínos, which was a synonym of sucomoráia; the same tree being sometimes designated by these two Gr. names. The tree in question is the fig-mulberry (Ficus sycomorus). David appointed a special overseer of these trees, as of the olive, both being considered very valuable (1 Chron. xxvii. 28). It is now not a common tree in Palestine.

TARES (Gr. zizania). The tares of the parable (Matt. xiii. 25) are the darnel-grass (Lolium temulentum) strictly and exclusively.

TEIL-TREE. R.V. "terebinth" (Heb. eláh), Isa. vi. 13. Elsewhere generally "oak" A.V. The terebith (Pistacia palestina) is the tree meant, in the numerous passages where it is mentioned. It is the "turpentine-tree" of Eccus. xxiv. 16 "that spreadeth forth her branches." Teil-tree is a rare English word for lime or linden-tree. (See p. 313).

THORNS, THISTLES, BRAMBLES, &c. About twenty Heb. names pointing to different kinds of thorny shrubs or prickly plants are thus translated, many of which it is impossible to identify. The Atad of Judg. ix. 14, 15, Ps. lviii. 9, is explained by the LXX. and Vulg. to mean rhamnus, i.e. perhaps the Lycium europæum common in Palestine. Kheleq (Prov. xv. 19; Mic. vii. 4) denotes some thorny shrub suitable for hedges. Khóakh, of frequent occurrence, must signify some thorny weed of quick growth (Job xxxi. 40), probably some kind of thistle, of which there are many species common in the corn plains of Palestine. Dardar is interpreted by the LXX. and Vulg. to mean the tribolos or tribulus, i.e. a species of knapweed ("star-thistle"), the Centauria calcitropa, common in western Asia and southern Europe. Gen. iii. 18; Hos. x. 8. The Gr. tribolos occurs in Matt. vii. 16; Heb. vi. 8. Shâmîr, only in Isaiah in the sense of some thorny plant, is probably some species of Rhamnus or Azyphus common in the Jordan valley.

THYINE-WOOD (Rev. xviii. 12) is the wood of the Callitris quadrivalvis, the citrus wood of the Romans, much prized by the Greeks and Romans for its beauty and in the manufacture of ornamental furniture. THYINE-WOOD derives its name from the Greek name (thúia) of the tree.

TURPENTINE-TREE, Eccus. xxiv. 16. See TEIL-TREE.

VINE (Heb. gephen, sórég). The vine (Vitis vinifera) is indigenous in the luxuriant country between the Black and Caspian Seas. The vines of Palestine are still famous. The Heb. word gephen, or gephen hayyain, is used in a general sense; sórég or sórégah expresses some choice vine, attaining a high state of excellence from cultivation.

VINE OF SODOM (Heb. gephen še lôm) only in Deut. xxxii. 32; where of the wicked it is said, "their vine is of the vine of Sodom": the plant denoted is most probably the Citrullus colocynthis or colocynth (see Gouni, WILD), which resembles a vine in having long tendrils. It grows in great profusion near the Dead Sea.

WHEAT (Heb. khittáh). The well-known cereal cultivated from time immemorial. There are four varieties, chiefly heard of, the Triticum vulgare at present cultivated in Palestine. The many-eared wheat of Pharaoh's dream is still sown in Egypt. Wheat was more extensively cultivated in Palestine in former times than now. The winnowed wheat was kept in underground reservoirs cemented to keep out the damp; these granaries may still be seen in various parts of Palestine.

WILLOWS (Heb. 'arabim) are mentioned five times in the Bible, always associated with rivers or water-courses. The willow (Salix) is represented in Palestine by several species, though it is by no means a conspicuous tree in any part of the country. The S. babylonica overhangs wells and pools in some districts. Another tree, the oleander (Nerium oleander), has been by some supposed to represent the Heb. name; this tree is remarkable for its beauty in many of the wadis of the country; but the weight of authority is decidedly in favour of the willow, which though not a conspicuous tree would be doubtless associated in the minds of the inhabitants with pleasurable feelings, as testifying to the presence of the much-prized water. Qaphyápháh (Ezek. xvii. 5) is another name for willow. The Egyptians used flat baskets made from the twigs of the willow-tree, but there is no mention in the Bible of wicker-work among the Hebrews.

WORMWOOD (Heb. la'anáh) is always used metaphorically of bitter calamity or sorrow, &c.; see Deut. xxix. 18; Jer. ix. 15 (14), xxiii. 15; Lam. iii. 15, 19; Amos v. 7, vi. 12 (A.V. "hemlock"). Various species of wormwood (Artemisia) grow in Palestine.

IX. GLOSSARY OF BIBLE WORDS, WITH EXPLANATIONS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

BY THE REV. PROFESSOR SKEAT, LITT.D.

In the following Glossary the peculiar use of every word (wherever practicable) is illustrated by a quotation from some one of our English authors, chiefly of the time of Elizabeth or James I. In general, the name of the author or of the work (or both) is given in full or sufficiently indicated, with an exact reference to the place where the word occurs. Some of the books quoted are to be found amongst Mr Arber's reprints, the chief of them being the following: Gascoigne's Steel Glas (1576); Gosson's Schoole of Abuse (1579); Latimer's Sermons (1549); Lever's Sermons (1550); and Lyly's Euphues (1579-80). Other books that may be specially mentioned are: Cooper's Thesaurus (a Latin Dictionary, 1565); Cotgrave's F. Dict. (French Dictionary, ed. 1660); Florio's Italian Dictionary (1598); Minshew's English Dictionary (1627). Also: Gower's Conf. Amant. (Confessio Amantis); Langland's *P. (English Dialect Society's Publications); E. E. T. S. (Early English Text Society's Publications); tr. (translation). Some illustrations are from the apocryphal books, such as Ecclus. (Ecclesiasticus); Macc. (Maccabees). Note that P. B. signifies Prayer Book, chiefly used of the Prayer-Book version of the Psalms; and R. V. means Revised Version, as it is often useful to know how the word is there differently rendered.

The usual abbreviations are used, such as s. (substantive), &c.; but v. is used in the special sense of 'verb in the infinitive mood.'

X. INDEX OF PROPER NAMES.

BY THE REV. A. T. CHAPMAN, M.A., FELLOW OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE.

INTRODUCTION.

The numerous passages of Holy Scripture in which reasons for bestowing a particular name on any person are given shew that the Hebrews attached great importance to the meanings of their names. Cf. Gen. 17. 5, 19, 21. 3, 6, 30. From Lu. 1. 59, 2. 21, it appears that names were often given at circumcision. An index of names requires a brief introduction explaining the principles on which Hebrew names are formed.

In many cases, the name is composed of (1) one of the names or titles of God, (2) a verb or adjective, forming together a simple sentence, as, The Lord hath helped. See Azariah. Hence it is important to note:—

How the names and titles of God occur as parts of names.

Two names are chiefly used: (1) El, which occurs separately as El Elyon in Gen. 14. 18, 19 (cf. R.V. marg. and Ps. 78. 35); Gen. 33. 20 (El-Elohe-Israel and cf. marg.). This is found as El, Eli-at the beginning of a word, and as -el, -eel, -iel at the end of it.

(2) *Jah*¹, which occurs separately in Ps. 68. 4, is found as Jo-, Jeho-,² at the beginning of a word, and as *-iah*¹, *-jah*¹, *-ia*¹ and probably shortened to -i in some cases) at the end of it.

Thus the same idea may be expressed in four ways, according as one or the other name of God is placed either at the beginning or end of the compound name, e.g. Elnathan, Nathaniel, Jonathan, Nethaniah all express the same idea, God or the Lord gives (or has given). The name Nathan alone probably implies the same: He (i.e. God) has given¹.

² In Hebrew the consonants form the essential part of the word, and the vowels vary according to certain rules with the position of the word. This accounts for the change from a to e, and for the form Jeho- from Jah-.

That these two names for God were not identical in meaning follows from 2 K. 23. 34, where the change of Eliakim's name to Jehoiakim by the king of Egypt is recorded. In the Index the first of these names is rendered by God, the second by the Lord. The second indicates the Divine Being as one keeping His covenant with Israel, who will prove Himself in all respects that which He has promised to be to them².

Another name of God is Shaddai (see Index). The names compounded with this are Zurishaddai, Amnishaddai and (?) She-deur. The Index shows that these occur only in the early chapters of Numbers.

Many titles of God occur as parts of names: Ab, Abi, father; Ahi, brother; Zur, a rock. The names Abijah and Ahijah shew that father and brother are titles of God, and the combinations of Abi, Ahi with other words, in the same manner as El, are evidence that the prefixes are in every case used in equivalent senses: cf. Abimelech, Ahimelech and Elimelech; Abiezer, Ahiezer and Eliezer; Abinadab and Jehonadab. Am, Ammi, occur also in similar combinations, as Aminadab; and though Ammiel may be interpreted people or kinsfolk of God, yet as a person bearing this name 1 Ch. 3. 5 has also the name Eliam 2 S. 11. 3 the more probable interpretation is that which gives the same meaning to both forms, God is a kinsman. A similar ambiguity in meaning attaches to Abidan; the meaning father-judge given in the Index renders the word, but the preceding considerations tend to shew that the Father (i.e. God) is judge is a more probable meaning than father of the judge.

The frequent use of 'nathan' to give, 'hanan' to graciously bestow, and other words of similar import, in composition with the names of God, throws light on the view taken by the Israelite as to God's providential care of the household, and may be considered in connexion with Job 1. 21; Gen. 30. 2, 33. 5; Ps. 127. 3. The use (very frequent) of Azar to help, and Pedah to redeem, may point to a belief in God's fostering care of the nation as well as of the individual.

The use of Baal as part of a word deserves notice. The names Bealiah, and Beeliada as equivalent to Eliada, shew that at one time Baal was used in a good sense (note Elijah's challenge, 1 K. 18. 21; and the passage in Hos. 2. 8-17); while Ishbosheth as a substitute for Eshbaal indicates a desire to avoid further use of the word Baal, when it had become associated with idolatrous worship.

It would be interesting to inquire when and where names of a particular form were most used. Nearly 200 names occur compounded with JAH in one of the forms given above in (2), and these are found frequently from the time of Isaiah onwards.

The preceding are but a few of the ideas and problems which a study of the meanings of names may suggest. As regards the names themselves an attempt has been made to give a complete list of passages where they occur, and though in the case of names occurring very often, as Abraham, David, Nebuchadnezzar, not all the references are given, it is hoped that no passage conveying special information has been omitted.

Certain lists of names, and genealogies, occur in more than one place. The lists of Genesis 4. 17 ff., 5, 10, 25, 36, 46. 8-27, Num. 26, Jos. 15-21 should be compared with one another and with the lists in 1 Ch. 1-3. (Note also the references under Tribes in Index of Subjects.) A list of David's mighty men is found both in 2 S. 23 and 1 Ch. 11. A list of those who returned from captivity is in Ezra 2 and Neh. 7. A comparison of the names as recorded in different lists and in the parallel accounts contained in the books of Kings and Chronicles shews that their form varies considerably in some cases. As references are not always given to both of such duplicate lists and parallel accounts in the Index, the reader should note the passages referred to in this paragraph, and compare them on all occasions.

For the spelling of proper names, the R.V. should always be consulted, as the Hebrew names are there rendered more uniformly into English. Important differences between R.V. and A.V. are noted in the Index³, but for want of space others have been omitted. A variation such as -a or -ah in the ending of words is shewn by the addition of (h) at the end; S(h)almi indicates that the word is spelt with and without h³; and (s) at the end of a word as in Amorite(s) shews that passages containing the words Amorite and Amorites are mixed together. Other cases in which a bracket is similarly used will be easily understood.

NOTE. To save space, many abbreviations of words are used in this Index, e.g. n. for name, agt. against, prob. probably, f., ff. following, s. son, f. father, k. king, Gk. Greek, &c. A reference to a preceding name will often explain the abbreviation, especially in the meanings of the words. A.V. and R.V. stand for the Authorized and Revised Versions. m., mg. or marg. refers to the marginal readings of either version. q.v. [quod vide] following a word refers the reader to that word. cf., cp., the passage to be compared with that or those preceding. VS., VSS., version or versions of the Holy Scriptures in other languages, for details concerning which see pp. 39-41. LXX., see p. 40.

Where the same name denotes more than one object, (1), (2) are used to distinguish persons or places about which anything is

² This is the most probable explanation of the words "I am that I am," Exod. 3. 14; or, "I will be that I will be," as marg. of R.V.

recorded, but if the name only occurs, as in lists and genealogies, the passages are given without such distinction. A mark () is sometimes used to show that the passages on either side of it refer to different objects; 'others,' '5 persons,' '5 men' are prefixed to lists of references where it may be left to the reader to distinguish between them. Cf. Abdon, Akkub, Arah, Azareel. When a name is written differently in different passages, or two names belong to the same object, the sign = or 'same as' is used to connect the two forms, e.g. cp. Alemeth and Almon. Where the identity of the two forms is doubtful, ? is added.

N.B. The verses immediately preceding and following any reference should be consulted, and where the chapter only is given the whole or at least a considerable part of it should be read carefully. The meanings of names are given in italics, and when a rendering of A.V. or R.V. is given in italics, such rendering indicates the meaning of the name: cf. Abaddon.
